

Spring 2018

Sport Activism: Perspectives of Canadian Female Olympians who Attended the 1968 Olympics

Chelsey H. Leahy

University of Windsor, leahyc@uwindsor.ca

Victoria Paraschak PhD

University of Windsor, parasch@uwindsor.ca

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholar.uwindsor.ca/research-result-summaries>

Consistent with the TCPS 2 (4.7) this is a research summary provided to participants and should not be considered a formal publication of results.

Recommended Citation

Leahy, C. H., & Paraschak, V. (2018). Sport Activism: Perspectives of Canadian Female Olympians who Attended the 1968 Olympics. Retrieved from <https://scholar.uwindsor.ca/research-result-summaries/30>

This Completed Summary is brought to you for free and open access by Scholarship at UWindsor. It has been accepted for inclusion in Research Result Summaries by an authorized administrator of Scholarship at UWindsor. For more information, please contact scholarship@uwindsor.ca.

Summary: Sport Activism: Perspectives of Canadian Female Olympians who Attended the 1968 Olympics

Chelsey H. Leahy & Victoria Paraschak
University of Windsor

This study explored the life history of two Female Canadian Olympians, Abby Hoffman and Marion Lay, who attended the 1968 Mexico City Olympics. Authors examined the strength that both athletes used as athletes and activist from the beginning of their athletic career leading up to the 1974 National Conference on Women and Sport.