President David Simmons welcomes you to campus

I want to welcome all old students back to the University and to extend a warm welcome to our new students. In keeping with the tradition of the first week on campus SAC has tried very hard to make Orientation this year one of the best. We are well aware that at this time of the year a lot of you are busily with excitement, but the long line at the bookstore and the registration desk quickly jolts you back to the reality of campus life and another eight months of classes.

This is why we have put together a full week of fun and activities to make you realize that campus life can be fun and that SAC is always around to take care of its members, whether it be in the area of health, welfare or entertainment.

Though I am not one for making big promises, I will dare to tell you that SAC will again assume the responsibility of attending to the students' concerns whatever the issue.

In the past, students have always asked "who runs SAC?" By the end of the first semester, I would expect all students on campus to not only know who we are, but to become more actively involved to the best of their ability.

Though I realize that at this time most of you are more concerned with enjoying the last days of a beautiful summer, I want to let you know that you should feel free to come up to the SAC office on the second floor of the University Centre and let me know in what manner we can best serve you.

I hope that you will find that the entertainment package we have put together for you does suit everybody's taste. There are lots of things to do, so if you want to make this a good year, start off right by becoming involved.

The SAC executive members explain their jobs:

This coming year, SAC has approved Shaban's proposal for club certification which outlines a new procedure that was badly needed. Shaban hopes to restructure the internal operations of SAC so that it may run more efficiently to better serve the students at the University of Windsor.

Shaban looks forward to meeting every student on a personal basis to listen and hopefully implement their ideas in the upcoming year.

Jim Shaban came to the University of Windsor in September 1979 after being involved for two years in student government at W.F. Herman Secondary School.

In September of that same year, Gino Piazza, then President of SAC, appointed Jim as the chairman of the SAC Golden Jubilee Celebration. Through his position as chairman, Shaban was able to learn a lot about the student government at the university level. After completing a successful SAC presidential election, he entered Ancillary Services by E.P. Chant

Aside from the re-elected Vice President Administration Jim Shaban, the only member of last year's SAC executive returning to serve in this year's cabinet.

Again working as Ancillary Services Commissioner, Zago is responsible for administering the Student Drug Plan and representing the Students' Administrative Council.

John Rizopoulos has been chosen by the SAC President to be this year's External Affairs Commissioner.

It will be his job to keep the Student Administrative Council in touch with the other Councils around the province. Also among his duties is the responsibility of keeping the student body informed about the actions of the two major student organizations, the National Union of Students (NUS) and the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS). Among the activities organized through External Affairs and these two bodies are: the social events organized against provincial fee hike and lack of OSAP support.

Rizopoulos, a student of Chemical Engineering has also attended the University of Windsor, Ontario and Louisiana State University. Last year John was the graphic artist for the University of Windsor student newspaper The Lance.

Have a shoe shine and a hot wax, mister?

by Wendy Coomber

Next week, thousands of University of Windsor students will crowd onto the city streets disguised as shoe shiners and armed with only a smile and a shoe shining kit, eager to shine the public’s shoes. You may ask “to what end this madness?”

Starting September 9 they will be setting and waiting at their display booth in the Student Centre, ready to ensure all able-bodied, nimble-fingered students who pass within their reach.

Shinerama is a national program which began 16 years ago on the campuses of two Canadian universities as part of their Orientation programs. Last year the number of universities involved was 41. The aim of the Shinerama has always been to raise funds for the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

This year, to make things more interesting, the University of Windsor has agreed to a competition with Wilfrid Laurier University of Waterloo. The reason for placing Laurier in such esteem as to even consider them worthy opponents is such a noble duel seems to be based on the fact that Laurier, like Windsor, turned up on the very low end of the 41 fund raising universities last year. Hence, the mutual need for stimulation. This challenge may be viewed as a struggle on the part of each of them to keep a little distance between them and the very bottom of the list.

Yet, in all fairness, it must be added that, for Windsor’s eight years of Shinerama, $17,500 is nothing to feel smug about compared to the $7,200 raised by Laurier in only two years.

The aim of every Shinerama across the country is to raise money for the research in Cystic Fibrosis. CF is one of the most common serious chronic disorders of Canadian infants and children. In CF, certain glands do not function properly and secrete a sticky mucus which clogs the bronchial tubes in the lungs and impairs the flow of enzymes from the pancreas into the small intestine which impedes digestion. It can be extremely serious. However with early diagnosis and expert treatment, most affected youngsters can look forward to a longer and healthier life.

From September 9th to 12th, students at the University of Windsor will man the streets of Windsor to shine shoes so citizens can give to CF research. Students, under the coordination of nursing students, Shinerama Directors and Labatt’s of Canada seek support from the business community to help in transportation and refreshments for shiners, arrange for publicity and various on and off campus promotions for the project.

However, the project will only be as successful as the level of participation and enthusiasm each student contributes. Look for flyers throughout the campus for details on how you can help. Expect to see you out next week putting on a shine for CF.

Blacking blitzkreig

Shinerama ’80 Chairperson

In it’s 17th year, the Shinerama/Ver-stissage, the 1-4 day Canadian students’ shoe shine blitz for cystic fibrosis, is continuing to grow in dollars raised, and, more importantly, in increased campus and student involvement.

Cystic Fibrosis (CF) is one of the most common serious chronic disorders of Canadian infants and children. In CF, certain glands do not function properly and secrete a sticky mucus which clogs the bronchial tubes in the lungs and impairs the flow of enzymes from the pancreas into the small intestine which impedes digestion. It can be extremely serious. However with early diagnosis and expert treatment, most affected youngsters can look forward to a longer and healthier life.

A number of service oriented administrative departments have recently relocated their operations on campus.

As of July 23, the Registrar's Office, the Award's Office, and the Cashier's Office will share the first floor of Windsor Hall North in the area previously occupied by the French Department. The proximity of these three services in one central area will facilitate registration and grant application procedures for students. Access to this area is through the entrance off the sidewalk running west to east from the University Centre Quadrangle to Windsor Hall North. Entry through the north door of Windsor Hall North, adjacent to the Tower is now closed off. The French Department is now located on the second floor of Windsor Hall Tower, in the area previously occupied by the Registrar.

In addition, the office of Publications has moved from Room 2101 Math Building to join Information Services in the West Library. The Alumni Office is also moving in stages from the fourth floor of the Tower to the West Library and will be completely settled there by the end of the summer.

Any additions or changes to the telephone numbers of the affected departments may be ascertained by calling the switchboard.

Cassano welcomes freshmen:

"The university's new Vice-President, Academic, Dr. Paul Cassano, will welcome freshmen to the University of Windsor campus Monday.

Cassano, formerly the Dean of Arts at the university, succeeded Dr. John McAuliffe as the Vice President when the latter's "term of office" ended in April.

Last year, University President Dr. Mervyn Franklin welcomed freshmen students to the campus, pledging that the faculty and the administration "were here to do it all for the students" (just like McDonald's). He also introduced several of his Vice-Presidents and various deans to the first year students at the hour long assembly.

With first year enrolment supposedly "up" again this year, Cassano should be speaking to a very large throng. Last year it was "standing room only" for Franklin's speech in Ambassador Auditorium.

Freshmen are to gather at the Ambassador Auditorium, Second Floor, University Centre for this welcoming address, scheduled for noon, Monday, September 8.

Maybe it's time you jumped into something more demanding than a cor pool.

Bibliography One reduces hours of aimless searching

by E.P. Chant

"Now, do I have to go to the documents section or the reference area for that?" Technical journals, trade magazines, supplements, micro-film, card indexes. By gosh, but the library can be one of the first places and occasionally from those who have been at the university for a few years.

For four yearly hours, however, you can solve the maze of the library, with the solution to your problem coming from the library itself via Bibliography One.

Bibliography one is a free, non-credit course for undergraduate students which takes one week to complete. You meet with a library staff member and approximately nine other students for two two-hour sessions on either a Monday and a Thursday or a Tuesday and Thursday.

The first two-hour session is devoted to a workbook consisting of exercises on library use skills such as how to find books and articles on various topics. The second session is a term paper literature search exercise. Completion of both sessions should provide you with a good introduction to the basics of library information retrieval.

If you would like to learn how to use the library efficiently, drop by the library information desk and sign up for Bibliography one. Additional information can be obtained by calling the information desk at Extension 261.

The two-hour slots available this fall are 9:00-11:00 a.m., 2:00-4:00 p.m. and 6:00-8:00 p.m. for the following two-day slots: (all in September) 15 and 17, 16 and 18, 22 and 24, or 23 and 25.

You can't work in the Library unless you know how to use it. Are these Bibliography One graduates?

Editor, The Lance

Apparently, those that can, do, while those that can't, do, teach. I think that I was elected to the position of Editor of The Lance for 1980-81 just that - to "cannot do" all year long.

An editor's job, as far as I am concerned, is two fold: an editor is supposed to write and to teach others to write. At The Lance, the editorial columnist last year, edition writing straight news stories, sports, and a few entertainment reviews) and as a student in Communication Studies, I believe that I have shown I can write - how well will be determined, I suppose, by the strength and fairness of my editorialists this coming year.

It is the other facet of the job, the teaching, that has me worried. I do not want to be an editor who simply scratches out parts of stories with a big red pencil without explaining his editing to the writer involved.
The staff of The Lance is composed of volunteers and much people, devoting their time to the paper and their futures to journalism, deserve to have a helpful, open person at editor, not someone to be a psychological alchemist. The problem I am going to have with all this involves the closeness of the student editorial philosophy. Long accepted and practiced conventions such as "last year's editors did it this way" in the past few years been shot into the air, with students and observers of the press. Everything from the "inverted pyramid" style of writing to the ethical considerations dealing with the confidentiality of a reporter's sources is up for question now. Journalism seems to have become a business with no firm rules. That indefinite situation is going to make my job difficult this year. I shall be making decisions, arguing with writers, E.P. Chant and never being quite sure my decisions were "right".

The coming year, then, is going to be an important learning year for me. I am going to require feedback via "Letters to the Editor" to me tell me if I have gone astray. I am doing and I shall also need in- put. I can only get the latter by going to the office, The Lance office and joining the staff, so that you can do something regarding and/or photograp- pery yourself and tell me face to face if I goofed up with this theory or that.
The door, the "Letters to the Editor" page, the staff list, and my mind will always be open.

Come up and learn how to write right

by Ed McMahon
Managing Editor, The Lance

Every year during Orientation Week, the first edition of The Lance comes out, and some of you out there may even remember where it came from. While I'm not going to go into a big sob story about how long, how manual, the endless tasks, the endless nerds who come up here looking for space for articles, etc. are all described for the back pages of Caspar the Friendly Ghost comic strips, it is the absolute amount of work required by two or three people that is necessary to put this paper "on the streets". I do wish to tell you that we are here. You see, just so happens that every year the first edition of the paper comes out while we have published, to the campus as a whole, and as a training ground for others. CJAM provides good broadcasting training in many areas and is a place to "air" your creative talents. Blaine Speigel, Special Programs director for the second consecutive year, said "last year it was an even better paper and this year it will be an even better paper and..."

The student radio station, CJAM, will be entering into its thirty year of operation as an AM carrier current station. It is licensed by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunication Commission and run solely by the students at all faculties of the University.

The new manager, Grant Gelinas comments on the function of CJAM. "I feel the radio station is a source of entertainment and information to the students as an integral part of student life. Although the station is not as highly publicized as the university newspaper, it is, it's all for free. I mean, people pay to do that..."

The halls are alive with the sound....

by Grant Gelinas

This year CJAM student radio is expanding its area of broadcasting to include the Student Centre, Vanier Hall, Cody, Huron and Electa Halls. In the Halls, speakers will be installed in the general lounge/lobby areas. The PA system will carry student entertainment programs in the Centre and Vanier Hall. As in the past you can tune in to 660 AM on your AM dial in Mac and Laurier Halls, not 640 as indicated by the printing error on our buttons.

The station is on the air from 6:00 a.m. to 12:00 midnight Monday through Friday, contrary to the university newspaper's claim of seven days a week. The station does broadcast throughout the weekends during basketball season.

Come on up and see me sometime.

The student paper, The Lance, is located on the second floor of the University Centre building, just follow the sound of the drilling blue eyes (that's me), and say "Hi! I want to join The Lance staff."

Seriously though, since most of our staff is made up of volun- teers, we need anyone, ex- perienced or not, who can write (you don't have to be able to type!) and is interested in university newspapers.

It can really be an exciting and worthwhile endeavour. In my three years with The Lance, I have learned a great deal about student politics, student papers, the media, advertising, and photography. And the best part of it is, it's all free. I mean, people pay to do that.

Engineers are people of many facets

by W.H. Keller, President
Unwin EngSoc is the acronym for the University of Windsor Engineering Society. All undergraduate Engineers, now over 800 students, are members. The thing I would really like you to get from this article is a feeling for both the style and spirit of engineering at Unwin.

What is the typical engineering student like? This rhetorical question can be answered by listing some types, because none are typical. The boozing drinking club who parties his brains out and fails, and the arrogant intellectual — a bozer who wears a calculator on his belt; the narrow minded egoist who thinks technology is a panacea therefore making engineers invaluable; the discontented plodder who is just finishing because he is almost done or has gone too far to stop; the engineer who works hard when he has to and plays hard when he can. Taken together this apparently disjointed bunch are engineers. In general they are no different than any other bunch on campus.

Unwin EngSoc tries to help its members get the most out of university life because you pay more for just the privilege of attending classes. Through the elected executive and volunteers, extracurricular activities such as intramurals, banquets, conferences, and ski trips are organized. In addition Unwin EngSoc supports and provides headquarters for the controversial engineering newspaper The Essex and the EIEIO marching wedding and funeral band. In these ways we try to emphasize that education is not just academic, it's personal development.

Unwin EngSoc is not just fun and games however. Part of the administrative and business details of the society include fund raising parties, sponsoring our fourth child Philip who is in the Kays region of the Upper Volta in Africa helping other societies like Nursing at Shin-crama, putting on gala events like the fall Dinner Dance and the Spring Semi, and representing and supporting students on faculty council and SAC.

In short the Engineering Society strives to promote general interest and spirit in the university and at the same time cultivate the spirit of mutual assistance and high standards of the engineering profession.

Drop in and see us sometime at Room 150A Essex Hall. P.S. Frosh are expected to attend the Corn Roast, the Dean's Wine and Cheese Party, the Second Annual Mini-City, pic, Big Brother Night, and other Orientation events.

Canadian Society for Chemical Engineering Students

by Joe DiFranco
As the name implies, our society is geared towards the needs of the chemical engineering students at the University of Windsor.

This year there will be a tour of Hiram Walker and Sons Limited on September 12. A possible trip to tour the petro-chemical industries in Sarnia is still being organized.

There will be four society meetings as the year progresses to discuss upcoming events. Pizza and refreshments will be supplied. Our society will be co-hosting a "Ladies" Night party at Ambassador Auditorium on September 26. Chemical Engineering cookies will be available sometime during the year.

The membership fee will be eight dollars per member for the year. The fee will be collected in early September before the first meeting. The fee includes admission to all society meetings and field trips.

I am looking forward to a very good year.

In the past, Orientation has been a success. This year, we're going to make it even better. Last year, we arranged and planned over 100 events, all of which were enjoyed by everyone. With the help of our new director, John Smith, we're looking to make this year's Orientation even more successful.

There are many reasons why Orientation is important. It helps introduce new students to the university, gives them a chance to meet new people, and gives them a chance to learn about the different clubs and organizations on campus. With the help of our new director, we're looking to make sure that Orientation is a success this year.

Writing Development Centre develops writing skills

The Office of Student Affairs is pleased to announce the re-opening of the Writing Development Centre. For those unfamiliar with the Writing Development Centre, it provides a tutorial service to those students who require assistance in developing the fundamental writing skills necessary for the completion of university assignments.

This year the Writing Development Centre will operate on a referral basis. Faculty members have already been advised by letter and invited to refer any students experiencing difficulty in written assignments to Room 12, Vanier Hall. Students taking part in this program receive two or three hours of individual instruction per week, arranged around existing schedules in order to avoid conflict.

The Writing Development Centre is not an essay writing or editing service. It is designed to provide students with the opportunity to develop independent writing skills. Each student's work is kept on file in order to assess progress. Every effort is made to avoid adding to the student's workload beyond the specified hours of tutorial instruction.

At present, limited time and space allow the Writing Development Centre to accept referrals on a first come first served basis only. After having reached a capacity of 60 students, a waiting list will be established.

Students are invited to refer themselves to the Centre for assistance at any time as long as openings remain available. At present, the Writing Development Centre is able to accommodate only native English speaking students, foreign students requiring assistance should be directed to the specially designed course English 090.

For more information on the Writing Development Centre, contact either Mrs. Patricia Pare (tutor) at 253-3321 or Ken Long, Dean of Students, ext. 334.

Delta Chi: the fraternity philosophy and its parties

Delta Chi by James A. Boyer, President

The Windsor campus has been the only remaining chapter of the Delta Chi Fraternity in Canada and is proud of its long standing fraternity on the University of Windsor campus. We have been in Windsor since 1969 and became a chapter in 1971. The fraternity is only one of numerous chapters across the United States, with a chapter house as close as Ann Arbor, Michigan.

In the past few years, membership has been gradually increasing as fraternities are experiencing an upswing in popularity. The relaxed, home-like atmosphere of our three storey house has provided an excellent alternative to dormitory living for many of our members. The brothers who live elsewhere have also benefited from this type of atmosphere when they aren't in class.

While education is our most important goal, we have not neglected our social function. Dr. Franklin, the university President, has acknowledged our efforts to make the university a better place to attend.

Our fall "rush" takes place in September for our new incoming members, with this year already looking like one of our best turn-outs for new members. If you want to enjoy your years at university to the fullest, come over to Delta Chi and see what we have to offer you. We are truly a unique experience.

Community Legal Aid is for everybody

by Gar Nutson

The legal aid office, located in the law school, is making an all-out effort to expand its services to both the community and the campus. Known in previous years as the Student Legal Aid Society, the organization has changed its name to Community Legal Aid. The reason for the change was the apparent confusion by the public, in that most people felt that Student Legal Aid meant legal aid for students and not legal aid by students. This change fits in with the general university policy of trying to integrate the campus with the community.

Community Legal Aid, in recognition of its increased responsibility to the students due to increased student funding, is initiating a number of projects aimed specifically at students. The most prominent one is a campus seminar on Immigration Law scheduled for Monday October 6. This seminar will provide information on student visas, work permits, permanent residency, refugees and other immigration topics.

Other services CLA is trying to upgrade include the OSAP and student grade appeals. It appears that Windsor may have an especially large number of OSAP appeals because many students were unemployed and unable to provide the proper student contribution to their loan and grant application. The federal government formulates that each student should save about eight hundred dollars over the summer. If you were unable to save this much you may have grounds for an appeal for more money.

Community Legal Aid has also begun an investigation into housing discrimination in the campus area. If you feel you have been refused accommodation because of race or colour you should contact the office. We may be able to help you find accommodation and/or lodge a complaint with the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

CLA is also trying to increase its other services. Consumer complaints large or small are welcome at the office. If less than a thousand dollars you may want to take the case to Small Claims Court. A law student can provide great assistance in preparing and presenting your case.

The traditional services of providing representation for Landlord and Tenant matters, summary criminal matters, and administrative problems are still available. If you have any sort of a legal problem it is best to contact the CLA office first. If we cannot help you we know who can.

For more information, call 253-7150 or 253-4232 ext. 160 or come to our office G105 in the Faculty of Law.

ISO strives to unite people through knowledge

Over the years, this university has developed a strong tradition for educating students from all over the world. Currently over fifty different countries are represented on campus and this cultural mix has made an incalculable contribution to the quality, variety, and interest of life at the University of Windsor. This is epitomized by the pursuit of knowledge. With his fellows in any large community, the student has the responsibility to produce a Workers' Handbook on Health and Safety. Your move, Mr. Spock. We would like to emphasize that Canadian students are welcome to join us in our Orientation program. Drop in the International Centre any time during the day - 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

If the members of the ISO make some contribution, no matter how limited, to the achievement of this, the ISO will not fail altogether in its purpose. It is with great pride that we say "welcome". Do well academically, share with us culturally, and upon graduation take home with you a treasure of knowledge and experience that the world badly needs.

Dancers in last year’s ISO sponsored African Festival.

OPIRG is still active in the community

OPIRG is the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, which has been working on the campus since September 1978. OPIRG lost its student funding in March 1980, so it is now moving off campus. Director Jim Brophy explained the move: "The referendum made it obvious that at the University of Windsor there is not a solid enough base for a public interest research group."

This summer, OPIRG sponsored government grant projects on occupational health and safety and on the environmental concerns of industrial waste disposal in Blenheim. Seventeen students worked hard all summer to produce a Workers' Handbook on Health and Safety, various pamphlets, a slide-tape show on health and safety risks faced by Windsor workers. All of these will be used to publicize the issues to students, community organizations, and workers. As well, a large resource centre has been compiled for use by the general public.

Although OPIRG lost the referendum, it is clear that there are many students who do support public interest research. For this reason, we will maintain a presence on campus as a student club to serve those students and professors who have worked with us and are interested in OPIRG's issues. If you would like to get involved or if you would like more information please call Cecilia Deck at 254-4192. OPIRG is always open to new ideas and new initiatives to keep public interest research alive and well at the University of Windsor.

Chen's been playing 20 feet underwater, using a metal board and magnetic pieces. However, the University of Windsor Chess Club is quite content to hold their meetings in the somewhat drier climate of the University Centre. Of course, they firmly believe that the club's existence - but were afraid to ask. In the last few years the club has been meeting steadily, about once a week in the Centre. Of course, the usual club fare consists of an occasional serious match. About twice a year tournaments are held, under the FIDE rules, with prizes going to the top three players. As well, a team may be organized by those interested in competing in regional or national tournaments. Two years ago our team attended the North American College tournament held in Chicago, and placed in the respectable top 40.

However, the Club is not geared towards major competitions. It is a place where one can play chess; where beginners can find players to help them improve their game, and thus derive more enjoyment from it. Whether it's a serious tournament, a friendly game (with friends quickly pointing out your "obvious" errors), or a graphic blow-by-blow description of your big game versus THE player in the club, it is, above all, a place to play chess.

ISO welcomes all nationalities

The members of the Chinese Students' Association (CSA) are mostly from Hong Kong, a British Colony on the south coast of China. Some members are from Singapore or Malaysia. Therefore, membership is overlapping between the CSA and the MISA.

The aim of the CSA is to provide service and social activities to its members. It also has the responsibility to promote friendship and understanding among its members and other students of different heritage. In order to achieve these objectives, the CSA is organizing services like counselling to new students, a housing service, used books exchange, a Chinese library. Activities will include Chinese movie nights, parties, a chess tournament, soccer, badminton, and basketball teams, etc. The CSA is also preparing a cultural week, to be opened in January, 1981, to introduce Chinese culture to other university students and citizens of Windsor. The CSA also wishes to interact with other student clubs. We hope to organize joint activities with them in the future.

Anyone of any nationality who is interested in joining the CSA may come to the CSA office/library in theLeddy library, second floor.

University Christian Fellowship invites discussion

by John Huschilt, President 254-7272

The IVCF chapter is an official university club, recognized and supported by the Students' Administrative Council (SAC). We are a society of ethnic students, challenge our faith, and mean of growing as a Christian. Our speakers study and pray. Another is to recognize and supported by the University of Windsor Christian Fellowship but we call ourselves IVCF for short. Our membership is open to all U of W students. Dr. Bill McConkey (SAC). Technically we’re the new student member (provincial) has been appointed to work with us and for us at the chapter (at Western) but otherwise the students run the show.

Join us from 4:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. every Thursday for dinner, singing, and a thought-provoking speaker at 6:00 p.m. in the former chapel (first floor) of Scotia Hall, corner of University and Patricia.

This fall the theme of our meetings is “Christianity on Trial.” The idea is to let you, the students, challenge our faith, thus allowing you to judge the merits of Christianity for yourself. To this end, our slate of topics include: a definition of Christianity, the history and authenticity of the Bible, the Trinity, the resurrection of Christ, the meaning of man, prayer, and means of growing as a Christian. Our speakers study and pray from many denominations and walks of life.

We also offer a number of weekly Bible studies and a Wednesday morning prayer breakfast.

We would like to invite you to enjoy free entertainment with guitarist Jim Thomson in Assumption Lounge (University Centre) on Thursday September 11 (Club Day) from noon until 2:00 p.m. (refreshments and goodies are available, to a Square Dance at Knox Presbyterian Church (corner of Wyandotte and Asia) on Friday September 12 at 7:30 p.m. - cost is $1.00. John Neo President, The Baha’i Club

The purpose of this club is to acquaint those interested with the tenets of the Baha’i Faith by presenting such things as lectures, discussions, informal gatherings, social activities and panel meetings. The Baha’i Faith is the newest of the world religions. But only recently have we begun to realize that it is in fact a major religion—one worthy of study and reflection. Here are some of the ideals of the Baha’i Faith.

The Baha’i Faith upholds the oneness of God, recognizes the oneness of His prophets, and enunciates the principle of equal rights and privileges for men and women. It insists on compulsory education, eliminates the extremes of poverty and wealth, and any work performed in the spirit of service to the level of worship, and the union of devotion and meditation. The Baha’i Faith holds that in the spirit of love and fellowship among men. "This handful of dust, the earth is one home. Let it be in unity."

The club helps the beginner learn how to take a better photo and gives him a better knowledge of the workings of his or her camera.

For the more serious person there are field trips, slide presentations, a photo contest and much more.

For the past two years we have had a couple of very successful photo contests. As judges, we have had some of the major photographers in Windsor.

Although the club is for the students, each year we have had some University of Windsor staff members join the club and give their learned experiences. Ivan Kernicky of Communications Studies is one such professor.

For those who would like to save some money, the club has a complete darkroom on campus. Anyone who does not know anything about darkroom work can learn from the basics. Even the person who knows how to develop their own negatives and/or prints in both colour and black-and-white can learn more about the darkroom.

New paint replaces pinball machines in Centre

by Wendy Coosher

Returning students entering the University Centre cafeteria for the first time this year may instantaneously notice the absence of pinball machines and the presence of fresh paint. Further investigations will lead to the discovery of a speaker's pit under construction, new chairs, different coloured walls, and the new art gallery behind the east wall. Last year the University Board of Governors decided to spend $200,000 to spruce up the University Centre. However, since the initial budget was presented in February, 1979, something has changed.

According to C.W. Morgan, Assistant Vice President of Administration-Operations and Business Affairs of the Centre Committee, "prices upstairs (1st floor, Centre) are going up and down like a yo-yo."

Among the physical changes is the re-location of the recreation area, the move of ping pong tables and pinball machines—to the old Toronto Dominion Bank in the Centre basement. The reason for the switch is due to the successful negotiations by the University for the termination of the two year lease which the bank still held on that room. Morgan noted by changing the location of this function instead of rebuilding the old area the Committee would save some money.

The lounges and rooms on the main floor, coloured differently, of the Centre, will receive the most attention. Renovations here take up the largest portion of the budget and include repairs to floors and walls, removing some of partitions dividing the room, adding counters, purchasing new furniture, and building a small "forum" or speakers pit where students can listen to guest speakers.

About the new art gallery, however, there seems to be some confusion. Last year the university's art department lost its display gallery in the Leddy Library. The department claimed a gallery to show the students' work was necessary for any future employment they could attain so they were granted a new gallery in the Centre.

The department was offered a display space in the cafeteria once last year but refused saying that there could be no security and the executive light would damage water colour painting. This year, they took what was offered. According to Professors Antonio Doctor and Daniel Dingler of the Visual Arts Department to be a temporary space in the University Centre.

Professor Doctor, Director of the Arts Department, noted that the location was good, as it is centrally located and very visible, but the area is half the size they need. He said they would probably be occasionally using Assumption Lounge again this year for their large exhibits.

Dingler said they would not be satisfied until they had the same amount of space that they had in the library. The space in the Centre falls 16 feet short.

Generous government computer attacks Ontario students by E.P. Chast, Doris Henschel, and Julian Lee, of The Lance, and Sam Rainboth, of the University of Western Ontario Gazette, a CUP paper.

EDITOR’S NOTE: In the scholarly year 1978-79, the Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) gave 1,740 students in the province too much money in the form of their student grants—some as much as $1,000 more. The provincial government wants the money back, all $1,053,000 of it.

The affected students received letters dated June 1, 1980 which stated the error in the grants awarded was due to a computer programming error involving parental assets and asking the students to repay their grants within 30 days of receiving the letters. Due to no computer mistake in the same year, some students did not receive their grants or loans until after the school year ended in the spring of 1979. The computer programming company involved was Kenneth and Company, Company.

Mrs. Jan Grisada, Manager of Customer Service for the Students Awards Branch of the Ministry of Education, said it took two years to find the error because it had taken a full year to compute the 1979-80 grants胡were not plagued with similar problems.

On June 19, David Cooke, Windsor-Riverside MPP for the New Democratic Party’s Education critic wrote Education Minister Dr. Bette Stephenson about the situation. He asked her in that letter and a paten’t to be forgiven if Stevenson and Kellogg could not be made responsible for the foot-up.

Which brings us to the present . . . .

Where an MPP is frustrated, 1,740 students are decidedly upset, the legal community supports the government reluctantly, a computer programmer is under the hook, and the ministry continues to seek repayment.

In a phone interview in mid-July, Cooke dejectedly said not much more could be done to help the students. He said he had just received a reply to his letters and that the letter was short.

In its story in late August, The Star reported that the affected students have sent appeals to the ministry, but Mrs. Renaud said that she could not release the names.

The repayment schedule has, however, been altered according to Cooke. The full amount need not be repaid in 30 days as originally requested, but the affected students must contact OSAP officials within that period and arrange a monthly payment rate.

Cooke explained, "It becomes me it has taken too long to find this error. Every cent went to school." said Miss Fox. "I'd just like a little more information on it. If we make a mistake we've supposed to correct it, but if they make a mistake we're also supposed to correct it. It doesn't make much sense."

The Windsor situation

At the University of Windsor, Awards Officer Mrs. Marie Renaud said 12 students are affected by the grant over-payments.

She explained that according to the regulations in the OSAP application form, the applicant is responsible for any over-payment for any reason. The student can usually appeal successfully only if they can prove that there is no mistake in the payment received, said Mrs. Renaud.

Mrs. Renaud added that she had received a letter from her personal belief that the computer company should be used because it was their program which caused the incorrect parental asset calculation.

The highest amount of money involved in affected grants at this university is $2,300, and the lowest is $580. Forty of the twelve students have sent appeals to the ministry, but Mrs. Renaud said that it would have been much more in that it could appeal to them. Mrs. Renaud said that she also heard that there were only two letters from Dr. Stephenson which caused the inaccuracy.

This week, Mrs. Renaud told The Lance she had not heard anything more from the students making appeals. She suspects they may have decided to forget their appeals, now that the government has allowed them more time to repay them.

Dr. Bette Stephenson: "The computer programmer cannot be held financially liable." Then, the collection agency would have to sue in order to get payment, and chances are that they'd wait a few months before doing so. That gives you a chance to go to legal aid for a lawyer’s certificate.

"Once you have a legal aid certificate, “Mrs. Renaud continued, "a payment schedule without interest."

But, Anderson added, the students generally have to pay, even though it was the Ministry's mistake.

It appears that the generalization is going to hold true in this instance as well.

The legal view

At the University of Windsor’s Student Legal Aid Society office, Director Gar Nutson and Finance Director Carmella Anderson both agreed that the situation was "grossly unfair to students". In an interview in mid-July, Nutson added that the government's action is "obviously not morally ethical."

If he was one of the students involved in the situation, Nutson said he would "write to his MP, to Bette Stephenson, Bill Davis, and every newspaper."

"I'd also go to the local loans office and of course contact a lawyer with a copy of the loan agreement and any correspondence," he added. "A collection agency would have to sue in order to get payment, and chances are that they'd wait for a few months before doing so. That gives you a chance to go to legal aid for a lawyer's certificate."

"Once you have a legal aid certificate, "Nutson continued, "a payment schedule without interest."

"You’re in a ludicrous situation where the government is paying a lawyer in order to fight itself."

Anderson said, if she was one of the students, she would write a letter saying she could not pay it all back at once. "If worst came to worst, I would demand a letter from them saying that I could pay on a very low payment schedule without interest. There should really be some sort of political action to ensure that so many grievances don’t occur," she said.

"Two or three similar OSAP problems occurred last year," said Anderson. "When we negotiate, the cases are often taken out of the collection agency and given to the ministry, where students are offered a payment schedule without interest."

"Obviously not morally ethical."
Excuse OSAP overpayments

Education ministry should accept blame for its mistakes

Every once in a while, an issue that's been in the news for quite a while begins to raise its head again. Such an issue is the OSAP recall situation, described in all detail in the last issue of this paper.

Although it's not the first example of the provincial Ministry of Education's non-caring attitude towards students, it certainly is the best example. In 1978-79, the government, through a computer programming error, handed out a million dollars too many to approximately 1,700 students in the form of their OSAP loans and grants. The students in question did not fill out their forms incorrectly and are not conspicious of defrauding the government by pouring sugar into the OSAP pot.

Nevertheless, these totally innocent students received letters in June asking them to give back all the money they had been overpaid, within 30 days of receiving a letter, before the Dr. Bette "Spike" Stephenson Collection Agency dropped by to pick up the cash.

Some of this scam flooded to the surface with the help of NDP Education critic Dave Cooke, Stephenson's minister. Cooke stated that students who accepted the mistaken loans were not conspicious of defrauding the government, but the students themselves were not.

That's not much of a difference in operation when the question is what's important and what's not.

"You don't accept the money at all. As has been noted, the affected students did not con- nivce to get this money from the government. When the mistakes happened, students went to the computer programming error and, in grace- less panic, demanded the money back within 30 days. Might be well to have been wise to go after the computer programming company that caused the overpayment in the first place."

Impossible, said the ministry. After Cooke and the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) suggested such action, Dr. Frank Berle, OFS, noted that companies contracted and discovered that no liability clause for faulty programming was included in the contract with Kellogg and Stevenson, the OSAP computer company that caused the overpayment in the first place.

The whole mess would be a comedy of errors, except for the fact that it isn't funny. The government either designed the OSAP application and granting system incorrectly or hired an incompetent computer company to program its plan. Then, the only place where blame and financial responsibility should be laid is at the doorstep of Queen's Park.

The students negotiated their loan in good faith and the government is now renegeing on signed-and-sealed contracts. Banks would have a difficult time doing the same thing with their customers, but apparently this arrogant ministry does not have the ethics of the banking industry.

One of the students affected by the recall put it well: "The side of the issue into a frustrated nutshell, called a writer: "If we make a mistake we're supposed to correct it, but if they make a mistake we're also supposed to correct it."

Melinda Fox of Campbellford, Ontario, hit the nail right on the head with that one, but it is likely that the students are the only ones who will get screwed by the government.

"And most importantly, it will fail because of you.

Orientation '80: This has been no party (so far)

John Bernat is not a happy man. And he has every right to be upset, if not downright pissed off.

For the past three years, this campus has run with orientees. Usually these students, in June asking them to give back all the money they had been overpaid, within 30 days of receiving a letter, before the Dr. Bette "Spike" Stephenson Collection Agency dropped by to pick up the cash.

The FORTNIGHTER

By John Mill

There is a good chance that you are a timid, hard working student, (hard working) but without long range planning your efforts could be in vain.

Let's look at what could happen. You breeze along in your course, and October. Suddenly it's 3 weeks late you expect to be ready for that mid term in two weeks. Five midterms in two weeks. Do you think you're going to make it? We don't know the weight of each midterm. It is worth 15 per cent or 30 per cent of your final grade, so the number of midterms, which one is due to show, and which ones to stay away from. Until exams are coming, hence what material to study. In short: even some of the administration must be school themselves, so they have had enough foresight to make regulations and recommendations.

With this information you can plan your schedule and be ready for the tests, essays, etc., and the "bank for determining the final grade" must be amended by the instructor by the end of the second week of classes.

If you don't know these facts, ask! Not only is it vital for your grade, but it is also a legitimate defense against any university regulations that the instructor must give you this information. If the instructor doesn't, go to your Dean.

official things you should know

The following is a reprint from the regulations listed on page 14 of your student handbook. These are your rights. Know them and use them.

It is expected that all courses will have some type of non-optimal, meaningful, final testing procedure (written test, oral interview, take-home test, etc.) during the examination period.

These hour evaluation periods will be scheduled in the formal final examination periods in each semester for the following:

1. Each course which terminates in that semester. All final testing procedures (written test, oral interview, take-home test, essay, etc.) will take place (or fall due, as the case may be) during the three hour exam period so scheduled. The actual duration of testing procedures during the scheduled period may last less than three hours, at the discretion of the individual professor.

If any oral or special type of examinations can not be arranged within three hour period, the instructor must make a special arrangements for the sitting of his examination. The Registrar for the Deans of the Faculty involved, and special arrangements will be made.

2. Each instructor must inform his students, by the end of the second week of course, concerning the following:

(a) The approximate dates for tests, essays, etc.

(b) Alterations in the announced procedures may be made by the instructor with the consent of the majority of registered students.

You might be wondering what a "Fortnighter" is. Actually, this is what we made up as a way of turning the crass Greek vocabulary into a language for good reason: we were desperate for a name for this type of publication.

Seriously, the two writers working in this space, John Mill and Chris Weekes, will be alternating the role, and will hold the space one week and the other the next. Thus, each gentleman will have two weeks to research and investigate his stories instead of the usual one date.

(by the way, a fortnight is a period of two weeks, for all of you non-learners of archaic language and that explains that.)

Obituary: Arthur Sneath

The student media and the campus lose a friend

by Peter Nash

Arthur Sneath died on Labour Day weekend of cancer. He was 68. As is always the case when an icon passes away, he will be missed.

Most people at the University of Windsor probably did not know Arthur, but anyone who dealt with the university media merely had the pleasure of his company at one time or another.

An old English gentleman, Arthur was always ready to be a helping hand as an advisor, a friend, and someone genuinely interested in the student. His official position at the University of Windsor for the past eight years was director of the Central Advertising Bureau, soliciting advertising for The Lance, CJAM radio and several other university mediums.

To me, though, as a former Lance staffer, and to all of the people at The Lance, CJAM, and the Student Administrative Council, Arthur was much more than that. An honest, hard-working man, Arthur set an example for all of us to follow. We grew up during our four years at university.

When I think back on it now, there were many times when, as Editor of The Lance, circumstances would just get me down in the mouth, depressed in a way. Then Arthur would summon me into his office, long rules, pencils and cigarettes, mussing under his breath until he spelled me—then a trans.

Obituary: Arthur Sneath's death leaves Centre empty

Dear Editor:

According to those people who spend, or have spent a considerable amount of time at the University Centre, a certain vacuum, or sense-of-something missing now pervades the building. Certainly it is the absence of Arthur Sneath, who passed away suddenly, two weeks ago today.

While my encounters with Arthur (through his work on The Lance and on S.A.C.) were admittedly few, they are memorable. Mainly, I remember Arthur as being cheery, good-natured and approachable. Others have spoken with share these observations and sentiments.

I'm sure I speak on behalf of many others, then, who, while not associated with Arthur Sneath in one way or another, when I say that he will be greatly missed, but affectionately remembered. My sympathies to his friends and family.

Sincerely,
Rosemary A. Breachuk

Send us your beefs

Last year, this page was filled with complaints, insults, and rejoinders every single week with barely a half inch to spare. Apparently, people on this campus think that their beefs get read if they stick them in this page.

They're right. If you've got a beef or anything to say about anything that goes on in this newspaper or on campus, drop us a note. We ask that they be 250 words maximum and typed, with your name and student number after the "Yours truly".

The editor reserves the right to edit for length and libel and he will also, under well argued circumstances, withhold the use of your name (you must talk to him personally for that).

Send your letters to or drop them off at: The Lance, Second Floor, University Centre, University of Windsor, or toss them in the large letter boxes at the Centre desk in the same building.

Arthur Sneath's death leaves Centre empty

Dr. Mathur was a professor of chemical engineering here at the University of Windsor until 1979, and had recently returned to Canada after a year's sabatical at the Indian Insitute of Technology, New Delhi.

Here, he had been researching alternative energy sources and pollution control.

Dr. Mathur was a member of the university staff for 16 years and in 1969 was elected as one of the top ten professors. He was a member of the Senate and served on many university committees.

The Lance recently spoke to Dr. Chandru, at the University of Windsor who was a close friend of the deceased. Said Dr. Chandru, "We were like brothers. .. There are wise men, and there are men who read books. Dr. Mathur was both... He never lost his temper, he was level-headed, all of his sentiments were greased off his hands. He was a great humanist, and often voiced his concern for Canada and its people."

Not only was Dr. Mathur a scientist, he was also an articulate and prolific author of short stories and plays. According to Dr. Chandru, he will be a difficult task to ever find a friend or even a man who matches Dr. Mathur's wisdom.

Dr. Mathur is survived by his wife Anju and two sons.

"Those who loved life, lived it best."

Provincial code promotes equal opportunities for all

by T.G. Nutson

The Ontario Human Rights Code provisions are intended to promote equal opportunities for all members of the labour force irrespective of race, religion, sex, nationality. Employers are allowed to define objectively valid qualifications relevant to job performance, but must apply them equally to all applicants.

Section (4) of the code reads:

(4) (1) No person shall, a) refuse to refer or to recruit any person for employment; b) dismiss or refuse to employ or to continue to employ any person; c) refuse to train, promote or transfer an employee; d) subject an employee to probation or apprenticeship or enlarged period of probation or apprenticeship; e) establish or maintain any employment classification or category that by its description or occupation excludes any person from employment or continued employment; f) maintain separate lines of or Jewish organization lists where the maintenance will adversely affect any employee or g) discriminate against any employee with regard to any term or condition of employment.

The act goes on to prohibit discrimination in any employment advertising. The intent is to insure that no ad discourages persons from seeking jobs for which they believed themselves qualified. All newspapers now have integrated "help wanted" columns in place of the former division of male and female.

The Commission has also advised all newspapers that the phrase "Canadian experience" is improper.

An employer is allowed to ask whether an applicant is legally entitled to work in Canada as well as asking for documentary proof. The chart below sets out what an application can or cannot ask. The code provides that any person who feels victimized by discrimination within the terms set by the Code may lodge a complaint with the Commission. The Commission must then investigate and try to resolve the matter. If you feel you may have been discriminated against in employment, you should contact the Community Legal Aid office in the basement of the Law Building—telephone number 253-7150.

The Community Legal Aid column will be happy to answer your legal questions. Although he can't send personalized answers to you, he will respond to questions in this paper.

Drop your questions in the Lancet letterbox at the Centre Desk or bring them to the Lancet office on the second floor, University Centre.

your money's worth...and more
How do you ever expect to sell your books on a cluttered bulletin board? What’s more, how do you expect to find the books you want in such a mess? Well, your Student’s Administrative Council has just the answer.

Beginning immediately S·A·C. will start collecting books at Essex Lounge (First Floor, University Centre) for resale in the first couple of weeks of the fall semester.

Here’s how it works:

1) Take your used books to Essex Lounge.
2) Tell the person receiving your books what price you want to sell them for. (Ridiculously high requests will be refused.)
3) You get a receipt for this amount along with a number for each book.
4) If the book is sold during our sale you receive your price less 15 per cent handling fee.

If it is not sold you must pick up your book(s) by Friday, September 26, 1980 or S·A·C. will dispose of them as we see fit.

THERE’S NEVER BEEN A BETTER WAY TO BUY OR SELL BOOKS.
Bookstore maintains fair prices despite confusing change

The confusion arises over determining the price the bookstore charges the student. Under the 20 percent method, the bookstore merely charges the publisher's list price which is a 20 percent mark-up of the bookstore's cost price. For Harper and Row texts, the bookstore must set its own prices.

Helen Tidridge, University of Windsor's Bookstore Manager, explained in an interview last week how a "fair" price is set. "I don't think you can be unreasonable and put your customers at a disadvantage. They have nowhere else to go." Under the standard 20 percent discount scheme, you don't have to make judgments, Tidridge added. Harper and Row's decision, however, means judgments do have to be made since the publisher no longer provides a ready made list price.

"The decision whether to implement a net pricing policy has been an on-going thing for 10 years. This has not come overnight," Mrs. Tidridge said. "But we're running as usual", meaning the bookstore is simply adding the old 20 percent to the cost price on Harper and Row invoices.

Ideally, students and university bookstore managers would benefit most from an increased discount similar to that applied to titles for general release. This would ease the strain on the University of Windsor Bookstore's budget and subsequently, the student's. But as Mrs. Tidridge points out, a greater discount is unrealistic, "That will never happen. That's Utopia.

In the meantime, Mrs. Tidridge is adopting a wait-and-see attitude until other publishers react. She would not be happy, she said, if other publishers opt for a similar pricing arrangement.

New administrators greet new students

About 350 students attended Monday's welcoming to the university campus at Ambassador Auditorium.

Dean of Students Ken Long addressed the students first, followed by several university administrators. The main emphasis of the gathering was to orient the students to some of the members of the University Administration and the internal operations of the university.

Newly appointed Assistant Vice-President (Student Services) George McMahon explained the sometimes confusing maze of administrators, department heads, deans, and faculty councils to the new students.

Also included in the half hour long program was an address by the Dean of Engineering, Dr. MacInnis, and the Dean of the Faculty of Human Kinetics, Dr. Hermiston.

The main speaker was Dr. Paul V. Cassano, who has just been appointed Academic Vice-President. Dr. Cassano said that he knew how the new students must feel in this administrative jungle. "You aren't alone in all this", he said. "You have an ally-me." Dr. Cassano emphasized that all of the people and resources at the university were there for only one purpose, that being to serve the student. He also emphasized the importance of "intellectual and pragmatic flexibility", which he called "that ability to adapt which is known to be the first principle of survival." Speaking of "mind power" as a "renewable resource", Dr. Cassano said that the experiences students will garner over their years at university will "only increase it, not deplete it.

The program concluded with Dean of Students Ken Long wishing the students a successful

Another Canadian newspaper to bite the dust soon?

One of the worst predictors of our time, a very skinny French folk song fan, and a person who loves getting hit in the face with pies are the new sub-editors of The Lance.

The absolutely awful predictor is Steve Rice, Sports Editor. Last year, "Long-grain" (as he is known to his strikingly few friends) predicted at the beginning of the basketball season the Lancers might have a hard time getting anywhere in that sport. They would probably be drubbed in the playoffs, said Rice confidently.

Stupid swine. The Lancers finished first in their division and won the Western Ontario championship. The only consolation Ricey could get out of the basketball season was seeing the Lancers being beaten severely at the national tournament in Calgary. He was probably the only person on campus who was happy after a Lancer loss.

Sharing Steve the Oddmaker's office is the new Entertainment Editor, Peter Haggert. Haggert has one tape in his car stereo, Dixies and Jips from Medieval French Villages. That little idiosyncrasy isn't substantial to disregard.

The person with the pie-in-the-face fetish is Photography Editor Heidi Pammer. Early last year, Heidi was covering a pie-eating contest when her mind snapped and the Soupy Sales side of her schizophrenic personality took over. She wildly grabbed a large custard pie and smashed it into her face after a Lancer loss. That little idiosyncrasy isn't substantial to disregard.

The Absolutely awful predictor Ricey could get out of that sport. They would probably result in quite an odd slant in the Entertainment section. His appointment to the position was probably a mistake (a faux pas, Haggert), but the bristle he offered to the editors who hired him was too wild.

The five W's

by Wendy Coomber

"The design consists of five highly stylized W's arranged in an arc and representing the institution's historical development through its four founding colleges (Assumption, Iona, Canterbury, and Holy Redeemer) into the present University of Windsor...central to the design is the Canadian maple leaf which supports the five W's and is in turn enclosed by them.

The above is an official explanation of the new university logo which sprang into being over the summer. The office of Development and Communications, together with members and heads of various faculties, selected this design from many that were submitted to the design. It is the Canadian maple leaf which supports the five W's and is in turn enclosed by them.

The final approval came from President Franklin, who observed that the logo is very distinctive, as opposed to the university's coat of arms and those of "other W's universities which are vastly inferior to ours." He later added it may take everyone a while to get used to it.

Responses from a random survey of students at the Lede building (Visual Arts Faculty) confirmed this. Comments ranged from "it's better that a coat of arms", "to "I hate it!"

Also on staff this year are: Pat Smillard in Graphic Arts, John McMahon in Circulation, the talented and moody Mark "the Lion" Deutsch in Editorial Cartooning; and two editorial columnists, Chris Woodrow and John Mill.

Getz, it's going to be an awful year for me.

E.P. Chant, Editor
New Wave Concert
by Cecilia Deck
Vanier Hall East really rocked on Friday night with their local "new wave" bands: the Spy's, the Hardtops, and the Alternative. They played to a solid crowd and a packed dance floor. The repeat performance on Saturday night didn't yield so many, but again those who did go were treated to Windsor's finest talent.

The Spy's, who made their biggest waves in infancy, Face the Eighties concert in January, continue to rule the Windsor scene, with the Hardtops, a slightly newer band, as close runnners-up. The two bands blend rock, reggae, funk, and a musical taste, a fast-paced sound, and an ability to get everyone up to dance.

The Spy's, being more experienced musicians, feature some truly excellent originals such as "I Wanna Be Like You", "Underground", "Machine Shop", and "Pterodactyls". As well as carefully chosen covers of Nancy Sinatra's "Boots", "Better Off Dead", as experienced musicians, feature some truly excellent originals such as "I Wanna Be Like You", "Underground", "Machine Shop", and "Pterodactyls". As well as carefully chosen covers of Nancy Sinatra's "Boots", "Better Off Dead", "Henry the Eighth", "Summer in the City", and "I Want to Hold Your Hand". They also do good, fast originals, my favourite being "Fun Before One", about Ontario's rather early closing time. Every tune the Hardtops play is danceable and dance-worthy.

The third hand, the Alternative, as another story altogether. Striving for a "different" sound, they don't seem to know quite what they want. Within one song, "Are You Ready?", there are so many changes from pseudo-reggae that the band members are often unable to play together. The head spin is that not every "punk rock" band has a guitar virtuoso and a really tight rhythm section. They excel at revving up oldies to break-neck speeds: "Sea Cruise", "Money the Eighties", "Summer in the City", "I Want to Hold Your Hand", to name a few.

Within one song, "Are You Ready?", there are so many changes from pseudo-reggae that the head spin is that not every "punk rock" band has a guitar virtuoso and a really tight rhythm section. They excel at revving up oldies to break-neck speeds: "Sea Cruise", "Money the Eighties", "Summer in the City", "I Want to Hold Your Hand", to name a few.

The Spy's have something that not every "punk rock" band has: a guitar virtuoso and a really tight rhythm section. It is always a delight to introduce the Spy's to any uninitiated music lover as "punk rock".

The Hardtops also have a very tight and together sound. They excel at revving up oldies to break-neck speeds: "Sea Cruise", "Money the Eighties", "Summer in the City", "I Want to Hold Your Hand", to name a few. They also do good, fast originals, my favourite being "Fun Before One", about Ontario's rather early closing time. Every tune the Hardtops play is danceable and dance-worthy.

Back to the grind for Law Students

by Peter Heasovic
Sponsored on early registration, the Faculty of Law kicked off Orientation ’80 last week with a number of events staged in and around the law school. Orientation directors John Brusaa and Adrian Hartog greeted freshmen and returns alike with Orientation Passes priced at $12.00, which allowed students to attend most events without an admission charge.

“The best year for us,” said Hartog, at the close of last week’s festivities. “We sold 25 percent more orientation passes this year as compared with last year. We have seen a considerable reduction in our expected deficit for the entire package.”

John Brusaa was pleased with the turnout of the first year class at all of the events. “With this display of enthusiasm, I am sure that the first year class will be able to carry on the traditions of sport and camaraderie of the departing class,” he said.

The opening day’s festivities included free coffee and donuts, inspired jazz by local flutist Alex Zonjic and company, as well as an evening wine, cheese, and pizza bash was a festal prelude to the evening screening of Inherit the Wind, a Spencer Tracy classic concerning the ‘Scopes’ monkey trial’ of the early 1920s.

Cord softball and flag football was on the agenda for Thursday and Friday afternoon. Professors and students teamed up to compete for prizes coming.

Cars run out of gas

by John Doyle
The Cars were on display last weekend at Pine Knob for a four day stint. The stage they played on, along with their dress was flashy and futuristic. Unfortunately their music never seemed to get any better. People seemed to get out of neutral. To be blunt, they stank.

When I walked in I noticed that the place was only slightly more than half full; upon leaving I understood why. I sat there in disbelief as songs such as “Let the Good Times Roll”, “My Best Friend’s Girlfriend”, “Candy-O” and the majority of the other songs played were transformed through the magic of a lousy sound system into loud noise. There was only one song that was actually enjoyable, “Touch and Go”, from their new album, Panorama. Surely this wasn’t the foremost new wave group in the business. It was like listening to Lucky at Abar’s.

To top off their horrible performance, they had the nerve to play for only an hour and ten minutes. That included the two called-for encores (which I’ll never understand!).

If The Cars’ latest release does well it would really be surprising as there seemed to be only a couple of songs that could be considered worth listening to. It appears that The Cars have come to the end of the road, and after seeing them I can be sure that it is a shame.

"Flying Home" seems to be a variation of "Coming Home" from the Spanish Train album. Still, it is a song hard to dislike and any radio station worth its marketing survey should play it.

"Shadow and Lights" and "Tourist Attraction" are the rockers on side two. The former could be about a down onelstic Avenue but, instead, it is about the seedy side of life in London (Ontario). Anyone who has seen a beautiful hideaway destroyed by the merchants of plastic and neon could identify with "Tourist Attraction".

Stanley Clarke:

ROCKS, PEBBLES AND SAND

By John Liddle

Probably one of the most disappointing releases of 1980 is Stanley Clarke's Rocks, Pebbles and Sand.

Why? For a bassist who had so much going for him, excellent recorded music capped off with brilliant live performances, his latest effort is a veritable cornucopia of musical styles, totally lacking in unity.

Tracks range from heavy metal, romantic soul, funk and what was Clarke's trademark, the hybrid music known as jazz-rock. His forays into other musical styles are disconcerting. "Danger Street" is crudely written and performed. "We Supply" isn't a Stanley Clarke written song—it's a cruel joke on his long time listeners (this reviewer included). Pure funk, at its worst, performed by a guitarist who should be better known.

Even in his jazz-rock compositions, Stanley hasn't really broken any new ground. Compared to what he is capable of, (consider "School Days," "Rock and Roll Jelly", and "Hot Pan"), his better compositions on Rocks Pebbles and Sand, notably the title track, are let-downs.

The causes of these faults are varied. Clarke changed his band, out new keyboardist David Sancious and guitarist Raymond Gomes in favour of unknowns. As well, Stanley lost his association with premier jazz-rock guitarist John McLaughlin and Jeff Beck. Pain.

Yellow Magic Orchestra:

MULTIPLES

By Peter Haaghen

With three albums in the top twenty in its native land, Japan, it is fair to say that Yellow Magic Orchestra (YMO) have been successful. However, don't expect them to find similar success in North America.

YMO considers their third album, Multiples, to be "international". This is probably because most of the cuts are lyric free. The majority of the tunes are akin to the nonstop drone heard in discotheques. It would be safer to consider the album "intergalactic", with cuts such as "Hydrogen", "Multiple", and "Technopolis", sounding as though they belong in Star Wars.

The songs with lyrics are sung in English—I think. Even after repeated listening it is still hard to decipher the words of the monotone vocalist. "Nice Age" is the only song where vocalist Takahashi is able to control the incessant background booming with his vocal. "Nice Age" has a reasonable chance of finding a home on this continent, and only then because it follows traditional lines of American pop.

YMO features three musicians: two keyboardists and a drummer. All three had made names for themselves in the Japanese music industry previous to YMO. Singer/drummer Takahashi was once a member of the classic Japanese Sadistic Mica Band. Remember them? No matter.

Keyboardist Harumi Hosono considers YMO to have been heavily influenced by Brian Enzo. As long as Enzo doesn't get wind of this there shouldn't be any trouble. Hosono considers the music of YMO to be "a concept meant to manage the frontal lobes". There is nothing YMO could do that a dandy clampod couldn't.

The highlight of the album is YMO's rendition of the Lennon/Carley classic "Day Tripper". It is always fun to hear a band hopefully lost trying to revamp Beattie's standard.

Yellow Magic Orchestra are billed as the biggest thing to hit Tokyo since Godzilla. Don't worry Ken—you are still number one in New York.
Five years up, Mallender ponders football future

by Steve Rice

There is a chance that Scott Mallender will be returning to the Lancer football line-up this year. But don't hold your breath.

Mallender, you'll recall, is the quarterback who last year slipped apart opposing secondaries for a league-leading 1,821 yards and grabbed the Hec Crighton Trophy as the most outstanding player in the country.

The honorary Human Kinetics graduate has used up his five years of eligibility in the university ranks, but one of those years was lost because of a brief appearance in a single exhibition game. That is the point which Mallender will contest over the next few weeks in hopes that the Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference (OQIFFC) will re-evaluate his case and allow him to play one more year.

Meanwhile, Mallender will be attending teacher's college in Windsor, along with lending a hand to the Lancer football team, working with the prospective, young quarterbacks in camp.

"I'm not sure of my future in football," said Mallender during a break in practice Tuesday. "Right now I'll have to wait to see if I'm eligible to come back."

"I'm not even sure about teaching. I figure if I get my certificate and a job comes up, at least I'll be qualified."

Mallender might well be playing in the Northern Division of the American Football League, commonly called the CFL, right now if it were not for the league's disregard for the Canadian player, particularly the Canadian quarterback.

After hastily signing with the Toronto Argonauts in December of last year, the Boatsmen unceremoniously dumped him late in March without a tryout and at a time when most CFL teams had their rosters complete.

"They treated him cheaply," said Lancer coach Gino Fracas. "I won't associate with that organization and I don't want our athletes to associate with it."

It was Jamie Bone, also a quarterback and the previous year's Crighton trophy winner with the University of Western Ontario Mustangs, who opened the lid on the whole messy workings of the CFL when he was cut by the Hamilton Tiger Cats. Bone took his case to the courts and was awarded $10,000 and a 30-day tryout with the Ticats.

But that was not enough to satisfy Bone. He wanted to challenge the designated import rule which he felt discriminated against Canadian quarterbacks. That challenge was defeated after going to the Supreme Court of Canada.

In simple terms, the designated import rule allows a team to carry one extra import above the allotted number. That player, once removed from the game, cannot return, unless he is a quarterback. In that case, he can be substituted freely.

For obvious reasons, CFL teams prefer to make their designated import a quarterback.

The Dallas Cowboys of the NFL became interested in Bone and invited him to training camp, but released him feeling that he lacked height for the position. Bone returned home to take a position as assistant coach of the Mustangs, and at a time when doing colour commentary for CFPL radio in London which will be broadcasting the Western Games.

As for Mallender, he was picked up on waivers by the Ottawa Roughriders, who after a brief look decided he did not fit in with their plans.

"I don't think I was given very fair treatment," Mallender said. "The Riders didn't commit the sins with me like the Ticats did with Bone. At least I got a playbook. The Ticats didn't give Bone one.

"But there were other things. Like when your turn comes to run a drill and they start another drill. They did that to Bone, too.

"The (designated import) rule is definitely unfair to Canadian quarterbacks. I think the CFL is a very makeable league. But they gotta want you to make it."

I don't expect miracles: Fracas

by Steve Rice

"It's a learning year," said Lancer football coach Gino Fracas while surveying the troops on the practice field Tuesday. "I don't expect miracles.

About 35 of the 50 odd players in camp are rookies, including the two players who have risen above the heap to challenge for the starting quarterback position.

That is the position vacated by all-star and Hec Crighton trophy winner Scott Mallender (see story this page) who has returned to assist Fracas with the coaching, particularly with the quarterbacks.

Fracas admits that it is a big gap to fill.

"There are going to be slight problems. Collegiate football is tough and a certain period of maturation is necessary."

Rob Dalley, an all-city player at Centennial Secondary School in Windsor last year, and Dino Campennelli, who was with AKO last year, are the two prospective signal-callers. Both are short but make up for it with speed and good arms.

Despite the inexperience at quarterback, Fracas has made no decisions on whether the team will play the ground or aerial game.

"I really can't say what kind of game we'll play. I'll know more when I see the team perform in the first game. "We've got an adequate offence and as adequate defense. I hope we can run. We've got Craig Mallender back, and we've also got a number of good receivers in Jim Stanuki, John Ivan and Scott Essery, who has been the leading rusher in Canada the last two years.

Mallender was a western division all-star, leading the division in receiving with 31 for 494 yards and five touchdowns, and finishing third in rushing with 495 yards on

Research group assists national team

by Steve Rice

From July 19 through July 26, the University of Windsor Sports Institute for Research/Change Agent Research (SIR/CA R), in conjunction with the National Baseball Team, assisted with the second annual selection and training camp for the Canadian National Baseball Team.

This was the second year of a five-year project in which SIR/CA R aims to assist the baseball management in "valid, reliable and objective selection and training of players for the Canadian National Baseball Team" with the long range goal being to develop "a conceptual and statistical model for selecting and training elite international baseball players."

A grant of $2,000 was provided by the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch so that the five-member SIR/CA R team could conduct their various tests and evaluations.

Dr. Dick Moriarty, director of athletics at the University and now on sabbatical leave, was in charge of organization and administration for the research group. Dr. Paul Taylor performed the applied physiological assessments, Dr. Wayne Marino the biomechanical and photographic analysis, Mr. Greg Reid the social psychology test, and Mr. John Zarebski the computer analysis.

"Windsor has traditionally been considered a strong baseball community," said Dr. Marino, explaining the choice of Windsor as the site for the camp. "Ron Steele (of Windsor Little League Baseball) was also very influential in bringing the team here."

"Only 27 or 28 players were brought in this year with six being cut, compared to about 35 who spent two weeks here last year. This year it was more a matter of putting the finishing touches on the team rather than selecting it."

Dr. Marino's role in the research required him to use high-speed cinematography at games and practices to study the athletes.

"The equipment was set up carefully, using reference points, and a qualitative analysis of the performers' movements was made. Within a day we would have the film back and the data points on a graph. Then in meetings with the coaches and players we would offer the data and point out their various strengths and weaknesses."

"Things like power potential and cardiovascular levels were examined, but also baseball-oriented things like swing times, stride and batting stance."

"It was really a complete bio-scientific, socio-cultural study of the athletes."

Windsor students not affected by T.D. Bank loan cutback

by Ed McMahon

While university students around the province seem to be having problems negotiating their Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) loans at Toronto Dominion Banks, students at this university are apparently having no problems. Asked this week by Dean of Students Pay L. Simmons, "What was the procedure for disbursement of OSAP loans at this campus?" Mr. D. Lovegrove, the manager of the Toronto Dominion Bank at the corner of Wyandotte and Rankin (the closest bank to the university campus), replied, "We have not had a formal statement when asked about TD's new student loan policy. "Toronto is a strong supporter of the program since its inception", the statement read, "(but) the banking industry is now trying to have the federal government review the formula for calculating interest on these student loans, (to put them) more in line with cost and interest reality."

The statement went on to say that the University would continue to support the program but that its share of these "fixed interest long term loans within our industry is insufficient."

Lovegrove elaborated, saying that the students were being asked to "a little more selective" in who they negotiate loans with.

Lovegrove said it is not the paperwork aspect of the loans that are the problem for the bank. "Certainly there's a lot of paperwork involved in any government transaction," he said, "but the problem is not the paperwork—it's the fixed rate."

The rate that the federal and provincial governments will pay to any bank negotiating a student loan is fixed every July at the Prime Rate (what banks pay for borrowed money) plus one per cent. This interest is not paid by the student until he graduates. Until that time it is paid by the government.

In July of 1978, the rate of interest that the government paid the banks was fixed at a rate of 10 7/8 per cent. This is the rate that the government pays the bank and the rate at which students who took loans during that period will pay the banks when the loans become due. The only problem for TD is that between the months of May and July this year the Prime Rate varied from a low of 12 per cent to a high of 17 1/4 per cent.

This means that although students paying back the loans will pay an interest rate of 10 7/8 percent when the loans become due, the bank had to pay up to 17 1/4 percent during this year for that money. And, although the Prime Rate may go down, it is not likely.

The same problem exists this year. Although the interest rate has been set for student loans at 13 1/4 per cent (one per cent above the prime rate in July), odds are that the Prime Rate will rise above 12 1/4 per cent, and any bank negotiating a student loan will lose money.

For the Toronto Dominion Bank, this was and is an especially large problem, due to the volume of student loans it handles.

"The problem about student loans is essentially one between the banks of Canada and the Federal government," said Lovegrove. "Unfortunately students are caught in the middle."

SAC asks students about summer work

by C. Woodrow

"One of the most important and worthwhile causes that we are undertaking this year," says Students' Administrative Council President David Simmons, "is to determine to what extent students are dependent on summer employment earnings to pay tuition fees and other expenses incurred at university.

To determine this information, S.A.C. put together a questionnaire which was mailed to 1,300 randomly selected students from the University of Windsor. According to Simmons, questionnaires were mailed out to the entire student body.

"The same problem exists this year. Although the interest rate has been set for student loans at 13 1/4 per cent (one per cent above the prime rate in July), odds are that the Prime Rate will rise above 12 1/4 per cent, and any bank negotiating a student loan will lose money."

Simmons thinks that the results will give a way to showing how students, in Windsor rely on summer work to pay all their university bills. "With the auto industry being hit with mass layoffs, students in this area can no longer depend on high paying summer jobs, nor can they rely on their parents. There has been too much reliance on the auto industry in the past for summer jobs for students. All that changed at the time it can help the people of Windsor realize how many students depend on summer employment."

Simmons went on to say that over a period of time the survey was to be a valuable tool in determining the extent of the problem.

Lancers Mallenderless

Scott Mallender, last year's Hec Creighton trophy winner as the most outstanding college football player in the country, will not be wearing a Lancer uniform this year.

That word came from the Ontario Universities Athletic Association earlier this week after Mallender had challenged the rule which limits a player to five years of collegiate play.

Mallender lost one year of eligibility due to a brief appearance in an exhibition game during his first year of university at Sir Wilfred Laurier in Waterloo and had hoped to find a loophole in the rule which would have allowed him to play.
Minding your language

The office of student affairs is pleased to announce the re-opening of the Writing Development Centre. For those unfamiliar with the Writing Development Centre, it provides a tutorial service to students who require assistance, in developing the fundamental writing skills necessary for completion of university assignments.

This year the Writing Development Centre will again operate on a referral system. Faculty members have already been advised by letter and invited to refer any students experiencing difficulty in writing assignments to Room 12, Vanier Hall. Students taking part in the program receive two or three hours of individual instruction per week, arranged around existing schedules in order to avoid conflict.

The Writing Development Centre is not an essay writing or editing service. It is designed to provide students with the opportunity to develop and improve their written language skills.

Facts found in Central America

Mr. David O'Connor, a staff member with OXFAM-Canada, returned to Canada on September 2, 1980, following a three-month fact-finding tour of Central America.

Mr. O'Connor went to the region to study the widespread conflict between military forces and popular movements, and to determine an appropriate response for OXFAM, the Canadian aid agency. He returns with a perspective on a special role for Canadian government and non-government agencies in that role for OXFAM-Canada.

OXFAM-Canada presently has self-help projects in the fields of medical aid, relief assistance, community development, literacy, and agricultural extension in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Mr. O'Connor toured extensively in Nicaragua where he met with officials in the Health and Education Ministries, the Sandinista Front, and the National Women's Organization. He examined the aid programs of OXFAM-Canada and other aid agencies, and visited the remote Atlantic coastal region.

Mr. O'Connor also spent time in Guatemala, Costa Rica, and Honduras. He gained close experience of the conflict in El Salvador, although he did not enter that country for safety reasons.

Social Scientists unite

At the present time a petition is being circulated to accumulate signatures in order to hold a referendum to establish a Social Science Society. This is an important venture.

We Social Science students lack both the representation and the social events that other faculties enjoy through such organizations as the Engineering Society and the Commerce Club. Our time has come.

We ask that everybody signs our petition and then, when the referendum arrives, we ask that you vote "Yes!" For further information contact Randy Tedes, Sociology rep., Eric Dixon, Social Science rep., or Mike Stipic, Senate rep., at the SAC office.

Simmons splits from student groups over student aid

By E.P. Chant

David Simmons, President of the University of Windsor's Students' Administrative Council, does not agree with the National Union of Students (NUS) that the basic student aid program in this country should be an "all-bursary" one. Both Simmons and the national student organization sent briefs to the federal/provincial Task Force on Student Assistance during the summer, as did the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS).

All three reports have some common criticisms of and suggestions for improving both federal and provincial student aid programs, but there are differences of opinion.

The OFS explicated the criticisms in its report (entitled "Swimming Against the Current") by saying: "...the amount of support is made inadequate because estimates of students' costs are set at unrealistically low levels and standards for family contributions are set at unrealistically high levels.

Secondly, a minimal form of support, the loans program, provides the skeleton on which the more effective grants programs are hung."

In addition to these two basic criticisms, the three reports were concerned with the perceived inability of the various student aid programs to encourage lower class prospective students to financially "sink" attaining a post-secondary school education and with the non-standardized aid programs from province to province.

It is with the solutions to these problems where the briefs divide into two camps, with the two student organizations in one and Simmons in the other.

Speaking specifically about the NUS report, Simmons in an interview this Tuesday said, "There is a genuine demand for changes, but the student organizations are asking for too much (from the government)."

What NUS asked for in a meeting with the task force on August 26 was an all-bursary aid program, coupled with a removal of some income tax deductions for students to help the government pay for the bursaries. OFS would also, as the earlier quotation suggests, like to see the student aid program based more on the need-to-repay grants than the repay-with-interest loans.

Simmons objects to such one-sided solutions because of the excessive and unfair financial burden it would put on the government and because such a bursary plan "would take away the incentive of students to help themselves."

The Windsor president would, instead, like to see the government work on a more "individual need"-based system and as making the existing system run more efficiently.

Working on the Ontario Student Assistance Plan Appeals Board this summer, Simmons saw both the problems the system has and the abuse it takes. He feels that it could be a very efficient system if much of the latter was eliminated.

The type of abuse is typical, said Simmons, by the common case of the student loaded with money from summer work who is, nevertheless, collecting student aid because he/she is still a "dependent living at home".

Solving this problem, Simmons said, would require a governmental redefinition of "independent" and "dependent" students.

There is also, he noted, the problem of the "non-supporting" parents (those who refuse to financially aid their children).

While NUS and OFS contend that parental contributions are always considered at too high a financial level in student aid plans, Simmons does not fully agree with that.

"It should be primarily a parent's concern, no the government's," said Simmons. "After all, who ends up taking more pride in a graduate than his or her parents?"

While NUS and OFS would, then, like to open the system up by making it predominantly bursary/grant oriented (perhaps with little regard to the financial considerations involved), Simmons feels the system might be fine as it is, provided a few formal changes are made and individual cases are more carefully and carefully examined.

Nobody's perfect

In last week's page three story, "Generous government computer attacks Ontario students'", a mistake was made.

The story, about the recent OSAP loan recall, included an interview with Mr. Gar Nutson and Miss Camelia Anderson. The reporter— who interviewed these two people solicited purely "off-the-cuff" opinions from them, but the fact that The Lance quoted Mr. Nutson and Miss Anderson as representatives of the Windsor Legal Aid office— established the unfortunate impression that their statements constituted researched legal advice.

Task force dealing with students should have one

There was a rather silly oversight made earlier this year and, miracle of miracles, it was cured by the Federal Government, ably aided by the provinces. Appropriately, a new federal formula was arrived at earlier than one might have thought.

A federal-provincial task force on student assistance programs, headed by Secretary of State Francis Fox, was set up last spring to find out if needy students were receiving what they needed and what the government could do if they were not.

Aside from asking that people and groups wanting to send comments to the task force do so by June 1 (when many students’ council presidents could not solicit opinions from their constituents) the task force also neglected to invite a student to sit in on the discussions.

Although the task force did extend an additional month to June deadline for submissions for a month (after an onslaught of mail from students’ councils to various government and task force members), no student was ever appointed to this important project.

Granted, many of the students who were seeking a seat on the task force represented what are change where change is very much needed.

It also involves, as much as possible, holding a particular story when asked to do so by someone who can make their request sound reasonable.

For instance, last year we had information about the strike long before it became public. Our source asked that it be anonymous, and we did. He also asked us to hold the information contained in his releases which were often memos from theFaculty Association until "the heat was off" a bit. And we did.

During the course of the summer, several changes were made in the administrative structure of the university. These changes involved every level of the administration, from the Vice-President Academic to the creation of a new office within the university to better serve the students, headed by George McMahon. These changes did not go unnoticed by the editorial staff at The Lance office.

At both formal and informal gatherings over the past few weeks, I have approached these members of the administration and asked about the possibility of doing a feature story about the shuffle: sort of a "let the students know who does what and who to go to with problems" idea.

They all thought it was a good idea. The only problem, they said, is that the changes were not official. Please come back towards the end of September, when the president of the university makes an official statement.

Fine, said we. We’ll sit on it (as we journalists say).

This week’s edition of Newlinese has a full page feature on page seven, entitled "Faces in New Places". I guess they get the "official word" long before we do, because we’re still waiting for that "official word".

Perhaps it was our mistake to sit on the story and wait for it to become official. But that’s what we call "journalistic integrity!"

The FORTNIGHTER

by Chris Woodrow

A new school year means many things to many people, to us at The Lance it means a change in editorial columnists. Last year that lofty distinction fell to E.P. Chant who this year has moved on to greener pastures, and is now the editor.

Succeeding this year’s editor of the print media is no easy task but John Mill and myself have undertaken to carry the burden on our backs and will split the try and error level of responsible and courageous journalistic endeavor to the University of Windsor campus. Trust, honesty and objectivity have been my guiding light through the years and we, in our infinite wisdom, will attempt to carry on.

As I was standing in line at the Registrar’s office to pick up my I.D. card I was trying to think of a sure fire way to make this week’s column an instant success, but as my thought processes were moving no quicker than the line I decided to make a few unraveled observations about the first two weeks of this new school year.

One thing synonymous with a new school year is long lines, lines to pick up a scrap of paper to take to another line where it is stamped, then taken to another line where it is filled in, then to another where it is initialized, then to another where they relieve you of it and your hard earned dollars.

Anyway, one impression all this lining up has left me is the number of people wearing designer jeans. Gone are the days of Levi’s,Wrangler and Lee; welcome to the age of Simmons, Calvin Klein and Gloria Vanderbilt.

Shoplifting no longer a problem at U. of W.

by Nigel Price

While browsing in the book-store you probably get the feeling Big Brother is watching.

Most people pay for things at a whim and get away with it. Strategically located throughout the store are "Foto Vu" cameras, each loaded with the book-store's cash registers. A few try to get around that, but it's not worth taking.

The occasional offenders are summarily sent to the Dean of Students. Mr. George McMahon, former Dean of Students and present Assistant Vice-President of Student Affairs, explained in an interview Wednesday that after a student has been involved in a shoplifting incident, the stolen goods are taken back, the student's student card is removed, and the student is brought before the Dean for "a talk."

"The student usually gets a good kick in the ass and is told not to do it again," said McMahon.

A shoplifter might also go before a Student Services disciplinary committee, said McMahon, but rarely faces criminal prosecution. He could not recall the latter occurring since 1967. "It's (shoplifting) not a major problem anymore," Mrs. Tidridge added. "Students stealing from other students is more common."

Appreciate some individuals are profiting by stealing books which are inordinately, yet mandatorily, left at the book drop. They snatch them while the owner is gone. Unless someone witnesses the theft or the IV picks it up (in one case film was being released while the theft was occurring), there is virtually no recourse for the victim.

Well-rounded university education means a B average

by Scott McCallum

The 1980-81 series of Studentship lectures began this past week with the first three sessions on study skills being given on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday by Ken Long, Dean of Students.

First day attendance was down from last year however. "I think we reached around $7,400.00 deficit of Food in addition to intermittent Monthly Friday night buffets nights" have been scheduled for become more specific and are successes. "Attendance tends explained Long in an inter-to traditional been the biggest happens," he said.

Variety is the spice of life

Brian Williamson

Darrell Johnston, manager of Saga Food Services here at the university has confidence in this year's operation of Vanier Cafeteria.

In an attempt to reduce the $74,000.00 deficit of Food Services, a number of "special nights" have been scheduled for the current academic year.

Monthly Friday night buffets in addition to intermittent "ethnic nights" are vehicles toward this objective. The first, "Italian Night", has already been held and was a "Good success" even though unadvertised, said Johnston.

Although scrip fees have increased the price of food an average of 8%, Johnston pointed out the increase was still two per cent below the current inflation rate.

According to Mr. Johnston, the system at this university is designed to "service the students themselves".

Expanding on this, Mr. Johnston explained that many of the universities across Canada have much more restrictive systems; for example, those with cafeterias open only during specific hours of the day, not totally in line with the fluctuating schedule of many students. The University of Windsor maintains a casual schedule of operation.

Hiring, firing, and in between: your rights

by Peter Haenovess

At the beginning of the year, a number of students are taking on part-time jobs so as to sup­plement their income. Employers, wishing to attain higher administrative and industrial efficiency, will hire individuals on a part-time basis as replacement for full-time employees on vacation or as additional labour during the peak periods of a productive season.

But whether or not they are classified as ‘full-time’ or ‘part­time’ employees, the terms of their employment will be laid down under The Employment Standards Act, S.O. 1974, c. 112 and must be consistent with the regulations setting out in such significant areas as minimum wage, overtime pay, public holidays and severance pay, benefits and termination of employment.

The maximum general hourly rate for all employees at present is $3.00. For students under 18 who work less than 28 hours per week during the school term, the rate is $2.15. The frequent student who works has no bearing on minimum wage, so that the employer must pay these hours as well as the full-time staff.

Training time

When an employer hires a new person, s/he will probably require a new employee to be put in some training time without pay since the employer must expand his illegal act to act as an instructor of the busi­ness operation. In many instances, the employee will accept this loss of pay, absorbing this period of unpaid labour as a necessary prelude to established employment with the company.

However, this would constitute an illegal act on the part of the employer. The legislation makes provision for training pay for all employees. The rate is set at $2.90 per hour. After a month of examinations, the employee is entitled to receive the regular minimum wage.

Part-time employees will generally not work more than a few hours a week or considerably less than their full-time counter­parts. But if a part-time employee is requested to work more than 44 hours in any work­ing week, that employee is en­titled to overtime pay at time and one-half for each hour worked in excess of this stand­ard.

Employees are often concern­ed about how they must compute part-time employees for purposes of vacation and social benefits. The legislation clearly sets out the obligations of the employer towards the part-time staff. Generally speaking, any difference between the full-time and the part-time employees is negligible.

Public holiday

Basically, there are seven public holidays: New Year’s Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day and Christ­mas Day. To qualify for a paid public holiday (i.e. the day off with straight pay), the employee must be employed for more than three months. Also, the employ­ee must earn wages on twelve days of the four weeks preceding the occurrence of a public holiday. Finally, the employee must work on their regularly scheduled day of work preceding and following the holiday.

For the part-time employee, the difficulties arise in a situation that they work the twelve days in the preceding four weeks. In instances the employee works less than three days a week, the employer cannot be required to compensate the employee for the public holiday. But if the employee works for at least three days a week during that period, regardless of how many days of their vacation are to be given, the employer is bound by the legislation to make payment. For the part-time employee, the average daily rate for holiday pay must be calculated upon their hourly performance for the last thirteen weeks of employ­ment.

A qualifying employer who works on a public holiday is entitled to premium pay of straight time for the hours worked plus time and one-half for every hour worked on the public holiday. Emotionally, it is clear that the qualifying employer should receive “double time and one-half” for the public holiday that the employee, who would normally not qualify for vacation pay, would have been entitled to premium pay of time and one-half if s/he works the hol­i­day.

An employee is within his/her rights to work the employee at a straight rate on the holiday if that employee agrees to have another day off with pay. This is a beneficial arrangement for the employee who requires the services of the employee on the public holiday; it provides the employee with only double time pay, a savings of the half-time rate, payable to the employee had there not been an arrange­ment for the employee’s day off.

Vacation pay is one of the more basic rights belonging to employees of every description and classification. The legislation reads “every employer shall give to each employee a vacation with pay of at least two weeks upon the completion of each twelve months of employment”, or a minimum of four per cent of the employee’s gross wages per year. In effect, the legislation ensures that accumulated vacation is held in trust for the employee by the employer. It is a remun­eration for services rendered solely to the employee, it cannot be retained or withheld by the employer for an indefinite period longer than ten months after the completion of the year’s service. Due to the number of hours worked compared with full­time employees, the part-time employee will not receive a full two weeks pay. But they are entitled to work out per cent of their gross earnings per year. In some instances, an employer will pay part-time employees their vacation pay on a weekly basis, thus alleviating any poss­ibility of confrontations over alleged miscalculation of hours.

An employer does not have to pay benefits to employees. There is no provision for such social necessities as sick leave insurance in the legislation. But if the employer so desires, s/he may pay benefits to the staff; however, discrimination as far as age, sex and marital status are strictly prohibited.

The employer may refuse to pay any benefits to part-time employees as a group and still remain within the ambit of the legisla­tion.

Termination of pay

Part-time employees are subject to the same termination notice rules as full­time employees. If the part-time employee has worked three months or more, s/he must be given notice of termination by the employer of at least (i) one week if the employee worked less than two years; (ii) two weeks if the employee worked two years but less than five years; (iii) four weeks if the employee worked five years but less than ten years; and, (iv) eight weeks if the employee worked in excess of ten years. When notice is not issued, an employee is entitled to terminate­ment pay (often referred to as severance pay) in lieu of a number of weeks notice that they should have received. For example, a part-time employee who should have received one week’s notice, will be eligible for one week’s pay which is based upon the weekly average of hours worked within the last three weeks of employment.

When a part-time employee is temporarily laid off, as often occurs during the hectic Christ­mas season, the employer, who does not give proper notice, must call the employee back to work within thirteen weeks of the date of lay-off in order to avoid payment of termination pay. If at the end of thirteen weeks the employee is not called back to work, a claim can be issued against the employer for the required amount. In circumstances where the employer is called back to work and consequently refuses employment, the employer is no longer bound to some payment.

An employer is exempt from issuing termination notice when there is evidence of "wilful misconduct" or "wilful dis­obedience" by the employee. Also, if the work agreement is "impossible of performance or incompatible with a fortuitous or unforeseen event or circumstance", such as fire or flood, the employer need not have to compensate the employ­ee for any lack of notice. On the job accidents or lengthy ill­ness are also acceptable grounds for dismissal without notice since the work agreement cannot possibly be resumed within a reasonable length of time. How­ever, one day’s sick leave is not considered an "unforseen or for­tuitous circumstance" which acts to frustrate the employment contract.

In summary, this was not meant to be an exhaustive exam­ination of the Employment Standards legislation. The variety and complexity of indi­vidual problems are voluminous and require a more elaborate study than that which is offered here. Any questions or prob­lems regarding employer employee relations should be directed to the nearest Employment Standards Branch of the Ministry of Labour. The flying nun

The Greek nun has been jailed for growing and for smoking hashish in the convent garden and smoking it in her room.

Sister Flocher told police it was not the but "God’s breathes" which blew the seeds into the convent where they took root. It was simply by chance that I tried it, without knowing what I was doing," she said.
Anisef of York study finds university a luxury courses. Anisef does not fully examine the many social and economic barriers that students must hurdle, stating at one point that "because obtaining a post-secondary education entails costs ... access may be somewhat restricted to persons with more plentiful resources," but he does make a number of recommendations.

1. Improved high school counselling
2. More publicity for the various forms of student aid
3. Affirmative action to broaden the career interests of women
4. Financial and social aids for rural students who must move to urban centres for post-secondary schooling
5. An industrial strategy implicitly promoting jobs to persons who have been encouraged to pursue higher education and expanding job opportunities for women that systems be developed to better prepare high school students for the transition to university, community college or the working world.

Following the release of the report, the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) issued a statement describing the study as "evidence for what we have been saying for a long time. Poor people, women and students from rural and northern areas simply don't have the same chance to get an education." The OFS release goes on to analyze the report chapter by chapter, touching at least briefly on each of Anisef's areas of concern, and finally to call for a complete study of the financial barriers faced by students.

The press release issued by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, which funded the study, is headlined "Report Urges More Career Guidance for Secondary-School Students." It summarizes some of Anisef's findings, avoiding reference to the actual cost of post-secondary education to concentrate on attitudinal barriers evident in high school. It cites five of Anisef's recommendations, of which three deal with high schools, one with publicizing financial aid and one with affirmative action for women. It concludes by stating that "many of the problems uncovered" in the study are among those "being considered" by the government's Secondary Education Review.

from the University of Toronto Varsity (A CUP paper)

A study in contrasts is provided by two press releases concerning the "Anisef study"—a report on the career expectations and results of Ontario students in relation to their educational achievements.

The study, which was released in May, was conducted by Dr. Paul Anisef of York University. It began with a survey of Grade 12 students in 1973. Researchers readministered the survey to those students at two-year intervals until 1979, at which time they were able to contact 1500 of the original 2500 interviewees.

The study showed that university enrolment tends to be urban males from the highest of four socioeconomic strata (SES) groups. 42.5% are male, 24.4% are from an urban or somewhat urban region and 67.7% are from a high or somewhat high SES group. It also demonstrates that these trends are evident in high school, where the same type of person dominates university-bound
SAC’S: Chick’s singer leaves his shell far behind

You can always tell when school has begun again. On Monday night SAC's Pub was a busy place.

This weeks’ entertainment is provided by Chick, a five man band who seemingly aren’t as concerned with their music as they are with entertaining the crowd.

Somewhat different from the usual new wave bands taking control of this city, Chick performs mostly recent his known to everybody. Look to hear some Baby’s, Kisses, Kingbees, Cheap Trick and even Wings to be among their repertoire. Even though their music isn’t technically perfect, it’s a refreshing change just to hear some pieces not usually played by local but bands.

The lead singer himself provides ample entertainment.

How refreshing to see a film depicting teenagers today whose characters are so real they nearly jump off the screen with youth and vitality. The writer and director have skillfully made My Bodyguard an honest, funny and warm movie about adolescence. Couple that with the stunning performances turned in by Chris Makepeace, Adam Baldwin, and Matt Dillon and the result is a cinematic success that runs the gamut of funny bone to tugging at your heartstrings all at the same time.

The story involves Clifford Peaslee (Chris Makepeace) who is slowly changing just to hear some piece s not usually played by local but bands.

My Bodyguard

by The Cinema Critic

The Cinema Critic, an unusual multi-media production dealing with the forces of good and evil in a young executive’s life, will be previewed on Thursday, September 25 at 7:00 and 10:00 in Room 1120 of the Math Building.

The production is a presentation of Paragon Experience, the ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ, International, and Interdenominational Organization.

A spokesman for Paragon Experience explained the elaborate multi-media production focused on “Rick”, a young executive with a zest for life who enjoys the luxury of success, the love and devotion of his fiancee, and the thrill of outdoor adventure.

Then circumstances make the young executive aware of ‘the Dreamweaver’, who uses deceiving forces to control the unsuspecting. During an encounter with death, Rick catches a glimpse of the plot to ensure him, and begins his search for escape.

The spokesman said the presentation was a 75-minute production of breath-taking photography which uses more than 2,000 visuals projected onto three large screens from 36 computerized projectors.

Unlike traditional movie entertainment, he added, “The Dreamweaver”, contains only two minutes of talking. Indeed, the storyline is communicated through the use of visuals precisely synchronized to the lyrics of contemporary music from the Beatles, John Denver, Simon and Garfunkel, Kansas, Styx, and others, uniquely blending this stereophonic music with suspenseful drama.

Admission is $1.00 at the door. Advance tickets are also $1.00 per ticket, and are available at the University Centre.

“The Dreamweaver” is being locally sponsored by the Navigators and Intervarsity Christian Fellowship.

Hreljac ‘ace in hole’ for Lancers

by Steve Rice

Last year’s Ontario Universities Athletic Association’s gold medal winner Chris Hreljac heads the list of the 1980 University of Windsor golf team which was selected earlier this week.

Hreljac fired an eight- over-par 80 at the University of Windsor open tournament Monday in which the team finished fifth, and duplicated that score Tuesday in the St. Clair tournament where the team finished third. Both competitions were held at Roseland Golf Club in Windsor.

As part of the evening’s events, Labatt’s had a showing of their film highlighting the University of Waterloo ‘s golf team in 1978. Mike Niziolek (89-85), who was a member of the 1976 Lancer OUAA golf championship team, rounds out the list.

“These guys should go all the way if they play up to their potential,” said Miles. “All of them have university experience which is a real asset.”

Other players who competed in the two tournaments were Blake Lucan (78-80), Rick Marconi (80-86), Jim Weese (88-85), Jeff Hill (87-81), and Mike Shpuniarsky (82-79). A total of 26 golfers turned out for the one-round tryout which was held a week ago.

“I really hate to do that way (one round),” Miles said. “I’ll have a three-week tryout with four or five rounds if I could. But time doesn’t allow it because the season gets under way so soon.”

The team will compete in the Waterloo Invitational Monday, then move on to the OUAA semi-finals at Westview Golf Club, north of Toronto, Sept. 25 and 26. The OUAA finals will be held Oct. 5 and 6 at Guelph Golf and Country Club in Toronto, site of the Canadian Open.

LONDON - "We didn't get blown out by any stretch of the imagination," said coach Gino Fracsi after the Lancers' 15-4 loss here Saturday. "I'm pleased with the team's performance."

"Pleased" with a loss? Well, consider that the Lancers had just held the defending OUAA champion Western Mustangs, a team which has built a reputation as being year after year one of the best in Canada, to just 13 points. And, in fact, without a major score until the 14th minute of the final quarter. It was indeed a pleasing performance by a team which in a "Learning" year appears to be learning very quickly.

Zoran Milosevic scored Windsor's only points of the game in the first quarter, a single on a 43-yard missed field-goal attempt and a 34-yard field-goal. But, it was Windsor's defense that shone in what was an extremely physical game. In fact, Western's touchdown and their 302 yards-total offense, all of which came in the final quarter, could each be attributed to one big play.

The first field-goal came early in the fourth quarter after Ryan Potter, who rushed for 126 yards on 24 attempts, galloped 30 yards to the Lancers 2-yard line. There the Windsor defense shut down the Mustangs and Kevin Ryderard kicked the 31-yard three-pointer.

Five minutes later, Al Quinn rambled off the longest run of the day, 53 yards to the Windsor 33. An unanswerable roughness call tacked on 20 more yards and Western was on the 13-yard line. But again, the defense stiffened and they had to settle for a 31-yard field goal.

Western's touchdown came after Windsor rookie quarterback Rob Dalley, a product of Centennial High School in Windsor, fumbled the ball on his own 32. Windsor was called for obstruction on the play and the ball moved in to the 12.

From there, it took Western five plays before Potter finally took the ball over.

"I'm really optimistic after what I saw today," said Fracsi. "Our defensive line and linebackers played good, tough football."

"We've only been practicing two works and the defense is always ahead of the offense. But the offense should come along in the next week or two."

Western coach Darwin Semeniuk had nothing but good things to say about the Lancer defense which sacked quarterback Paul Gleeson no less than four times.

"When these two teams meet it's traditionally a tough, physical game," Semeniuk said, "Windsor is very strong on the line and their interior personnel were tremendous. We had a lot of difficulty against them."

"You know that you're in for a game when Windsor comes to town because Gino will send the kitchen sink at you and he does a lot of sophisticated and complicated things. It was a fairly even contest. We just ended up getting more offense."

The Lancers came knocking at the door several times but failed to convert their chances into points.

Just prior to the end of the first half with the Lancers leading 4-1, they worked the ball down to the 19-yard line but failed to gain even a single point after Dalley was sacked and a high snap absorbed the 15-yard field goal attempt.

Late in the fourth quarter, Windsor punter Scott Saxey boomed a 49-yarder to the Mustang 30-yard line where Dave Ramsey fumbled. The Lancers recovered but Dalley was dropped for an 18-yard loss on the next play, then threw an interception up the middle. The Lancers will face the Waterloo Warriors, who were beaten 10-8 at McMaster, at home on Saturday at 2 p.m.

Extra Points

- Each week, the players vote on top performances based on their viewing of the game films. Awards for the Western game were as follows:
  - Defensive Lineman: John Collettino, defensive tackle, 2nd year
  - Defensive Back: Chris Owen, defensive halfback, 5th year
  - Offensive Lineman: Ron Laprise, offensive tackle, 3rd year
  - Offensive Back: Rob Dalley, quarterback, 1st year

Mandatory review of tenure not likely here by Wendy Coomber and the University of Western Ontario Gazette

"Tenure means that you cannot dismiss a professor unless you use a type of due process, you make sure that natural justice is followed, and fair play, and that there is a type of pure review that protects and safeguards the academic freedom of a professor," explained Dr. Cassano, Vice President of Academics in an interview Tuesday.

"I think that people, all too often, think of tenure as some kind of blanket protection from the cradle to the grave. That kind of protection doesn't exist anywhere in the world in any sphere of activity," said Dr. Cassano.

"That kind of protection doesn't safeguard the academic freedom of Ontario's many institutions." As a result, tenure needs to be looked at again. "The current system of tenure is 'a matter of protection'. As a result, tenure needs to be looked at again. "The current system of tenure is 'a matter of protection'.

However, some students and faculty of the University of Western Ontario do see tenure as just that type of "blanket protection". As a result, tenured professors of that university will have their teaching performance reviewed every five years if the recommendations of a President-appointed committee are accepted.

In the committee's report, a professor whose performance was found unacceptable would have three years to correct the University treasurer has left

From 1970 until that time, Dr. Allan, now 48, had been working for the federal Ministry of Finance. From 1970 to 1973, he planned fiscal policy for that government department. From 1973 to the time of his appointment to this university administration, Dr. Allan was the Director of Tax Policy for the ministry, developing the indexed taxation formula while he held that position.

Dr. Allan's received his B.A. from McMaster University in 1958 in Economics, his M.A. and Ph.D. from Princeton University in New Jersey in 1961 and 1965, respectively. All the degrees were in Economics. Before working for the government, Dr. Allan taught that subject at the University of Saskatchewan, Queen's University, and McMaster.

No information was available at the time of this newspaper's publication regarding Dr. Allan's successor (if there is to be one) and the reason for his departure from the university administration.

Modern Art mess

Visual Arts students at the University of Windsor will find out in January that behind every cloud there is a silver lining.

The "cloud" is a cancelled course in Modern Art History. According to the two Visual Arts students who brought the problem to the attention of the course, the course is "essential" to their programs.

"As part of the salary compensation package (in their contracts) there is normally a mechanism which allows the institution to undertake that type of review. So for instance, if we have a merit scheme whereby people are compensated for their performance and credentials, every professor in the institution will be reviewed, will be determined, by using certain criteria which will attempt to ensure our objective, it'll be determined who's functioning at what capacity, and merit attributions are made on that basis," Dr. Cassano explained.

"Each professor is checked or reviewed by the Basic Administrative Unit of their department. The BAU's findings and recommendations are then sent to a university wide committee, the University Committee on Academic Promotion and Tenure, that determines which professors should receive job advancements or tenure," Dr. Cassano explained.

It is up to the individual departments to look into complaints filed against their faculty and to take any primary action concerning that professor. Dr. Cassano continued. But instead of removing a professor, who is "having difficulties in classroom presentation", Dr. Cassano would suggest the professor engage in instruction and improve his teaching techniques.

"There are several of these problems, some of which could be inflammatory or state­ments that could be very upsetting to members of the community and they have to have the right to criticize. That's certainly one of the most important functions of an institution, to provide reason­able forums for responsible criticism and public comment," Dr. Cassano stated.

Students to lose office on Tenure Committee?

There is presently before the Senate a motion by the head of the Religious Studies Department, Joseph T. Calliot, a motion to remove students from Promotion and Tenure Committees in their respective faculties. While student readers are up in arms about removing the students from committee, there remains the possibility that Calliot knows what he's thinking about, and that perhaps it would be better if there were fewer members of the committee.

Imagine yourself in the situation of a graduate student in any department (the graduate student is the one most likely to sit on the P&T Committee). Also, on the committee are your Dean, your Department Head, three professors from the department, and you. One of the above is likely to be your faculty advisor on your thesis or graduate study.

Further imagine that the professor up for tenure or promotion was once that you personally thought was unacceptable in his position. Once the Dean, the Department Head, and the three professors have spoken (perhaps in favour of this professor), they ask you what your opinion is. Are you likely to disagree? Probably not. You can see, with your disinterested vote, your university career going up in smoke, voting members of the faculty in the fact that any of the people in the room would take direct action in such a vote (votability is not necessarily the University of Windsor or the Students' Administrative Council).

Opinions expressed in The Lance are those of the writer. They are not necessarily the University of Windsor or the Students' Administrative Council.

The Lance Offices are located on the second floor, 233 Student Life Centre, University of Windsor, 401 Sunset Avenue, Windsor, Ontario, N9B 3J4. Phone: (519) 253-4060. Subscription rates: $2.50/year. Entered as Second Class Mail at the Post Office of Canada.

Portrait of the travelling journalist as a ‘junior fish’?

Well, it was a bad week, but the weekend almost made up for it.

The Lance belongs to an organization of Canadian University Press (CUP). We are prospective members. The organization is broken down into regions, and every two or three months, a regional conference is held.

What does CUP do for us, you may ask. It provides us with a news and feature exchange service. It also provides us with a file feed, which we can draw graphics. It also provides us with the capability of using news stories from other CUP papers should we need the data. And if the Student's Administrative Council should ever try to shut us down (perish the thought), CUP would come to our aid.

CUP also provides a regional fieldworker, an underpaid and overworked person who spends most of the year on the road travelling from newspaper to newspaper trying to unravel the staff and administrative problems. This person also conducts seminars on newswriting, production, advertising, and all the other aspects of student journalism.

This month's regional conference was held at Brock University in St. Catharines, which university seems to be composed almost entirely of stairways and halls, all looking exactly the same.

On the second day of the conference, the Press, had the joyous task of winning the delegations from the Ontario Regional office of the Ontario University Council of University Press (ORCUP).

It was on the way to Brack, however, that I had the most enlightening experience I have ever had as a student journalist.

Being a member of this elite group, I am always interested in how the paper we humble souls put out is received over the rest of the campus. Being the good journalists we are, Peter Haggert and I headed for the BMO, or the Club Car, as VIA is wont to put it immediately upon boarding the train. After all, a journalist has to be where the action is.

Whereupon, entered Gillian Stevens and her sidekick, Marilyn Courtney.

I was treated to the most complete and objective analysis of our paper yet to be heard by anyone on our staff.

"This story blows," Gillian informed me, picking up my only copy of the twelve-page work of art.

"Come on now," I said. "We're not perfect, but it's not that bad.

I was told that the sports section lacked current information, the news stories were boring, and that, all told, it wasn't worth the paper it was printed on.

Quick as I am, I thought that perhaps we could talk about something that my new found friend knew something about. That something turned out to be swimming.

"You gotta drink like a fish," Gillian informed me. Marilyn was quick to affirm that this was one of the big points in swimming coaching.

"Not only that, you need to practice your guts out."

"And that's the money, isn't it?"

"That money proved to have more than its share of delights, from Youthstream to the Yostream contract. Youthstream is a national advertising agency for CUP papers to layout and newswriting seminars. Really a most eye opening conference weekend.

In the end, I promised Gillian that I would not attempt to tell her how to coach swimming if she wouldn't try to tell me how to write a newspaper. I think it was a good idea.

After all, you have to drink like a whale to be a newspaper person.

And I hope you're happy seeing your name in print, Gillian.

The FORTNIGHTER

by John Mill

Rumour has it that student protest was buried with the 60's decade. Not so, when money is the issue, tempers soon, and clotus radicalism come out in force, staging a demonstration to be covered by the pocketbooks.

Last year, we had a perfect example here on campus. The Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG) made the outrageously immoral mistake of not advertising, to the satisfaction of a group of latent reactionaries on campus, $5.00 rebate of the fee students had to pay with their tuition for OPIRG funding.

The reactionaries, failing to call their own interest, demanded which led to the total withdrawal of OPIRG's funding.

OPIRG's contribution to campus life (Ralph Nader and Harry Chapin visits) and the worth or lack of worth of the social research was not even an issue.

The main issue was the valiant anti-OPIRG gen smacked at was the money. Who cares about research? In our money conscious society, the main concern seems to be the price of a dozen beer.

This year, the first example of campus radicalism was reported by York University's student paper. The scandal: The Toronto and the York University's Canadian Tenancy (TD) Bank on campus had the audacity to cut back its negotiated student loans.

The Odegaard Law and Literature Society swung into full action, publicising the students' plight and urging campus organizations and private students to withdraw their funds from TD. The campaign was under way.

An Excelbar telephone survey found all the banks around the York campus except the TD had a marked increase in new student loans. The York NDP had also planned an informational packet to protest in front of the bank.

All this action took place in the first two weeks of September.

Not only did TD reverse its policy of rebates and increase the number of student loans negotiated, but it then confirmed it would speed up installation of the TD Green Machine.}

Councill of York Student's Federation president, Keith Schoolman said the decision was a major victory for students, adding the Green Machine (an automatic teller) installation was an old complaint and the bank's announcement that it would be hooked up soon came as a surprise.

The rumour that student radicalism is dead should be dismissed. Not only is it radicalism and well, but we are still serving on important issues. No more waiting on silly social concerns like surveillance in photos or the draft. No, my God! We are right down to the core primal concern of money.

If you happen to be in the basement of the University Centre, and see a few people running in and out of the CJAM doors between classes, you may be our student radio station executives. The execs are running the station as well as training new students in their prospective jobs.

The station, which is at 660 AM, can be heard from 6:00am until midnight everyday. Speakers are located in the pub, the University Centre and three resident halls. Cody Hall on the second and fourth floors, Huron Hall in the Round Room, and Electa Hall on the sixth floor and in the Games Room. Plans for further service in Tecumseh Hall are being discussed. The station broadcasts up to date information about the campus and has set up an information and request line. Students are invited to make suggestions and requests at 254-234-9194 or by dropping by the station.

Grant Gelinas, the station manager, has promised that “anything relevant to students will be carried.” Gelinas welcomes the support of all students and would like to see every department involved with the radio in some way.

There is a drama-radio club starting this year, involving the English and Drama departments. It will produce radio plays for the station, which will be aired Monday evenings.

Most of the programs are similar to those of last year. Although the main component is rock and roll from noon to 9:00 pm, there will be other special programs. On Monday through Thursday, from 5:00 pm to 6:00 pm and Fridays from 4:00 pm to 5:00 pm, there is a folk show. The classical music show has also been dropped.

The second facet of the Hospice program involves hospital care, and is run by Mrs. Jane Boyd, assistant professor in the University of Windsor’s School of Nursing. Mrs. Echlin stated they have received praise from the patients and their families, but also symptoms control, planned interventions and finally evaluation of the patient’s outcome.

One of the many problems with the Hospice program is that the CRTC, the board which controls all national broadcasting, must have a “Promise of Performance.” This is a specific set of guidelines the station must follow, including the basic programing set-up. Gelinas is in the process of writing up a new one, as the old one, handed in three years ago, is out-dated. The CRTC will also ask CJAM to adopt a policy that will guarantee a full-time transmitter to a new station manager every year.

The biggest problem has been, and will always be, lack of funding. Up until now, the funds have come from the Student Media Corporation set up by SAC under the name of SAC-M. Getting harder for CJAM to get money now because of SAC’s financial constraints.

The initial cost of new equipment for FM broadcasting is great and further funding will be at least double what the station is now using. Along with their requirements, the board wants stations to be able to maintain their frequency in order to get their license.

When all of the problems are solved, the station could be eligible for a hearing, which is to be set up by the board. In the meantime, the board has had other priorities, but CJAM’s case may be heard very soon.

Hospice needs help to help Windsor terminally ill

by Debbie Staley

During medieval times, the word “Hospice” was known as a way-station at which pilgrims gained repose and refreshment along their journey to the Holy Land. Similarly, today’s Metropolitan Hospice follows this same pattern.

Few people seem to have any knowledge of Windsor’s "modern hospice" and in fact, many Windsorites are unaware of exactly what a "hospice" is.

The Metropolitan Hospital Hospice is an independent, charitable organization which focuses on palliative care for the terminally ill and their families. Essentially, palliative care involves the lessening of a patient’s physical, emotional and spiritual pain. This type of care is administered by professional nurses along with approximately 50 volunteers. The unique aspect of the program is that it is a community effort, and exists to offer medical services, rather than replacing them.

The program itself is two-fold, in that it deals with both community and hospital care. The community facet of the program is run by Ms. Jean James, and is aimed at keeping the terminally ill patient at home. The problems associated with home care are tremendous, but, with the help of nurses and trained volunteers, the family of the patient learns how to cope with a terminal illness.

The second facet of the Hospice program involves hospital care, and is run by Mrs. Jane Boyd, assistant professor in the University of Windsor’s School of Nursing. Mrs. Echlin stated the nurses’ duties not only involve assessment of the patients and their families, but also symptom control, planned interventions and finally evaluation of the patient’s outcome.

However, the greatest problem with the Hospice is that while the number of patients is increasing at a steady rate, the funding to provide for their care is not. Mrs. Jane Boyd, the Administrator of the Hospice program stated their greatest problem is funding. In order to overcome this obstacle, emergency support. In the past, the Hospice program has organized a fund raising benefit scheduled for October 28, 1983.

In an interview, Mrs. Boyd stated last year’s benefit, along with local donations, have been used to help United Way and the community, contributed to last year’s budget of $71,000. This year, Mrs. Boyd stated the budget has soared to a staggering $80,000, of which approximately $50,000 will be obtained through the Hospice Benefit.

However, the Hospice’s “dream” is not simply to raise money. In the words of Mrs. Boyd, “the hospice needs help to help Windsor’s terminally ill.” Mrs. Boyd also said that the financial support the Hospice receives is not simply an additional source of revenue. They can only do that by getting a FM Licence which will allow it to reach all sections of the campus and parts of the city over the airwaves.

At Tuesday’s SAC meeting, it was decided a referendum would be held to ask students for $2.50 a semester to support CJAM. The referendum will be held on October 14 and 15.

Station Manager Grant Gelinas explained at the meeting, “The Canadian Radio-Telecommunications and Television Commission (the FM licence granting board) is increasingly expensive, and can only be obtained through the Hospice Benefit.” Mrs. Boyd feels “community involvement is surely found at the university, and the Hospice Benefit will be seen as a community education.”

Both Jane Boyd and Jean Echlin stated they have received overwhelming support from both past and present university students and faculty. Mrs. Echlin added most of her support has come from these members of the public who are less preoccupied than previous generations with their birth, but are more concerned with the end of their life cycle, death and dying.

Jane Boyd said the Hospice has received a great amount of functional and emotional support from John Hoffman and Dr. C. Eaves, both of the University of Windsor.

Despite the problems involved, the Hospice Benefit is drawing near, and promises to be a gala event. This year the benefit will be held at the Cleary Auditorium, and it is to feature the Lana and Monte Carlo Night. The entertainment will be complete with a Jazz Band, along with the Casino and showgirls on the third floor.
Thanks for your shoes

Dear Editor:
The University of Windsor 1980 Shinerama has been a successful campaign because of the efforts of students and faculty members who unselfishly gave of their time, talent, and money to help in the fight against Cystic Fibrosis (C.F.). Without their help, $2,700 would not have been raised.

Dollars were not raised by shoe-shining alone. This year, students washed windows, organized two car washes, raised money by washing cars, and even provided downtown entertainment on a rainy Friday afternoon. All these efforts have not only resulted in a collection of money for C.F., but have added to student involvement on campus.

Among the groups and people which participated were the Engineering Society, which Simmons fights Senate motion

David Simmons, Students' Administrative Council President, disagrees.

"The only reason that students would have to fear undue pressure or coercion is if the Senate does not follow up on the student complaints of such coercion," Simmons said. He went on to add that he doesn't feel the Senate is taking enough steps to follow up on such complaints, and Culliton does not deny students should have some input to the committee. "Student input is absolutely essential," he said, "I don't understand their value at all. It's just that I don't feel that they should be full voting members. And I'm not the only one who feels that way. It's just that I put it on paper."

In a memorandum in reply to the Senate motion, the Students' Administrative Council said, "We ask that they be 250 words maximum and typed, with a due date of October 6, 1980."

Jim Shaban, Vice President of SAC, spoke out, "We could lose the rights we gained in the sixties.

Linda Bresolin, the Nursing Society President, described the motion as "paternalistic, saying students can't make decisions. What is university for but to train us to make decisions."

"We have to show we care," said Shaban asking council members to "pack that meeting," on October 2 at 3:30 pm, in Windsor Hall, Room 510.

A motion on club ratification was also discussed. Any club that wants SAC money to be ratified by the 30 day of the academic year.

Kevin Butler, President, Gay Students on Campus, complained that all clubs must keep membership lists. Butler asked that the motion be amended to keep these lists confidential. Kevin Sisk, Law Society President, explained the confidentiality amendment "would be an assurance statement and wouldn't cost us (SAC) anything."

On a different note, Dave Simmons reported that 1,500 Student Summer Employment Surveys were sent out. So far, 500 have been returned and the results will be ready in mid-October. Another survey is being sent to all department heads concerning cutbacks.

Dale Horvath was chosen as SAC's new Chief Electoral Officer. When introducing Horvath, Jim Shaban said, "Dale was involved in high school politics and will be more than able to handle his position."

It was decided that a new memorial scholarship will be named for the late Arthur Sweat, former advertising director for SAC. The report of the Board of Directors was tabled until the next SAC meeting which will be held in two weeks on Thursday night at 7:00.

Send us your beefs

The price page, known formerly on The Lance as Page Five, and in the journalism business as the "op ed" page (opposite editorial page) is usually where the "Letters to the Editor" go.

Last year, this page was filled with complaints, insults, and nastiness. This week with barely a half inch to spare. Apparently, people on this campus think that their beefs get read if they stick them in this page.

They're right. If you've got a beef or anything to say about yourself, the university, your roommates, your roommates' roommates, your parents, your professors, or anything else, send your letters to or drop them off at: The Lance, Second Floor, University Centre, University of Windsor, or toss them in the Lance Letterbox at the Centre desk in the same building.

Common-law law not common knowledge

T.G. Nutson, Director of Community Legal Aid

So you figure you'll live together to avoid the legal hassles and obligations of marriage. Well, you'd better consider it short term and not plan to have any kids.

Common-law marriages have limited recognition under the Family Law Reform Act, 1978 and certain other strictly defined statutes. The F.L.R.A. creates the same rights and obligations for common-law marriages only in regards to support obligations. The issue is "what constitutes a common-law marriage?"

If the parties have cohabitated for a continuous period of five years or longer, or for a shorter period if a relationship of some permanence exists and a child has been born of the relationship the F.L.R.A. will recognize the relationship as a marriage. "Relationship of some permanence" has not been defined and requires interpretation by the courts.

The support obligations that result from common-law 'marriages' are not as extensive as most people imagine. The application must be made within one year of the breakdown of the relationship. All support obligations are mutual and each spouse is required to him or herself and the other to the extent they are able. Children are entitled to support by both parents whether born within or outside the marriage.

In Ontario, the rights to share in the family assets and possession of the matrimonial home do not extend to common-law spouses. The law differs in British Columbia and many other jurisdictions.

Common-law spouses may, and often do, enter into cohabitation agreements or 'marriage' contracts while living together. Although the idea is terribly unromantic it makes sense. By means of the contract, common-law spouses acquire interests in property they would not normally have. The marriage contract can also act as a separation agreement. This can allow the "split up" to run smoothly eliminating any bickering over the household goods.

Common-law spouses as defined in the F.L.R.A. have claim for damages, if their spouse is killed or injured by the fault or neglect of another. This claim is limited to the pecuniary loss resulting in the injury or death of the spouse.

The above mentioned laws of support give rise to interesting scenario. Mary and John meet in first year and fall madly in love. They decide to move in together by September of second year. Mary dreams of being the first woman leader of the N.D.P. and hopefully Prime Minister, John studies philosophy and dreams of setting up a small philosophy shop after graduation. Mary and John live happily together through their undergraduate years. Mary goes to Law School and John starts a Master's in Philosophy.

By graduation time they are still living together but things are going sour. Mary has given up any humanitarian dreams and decided all she really wants is money and power. John has become mired in an existential crisis and drinks heavily. They split up—both claiming to need more space' than the relationship affords them. Mary gets a job with a big Windsor Law Firm and starts to make millions by foreclosing on the mortgages of the unemployed. John struggles desperately with Life's darker truths and drinks more and more. After waking up from a particularly severe hangover he decides to sue Mary for support.

The judge, seeing that John has no skills, no job prospects, and is still deep within an existential crisis orders Mary to pay $1000 a month in support for the next five years. Mary begins to pay but is late one month and John ends it all by jumping off MacDonald Hall.

The above story is fictitious and any of the characters resemblance to real persons living, dead or otherwise is purely coincidental.

Seriously, now ...

Other statutes also recognize a common-law marriage.

Workers' Compensation Board: after six years of cohabitation (two years if there are children), and if the worker leaves no dependent widow or widower.

War Veterans Allowance and Canada Pension Plan: after three years if either the deceased or the dependent was legally married to someone else, otherwise after one year.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board: after five years (or shorter if there is a relationship of some permanence and a child has been born).

OHIP, Ontario Housing, Welfare, Ontario Legal Aid: generally don't distinguish between formal and informal family units; however, welfare will also recognize the existence of a common-law spouse outside the income bracket guidelines (both are worth appealing). OHIP may require a form stating that the couple are living together as husband and wife.

For more information on common-law relationships contact the Community Legal Aid Office (formerly Student Legal Aid Society), Room G105, Law Building, 253-7150.

The newly created drop-out counseling service offered by the Office of Student Affairs has been in existence since January, but only recently has located in the basement of Vanier Hall, the Office of Student Affairs assumed the responsibility for all drop-out counseling. Students wanting to drop out have only to go to one centralized location for all their information. In the past, dropping out required a visit to a faculty counsellor, the Registrar's Office and the Cassie Office.

"The new system is much easier for students," said Ms. Baker. "We offer a study interview with a view to helping the student make the best decision. I am not saying preventing the student from leaving is of secondary importance.

Ms. Baker brings her personal experience to the position, "I think being married to a student who is a product of one's experience and training. It's environmental, not intrinsic or genetic." Gold graduated from the product of one's alma mater as a teacher who has the problems.

"Sometimes it's the better students who have the problems," Gold has found. "Having problems does not necessarily mean that a student is a poor one, Gold has found."

"I also want to stress the psychological aspect, such as self-awareness," he continued. "We're less aware of the learning process as we go through than we are of the content. If we can stand back and look at how we're changing both as a person and in the context of the course, it is likely that learning will improve."

Such remarks could apply to any discipline, but Gold said it was his intention in the Thursday lecture to "Look at math with its special problems to figure out for oneself how it might be to return to his old life style."

A short pictorial history of our ‘first-class’, ‘exciting’ building

That huge structure dominating South Campus is not a new roller-coaster for Human Kinetics’ Department of Rest and Recreation. It is actually the shell of the University of Windsor’s new gymnasium.

Within a week, the steel for the roof of the new St. Denis Hall complex should arrive. By the first day of classes next September, 12 years of planning and work will have been realized when the new complex opens for use.

The new facility was part of the original concept for the Faculty of Human Kinetics Building built during the late sixties. But as Dr. Hermiston, Dean of Human Kinetics, told The Lance, “It was canned because of student unrest.” In 1969, the idea for a new St. Denis Hall took root once again. Construction began last May after commitment for funding was obtained.

John Laframboise, Assistant Vice President for Community Relations and Development, is the man in charge of fund raising. “We’ve put the building up on the assumption that the students will fulfill their commitment,” said Laframboise. The students’ commitment was obtained through two referenda, one last fall for undergraduate students and one last February for graduate and part-time students. Full time students will contribute $5 each and part time students will contribute $2.50 each towards the projected cost of $5 million. Although the students’ contribution is based on enrollment and therefore difficult to pinpoint, Mr. Laframboise expects that the total student contribution will be in the area of $700,000.

Laframboise was pleased to work with the students during the referenda. “The students, from the outset, were very enthusiastic.” said Laframboise. “It was a pleasure to work with them, very satisfying.”

Local, corporate, and government funding is also paying for the cost of the new facility. Imperial Oil Ltd., for example, donated a substantial amount of money under a funding category labelled a “Leadership Gift”. These are contributions of $25,000 or more.

The new gymnasium also received funding from the local community. In a sense, the building will be a community building when you consider that 70 percent of University of Windsor Alumni are local residents. As well, a Community Use Agreement was reached whereby the city and county are entitled to use the facility one third of the time. (This agreement had to be reached before the project could receive its Windsor grant).

Apparent there is concern among the student body that this will restrict their use of the facility. Dr. Hermiston notes, however, that this is not a concern. “I don’t see any restriction.” said Laframboise.

St. Denis Hall presently under construction

...and how it caused firsts

by Scott McCullough

The University of Windsor is not the only Ontario University that wants a new gym. There are plans afoot in Guelph for a similar complex.

With a mind to learning more about our new facility, the University of Guelph’s student newspaper, The Ontario, contacted John Laframboise, who ran the St. Denis Hall Fund drive and Students’ Administrative Council (SAC) vice-president Jim Shaban.

The result was “an article that was anything but positive,” in the words of Laframboise. The front page story, which criticized both SAC and the administration, included several quotes from Shaban, many of which he later denied saying. Ontario reporter Phil O’Hara quoted Shaban as saying “as much as everybody hates John Laframboise, he gets the job done.”

“Whatever I said,” countered Shaban, “was ‘John Laframboise has a job to do and he is doing it’. The SAC vice-president spoke highly of Laframboise in an interview with The Lance. “The man has shown his commitment. We’re lucky having him to do this (organize fund raising) for us.”

When The Lance talked with Laframboise, he in turn spoke well of Shaban. “I think very highly of Jim Shaban,” he said. “I feel badly that he was misquoted.” Laframboise received a letter from Shaban following the article’s publication, in which he denied making several of the statements O’Hara attributed to him and apologized for any inconvenience caused.

Shaban also wrote to The Ontario, but O’Hara refused to print his. “They’re trying to make a point,” Shaban ranted over the phone. “They’re trying to make a point.”

Laframboise’s comments as he declined to deal with the article. “Guelph can do without any comment.”

He did, however, express “Dave Simms (SAC president) in Guelph over the phone. I was very careful to get them in order.”

Shaban was indignant. “They’re trying to make a point.”

Shaban did admit there held here last year. “There’s a lot of smart in order.”

Shaban was indignant. “They’re trying to make a point.”

Shaban also pointed out that a fee might be charged for new facility, “It’s possible.”

Shaban did admit there held here last year. “We’ve paid in our tuition.”

Shaban was indignant. “We’ve paid in our tuition.”

The Ontario article alleged Shaban claimed Laframboise had talked with Provost Paul Gilmour of the Guelph administration about the new St. Denis Hall. The story went on to say that Laframboise denied this. He still does. "Is that who wrote the article?" he asked The Lance when questioned on the point. "I've never spoken with him. I've never heard of him... It's preposterous."

Shaban, however, said: "When they (The Ontario) talked to Laframboise, he hadn't (spoken to Gilmour) but when they talked to me, he had. I heard it in a passing conversation," he explained. "He was talking to a group of people and I was one of them."

At the time of publication of The Ontario article, Gilmour himself was unavailable for comment. Repeated attempts by The Lance to contact the man also proved unsuccessful.

The University of Guelph's new sports complex is still in the very early planning stages. There has not yet been a referendum held. It was the administration there that first initiated the idea, "but the students wanted a new gym," says Phil O'Hara. "We will sign a letter or an agreement with the administration," he adds.

The Ministry of Colleges and Universities was originally going to fund a new gym here in Windsor but the administration delayed so long the Ministry had decided not to fund any more new buildings before anything was really decided. The present project began with "a petition initiated by Jim Doyle with 500 signatures...enough to justify a referendum," said Shaban.

Another difference between the two projects is that "the City of Guelph is not being asked to kick in any money," according to Phil O'Hara, whereas the outside community has been involved in Windsor.

September, 1979. Students agree to pay $10 for ten years to build the new complex.
Sirens set to sing sweetly at SAC's

This is your first do-it-yourself pub band review, because Sirens began at SAC's on Thursday, and The Lance goes to press on Wednesday. It is unable to give you the lowdown on what to expect when you visit SAC's this weekend. Below the band's picture you will notice a list of songs that Sirens are rumoured to play. Using this inadequate supply of information, it will be up to you to referee the band for yourself. Anyone willing to go through with this absurd idea is asked to snap your "review" in a brown paper bag, and bring it up to The Lance office. Please make the bag "To the Entertainment Editor." Participants receive absolutely nothing. I'll be looking forward to those responses though, don't disappoint me!

No, it's not another beer festival. Cinefest, Windsor's new repertory theatre, aims to please the angler moviegoer. Cinefest gives one the chance to see all those movies that either never made it to Windsor, or that stayed two weeks and disappeared... If you think that Famous Players and Odeon have suddenly become altruistic and repeated for their miniscule offerings at maximum prices, you're wrong. If you look up in the sky tonight you will notice there is still only one moon up there and it is still made of cheese.

BATTLE BEYOND THE STARS

by Rosemary Comiso
"Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery" or so the adage goes, but Battle Beyond The Stars pushes this saying to the outer limits! Star Wars is not the only object of its name copycatting, though. The movie borrows from Blazing Saddles, Buck Rogers, Soap, The Rocky Horror Picture Show, and Frankenstein, to name just a few. There are enough stereotypes and cliches in this movie to supply a television network's season of situation comedies and melodramas for a year.

The plot is loosely based upon the good versus evil theme. An arch-villain, Sador (John Saxon) plans to destroy the peaceful planet of Azir unless someone can escape and get help to defend them. Shad, (Richard Thomas) our hero, valiantly volunteers to take an outdated spaceship and comb the galaxies to enlist mercenaries (as well as weapons) to save them. But, as we all know, a hero must have a heroine, and, what a coincidence, he meets her on the first planet he lands on! (Due to the poor soundtrack, her name sounded like Lea but it was too inaudible to be sure.) It doesn't take much to persuade Lea (Darlene Fluegel) to join him, nor does it take long for her to be captured by still another bad guy who resembles The Creature From The Black Lagoon. Not only is she spared from his scaly clothes, she also manages to employ him against the evil forces of Sador. The rest of Shad's army consists of a pistol-packing, twenty-first century cowboy; George Peppard; a despicable mercenary (Robert Vaughn); and a cast of alien beings that resembles a futuristic remake of The Wizard Of Oz.

The ensuing scenes are check-full of clack and dagger stabbings and knitted brows; and when all else fails (which is frequently does in this movie) there is an array of flashing computer lights, classic shots of space ships, and boring intergalactic warfare.

In its predictable ending, (which comes too soon), good triumphs over evil, some die so that others may live and boy gets girl. The only losers in The Battle Beyond The Stars it seems... is the audience.
QUEEN: Still champions of the rock world

by Neil Buhart

Last Saturday evening, with their numerous banks of moving and walking lights, smoke bombs, fog, colourful clothes and of course their wide range of music, Queen left usually coherent people saying "Wow man, what a great show!" Queen is not a band without pretension, so there was no surprise when clouds of smoke, coloured lights and music appropriate to the second coming of Christ opened the show. Yet it was a surprise to hear the chords of "Jailhouse Rock" and see Freddie Mercury appear on stage bouncing around like an over-exuberant Elvis Presley. By the third song Mercury had baptized the first few rows with water. When the cheering had died down, "Mustapha" began with its Asian strains, leading into a surprise when clouds of smoke, showing classical then spacey piano solo. Without missing a beat, exuberant Elvis Presley. By the duration of the show Queen reappeared among the dramatic highlight of the show Queen reappeared among the first few rows with water.

During "Get Down Make Love" the dramatic highlight of the show Queen reappeared among the first few rows with water.

Killer Queen" continued the show. For the duration of the evening, Freddie Mercury's vocals were almost flawless, Brian May's guitar raucous and the rhythm section steady. However, the light show was what really captivated their audience. During "Get Down Make Love" the scene set a bit like that in Godzilla meets the Creature clouds of smoke, wildly pulsating lights and a screaming guitar riff. Queen switched into high gear for their best rockers "Tell Your Mother Down." For the first encore, Mercury donned a hat and shuffled across the stage leading the audience in the Detroit Lions theme song, "Another One Bites The Dust." They came back for a second encore with a practically nude Freddie Mercury sitting atop Darth Vader's shoulders bearing out the rhythm of "We Will Rock You." Naturally that song was followed by the hymn to humility, "We Are The Champions." To the Partridge strains of "God Save The Queen" the show ended. The general consensus among people was that Queen provided the best stage show they had seen. Still, the show lacked a certain spontaneity. I had the impression that everything was scripted and that Queen were only actors brilliant in their roles, manipulating the audience. To pay such inflated ticket prices one should expect a more personal rendition of the music. I may be the only one of 15,000 patrons, but I think Queen gave their audience no more than a carefully scripted, well articulated but impersonal show.

Jeff Beck: There and Back
by John Liddell

This album does little more than to confirm the fact that Jeff Beck is indeed the greatest guitarist in the world. Although his songwriting capabilities are limited, at best, they depend on a melody to which he can weave his stirring guitar work in and out of. Beck can’t write, but don’t try and tell me that someone else doesn’t write his guitar solos for him.

The first side has Beck duelling with Jan Hammer. They’ve played together many times before, and on this album they meet with equal success. Hammer’s rapid keyboard pace forces Beck to his limits. And does he respond! “El Becko” is a tour de force through all the variations of new rockish quality with the horns, drums, and bass player. “Hold On” is the title track, “Hot Spikes,” has got to be among the raunchiest rock and roll rendered in recent years. The husky voice of Cherrier gives the heavy metal sound added “measurability.” Drunking beer, getting high, now my brain is perenniallypercified. Hard to live and quick to die. I’m a rock ‘n roll suicide. I’m a real case, man. One tends to believe him. “Money” and “Rock and Roll Suicide” also survive on lead guitar and a forceful drumbeat.

The band has another side too. Songs such as “Aluminum,” “Never Coming Back” and “It’s A Sin” are all a little faster, with more of a tune and less pounding. Nysson’s voice at times is close to that of Rick Derringer. The best tune on the album is “Lord I Miss You.” Featuring a keyboard introduction, heavy but not deadening guitar work and smooth, harmonious vocals. This track becomes a testimony of the capabilities of FIST.

Linda Staudt, the petite long-distance phenom from the University of Windsor, won the women's four kilometre race at the University of Western Ontario's Invitation cross country meet last Saturday in London. Staudt's time for the race was 16 minutes, 17 seconds.

The 21-year-old, fourth year Human Kinetics student was also a winner at the Avon 20 kilometre (12.4 mile) race held on Sept. 13th of this year. She took that win in record time, one hour, 10 minutes and 39 seconds, over three minutes better than the old mark. Kathy Pace, a top-class competitor in the throwing events for the University of Windsor who will be competing again this year, will work with the young women.

A few of the top performers on the track according to Salter will be Andy Buckstein who won both the 100 and 200 metres in the OUAA finals two years ago while competing for York. Buckstein has moved up to the 400 and should have a good chance for a medal at that distance.

Paul Roberts, who failed to finish in the Western meet, is given high hopes for an OUAA gold medal in the steeple-chase. Roberts is presently ranked ninth in Canada for that event, being the youngest of the nine.

Besides Staudt, who is almost assured of a first or second place finish in the 1,500 and 3,000 metre races, high jumper Sandee Carson should be one of the Lancerette threats to win a medal. Carson was third in the event at the Canadian junior championships this summer.

As well, Carson will compete in a relatively new event for women, the heptathlon. Says Salter, "Sandee is a fine athlete and she has the ability to go to the national level and possibly beyond in this event."

The cross country team will compete in the Springbank International Road Races in London on Sunday while the University of Windsor invitation track and field meet will be held here on Sat., Oct. 4 at the south campus track.

Campus Recreation is once again offering a Judo Program for the 1980-81 season, for which faculty members and day and part-time students are all invited to participate. Come on out and discover the art in the Dojo (Judo classroom) next to Sac's Pub on Tues., Sept. 30 at 9 pm. The entry fee is $10 per person.

The league is sponsored by the Windsor Ladies Basketball Association and runs every Tuesday night from 7:00 to 9:00 pm in the Dojo (Judo classroom) which is in the Combinative Room beneath St. Denis Hall. The charge for these workouts is covered by your athletic fees and tuition money. For more information, contact the Campus Rec "Hotline" at 253-4232, Ext. 325.

With 19 members this year's team is "perhaps a little larger than usual," according to coach Dr. Michael Salter. "I don't know if the building (new HK building) has something to do with it," said Salter, "or whether people just decided to come out."

Salter is one of four coaches who will instruct the team. Enry McBride and Bob Maffoux, both coaches with the Windsor Knights of Columbus Track Club, bring a depth of experience to the team while Kathy Pace, a top-class competitor in the throwing events for the University of Windsor who will be competing again this year will work with the young women.

Miljkovic: little man with a big foot

by Steve Rice
Lancer Sports Editor

The talk around the south campus field Saturday was not predominantly the fact that the Lancers had just run away with their first win of the season 32-17 over the Waterloo Warriors.

Part of the talk centred around a 48-yard field goal that came off the foot of "that little number 29." That five foot, six inch titan is none other than Zoran Miljkovic (pronounced Milk-o-vice), or Biz "Z," as he is affectionately called by coaches and teammates, and he comes with the promise of adding a real boot to the Lancers' kicking game.

"His high school coach wrote me a letter," recalled Lancer head coach Gino Fracas, "and he said he had a boy who was consistent from inside the 35 (yard line) and not bad from outside that. Fortunately for us he tried out."

Fracas feels that Miljkovic will be a "big bonus" for the offense, and that means points on the scoreboard.

"He's very poised and very cool," Fracas said. "A very valuable acquisition. He's going to score a lot of points for us."

Already Miljkovic has 16 points to his credit. He accounted for all four points (a 34-yard field goal and a 43-yard single) in Windsor's 15-4 loss to Western, and added 12 points (three field goals and three converts) against Waterloo.

Miljkovic, who was born in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, is in his first year of Business at the university after attending high school at Chatham Collegiate Institute (CCI) in Chatham.

While there he played soccer with Chatham City, the top team in town, and thus acquired his "soccer style" of kicking. With encouragement from his brother, who was already on the football team, and bolstered by his own self-confidence he took over the kicking chores for CCI during his last two years at school.

Of the 48-yard field goal, "Z" states with perfect aplomb, "It's my longest, so far. I plan to beat it."

The current Lancer record is a 52-yard blast by Dave Peg just three years ago. With Miljkovic, that mark could be in serious jeopardy.

"I think I'm a lot better than last year," Miljkovic said. "I used to just start kicking when the season started, but I worked out with weights on my legs and kicked every day all summer.

That more serious attitude will undoubtedly continue to help the Lancers chase down a playoff spot. And it will probably go a long way to helping "Z"'s future in football.

"I want to get my B.A. in Business, but I want to work on football, too. I have aspirations of playing professional football, but I don't think I've reached my potential yet. I can see myself getting better every day."

At that rate, what are we to expect when "Z" makes it to his final year at Windsor?

Lancers can expect a real scrap from Yoemen

by Steve Rice

The Lancers' 15-4 loss to Western Mustangs on opening day at least gave assurances that the defense would be a strong point in the team's favour.

And a 32-17 romp over the Waterloo Warriors Saturday indicated that the offense, under the direction of rookie quarterback Rob Dalley, has the capability to score points, both through the air and on the ground—or off the toe of place-kicker Zoran Miljkovic.

But Lancer head coach Gino Fracas, praised by adversary Frank Cosentino (York coach) for the "sophisticated" and complicated tactics that his teams employ, is not satisfied that everything is in working order yet.

"It's hard to pick out one area of weakness because I feel there's so much still to be done," explained Fracas in an interview Tuesday.

"We've shown that we're very good against the run, but I think Waterloo completed too many passes against us. We have to work on our pass defense. "Punt coverage and kickoff returns are another area of weakness. Too often we're allowing the opposition to get long runbacks and good field position, whereas our own returns have not been good.

On the whole, though, Fracas admits that he has seen some very positive things from his young chargers.

"We may not have been ready to play football in the first half of the Waterston game, but we started to move the ball in the second half. Rob Dalley is coming along real well, Jim Staniski had a good day running the ball and, of course, Craig Mallender performed well when called upon."

Saturday the Lancers will play host to an upstart York Yeomen team who last week knocked off the powerful Western Mustangs 30-23. Fracas expects a good game.

"We're going to have our hands full with York. They're an aggressive bunch of guys. Frank Cosentino (York coach) has brought them to a level of competitiveness they've never been at. I mean, they beat us last year and Western this year, so you know they'll be tough."

The Yeomen scratched out their second straight 4-3 record last year and will maintain some stability on defense this year with returning all-Canadian defensive back Angelo Kiousis. The Yeomen also have strength on the offensive line with OUA all-star Steve Shubat.

"I expect York will mix their running and passing game. We're just going to prepare day by day, give the guys a good game plan and hope they execute it well Saturday."

Despite the fact that the Lancers now have two games under their belt, Fracas remains reluctant to make predictions on the team's chances of making one of the four playoff spots in the eight team conference.

"I don't think we've reached near our potential. But this is a team which I feel is going to get better each week. I'm happy with the progress so far and in one or two weeks I may see something which will make me more outspoken about our opportunities."

The Windsor Lancers entered Saturday's Ontario Universities Athletic Association battle with the Waterloo Warriors looking for some offense.

Two quarters into the game, they still had not found it, but they did find themselves on the short end of a 7-5 score.

Then, at 2:47 of the third period, rookie quarterback Rob Dalley entered what had until then been virgin territory for the Lancers this season—the end zone.

He performed the feat on a 1-yard plunge and once he proved that the ground was safe to walk on, it seemed that everyone wanted part of the action. Just over three minutes later, tight end Wyatt Clark accepted a nine-yard pass from Dalley for the major score and, added to a similar 6-yard transaction with Todd Haskell early in the fourth quarter, the Lancers brought themselves their first win of the young season, 32-17.

First half points were provided by placekicker Zoran Miljkovic on a spectacular 48-yard field goal, and on a safety when Bob Bridgeman tackled Waterloo quarterback Bob Pronyk in the end zone.

Miljkovic hit on field goals of 33 and 13 yards in the fourth quarter to complete the scoring.

Waterloo scored touchdowns on a 17-yard pass to Paul Guarniera in the second quarter and a 19-yard pass and run play to Dave Goodwin with less than 30 seconds remaining in the game.

Eric Thomas kicked a 26-yard goal for the Warriors' other score.

"I don't know what was wrong with us in the first half," said Lancers' head coach Gene Franca. "We may not have been ready to play, but we started to move the ball in the second half. I'm pleased with Dalley. He's coming along nicely."

Dalley, who completed 12 of 22 passes for 179 yards, will remain as the starter now that Scott Mal lend, last year's HeCrighton Trophy winner, has failed in his bid to reinstate.

Although Windsor equalled Waterloo's 196 yards in the air, the rough Lancer defense pushed them back for minus 19 yards on the ground and no first downs rushing.

"That has to be a record for Waterloo teams," said Warriors' coach Wally Delahoy. "We gambled a lot in the first half and we were fortunate. But Windsor countered our gambling in the third quarter and effectively shut us down."

The Warriors, who will meet Western next Saturday in London, were upset 10-8 by a week McMaster club opening day.

"Mac is the pits," said Delahoy, recalling the game with disgust. "They won't win another game. We played a great game between the 25-yard lines, but we just couldn't put it over. I guess we're shy some talent."

The Warriors do have one heap of talent in 6'2" 220 lb. all-Canadian tight end Bill Boug.

He was Pronyk's favorite target against Windsor with 129 yards on 10 receptions.

"He's really good and very confident of his own ability Delahoy said. "He does a downhill job for us."

The university's 34th convocation will be held tomorrow at 3:00 p.m. This year, as always, the ceremony will take place outdoors, in the area between Dillon Hall and Windsor Hall Tower, with St. Denis Hall Gym serving as the alternate site in case of rain. Last year, as this picture shows, the bright sun caused at least one new scholar to make his programme into a functional mortarboard.

Centre Director wants to draw students back

by Wendy Coomber

"It's very difficult to come into a situation when you didn't create it," said Randy Johnston, new Centre Director, about Centre renovations in an interview Monday. Johnston has only been on the campus for a week and is still in the process of assessing the progress of the Centre's face-lift. It'll look better when it's finished, he said. The Centre's original design, he added, was just an excuse for a big cafeteria.

Johnston hopes that the renovations will be completed by October 15. "My main priority is to get the renovations finished and draw the students back," he said. The Centre Director feels construction going on in the Centre to complete the renovations is turning students away because they don't know what's going on.

When asked about the possibility of a merger, David Simmons, Students' Administrative Council (SAC) President at this university commented "Most people are still hesitant about it (the idea of a merger). The real decision will be made at the NHS National Conference on the weekend of October 17-19." Several motions were passed at the conference. Plans for a follow-up to last year's march on Queen's Park are in the offing, and in an Appendix to an OFS document (titled "Tactical Proposals in Chronological Order"), the OFS makes it clear that its voice is to be heard in the Ontario Legislative Assembly this year.

Accountants get acquainted

Dr. George Neal, chairman of the accounting area in the Faculty of Business Administration announces the twelfth annual C.A. Get Acquainted Night is scheduled for Thursday, October 9, 1980 from 8:30 p.m. to midnight in the Ambassador Auditorium. All prospective graduates anticipating employment with C.A. firms within the next twelve months are cordially invited to attend.

Actually, the event is not an interviewing session. Rather, it is a “break-the-ice” occasion for students to meet and mingle with practitioners chartered accountants in local and regional areas. There is, however, a “morning after” session, also in Ambassador on Friday, October
10, from 9:00 to 11:30 am.

During this session, C.A.s will be on hand. So, Dr. Neal and his faculty colleagues, together with the Accounting Society and the Commerce Club, urge you to come on out and enjoy refreshments and chat with the guys and ladies who know first hand what the career profession is all about.

Cousteau upstaged

by Debbie Staley

It looks as though the "Calyups" crew is soon to have new rivals, because this year's Aqua Space '80 will be better than ever.

Aqua Space '80 is an underwater film and slide presentation which has been held at the university for the past four years. The show covers a wide range of topics extending from underwater photography to whale and manatee research reports. The show also includes workshops, which illustrate various techniques used in underwater research.

The presentation is organized by the Aera club, which was organized through the efforts of Dale Woodyard, an assistant professor of Psychology at the University of Windsor. Presently, Mr. Woodyard is on sabbatical to complete a research paper.

The Windsor branch of the Aera club consists of approximately 25 regular members, ten of which are from the university.

In a telephone interview with Dan Dalziel, a member of the club, stated the club is having some financial problems. Dalziel said last year's presentation broke even while previous shows resulted in debt.

According to Dalziel, this poor record is due to the fact that the presentation is dependent on the ticket sales, which oftentimes do not come. Another factor is the high costs involved in getting knowledgeable speakers. Dalziel stated that because of this added expense, they had to "tone it down" this year. Regardless of this problem, the show itself has retained the quality of previous presentations.

This year's Aqua Space '80 will be held on October 9, at 8:00 p.m., in the Math Building, and is sure to be a "whale" of a time.

Floats to sail again

The office of Student Services this week announced plans to hold a 1980 Homecoming parade on October 18, 1980 from 11:00 a.m. until noon. This is the first time the parade will be held since 1975 when the University was forced to cancel the event. In order to re-institute the parade, Student Services has established the following guidelines for the production of the floats and the conduct of the participants:

1. Guidelines
   (a) Alcoholic beverages will not be allowed on or associated with any float. Complimentary beverage tickets will be made available to float participants for redemption at the Alumni Barbecue following the parade. The barbecue will be held on the Human Kinetics Building terrace from noon until 5:00 p.m.
   (b) All float submission contact persons will be responsible for ensuring that float materials are not discarded on route and that floats are removed from the campus within the day.
   (c) One representative float submission from each residence society, etc. will be permitted.
   (d) The name of the representative float from each group must be clearly visible for judging purposes.

2. Route and Assembly
   (a) The assembly point will be on Huron Lime between University Avenue and Riverside Drive. The Windsor Police Department will have this area blocked off between 9:00 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. on Saturday, October 18, 1980 for final formation and assembly purposes.
   (b) The route will be from the Assembly area along University Avenue to Campbell, north on Campbell to Wyandotte Street, west on Wyandotte Street to Huron Lime; south on Huron Lime to Riverside Drive, ending in Lea M. (next to Assumption Church) of the university.
   (c) Members of SAC and Resident Assistants will monitor the parade on route.

3. Application
   (b) All float submission contact persons will be notified directly through the contact persons. The Homecoming Committee reserves the right to cancel the parade if the quality of the floats are not up to acceptable standards.

4. Judging and Prizes
   A judging booth will be set up at a predetermined point along the parade route. Prizes will be awarded for the best three floats and presented during the half-time ceremonies at the football game.

Drug plan

All full-time undergraduate students have paid (at registration) a $5.00 fee for their student drug plan.

This means, that you are now insured for the following benefits and services:

1. Accidental Death and Disability - $2,000.
2. Reimbursement for Drugs and Supplies Benefit—subject to a $1.00 deductible per prescription. Contraceptives are not covered.
3. Reimbursement for Professional Services Benefit (Special Nursing Services, Dental Services (accidental), physiotherapy, Ambulance Service, Diagnostic Procedures and Para-Medical Services.)

The coverage period is from September 10 1980 to May 2, 1981. Claim forms are available at the SAC office. You must attach your receipts to the claim form.

Now... THE TASTE OF PLAYERS IN AN EXTRA LIGHT CIGARETTE.
Students council's mealy-stipend insufficient

Every time a referendum comes up, the students at this university seem to face the dollar figure first and the potential benefits second. The two possible exceptions to this rule are the St. Denis Hall referendum and the Legal Aid referendum.

But when a referendum for the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) comes up, the students seem to be, to put it mildly, unwilling to pay for the services they receive.

For the past eleven years, the students at this university have been paying (let's face it) ridiculously low activity fees. While the average payment in this province at universities is $50.00, the students at this fine institution are paying a mere $15.00.

Out of this $22.50, SAC has to fund all the activities, all the societies, and all the mediums at the university.

And while $22.50 may seem to be a staggering fee to some students, consider this: SAC is an incorporated body. It receives the same lines as any other money-makers. Venture this: it does not make money. And an organization such as SAC can only remain so long as a deficit before it goes bankrupt. Look at the Chrysler Corporation. Perhaps it may be hard to compare SAC to the Chrysler Corporation, but the basic business principles are the same. You can't go along year after year losing money and expect to run for any length of time.

SAC does not intentionally go about losing money. Rather, it has obligations to meet. Obligations to you, the students of this campus. Unit of all the money that it takes in, you, collectively, demand a certain number of functions, a certain standard of services, and a certain amount of information passed on through the medium of the student press, through CJAM and The Lance.

While the cost of these services and its methods has been steadily increasing through the years, the SAC referendum for more funds has been just as steadily defeated.

It's about time the students on this campus stood up and took stock. Are you getting your $22.50 worth? At least that, and more.

If you had to pay anywhere else for what you get from SAC, the bill would be far above the $22.50 you now pay.

The bottom line is that if you're not willing to pay for what you receive now, the goods and services you now enjoy will no longer be available. And it will not be the fault of SAC.

They can no longer afford to provide for the students of the type of service that they are now enjoying. Look at the mealy-stipend on which they now exist. SAC has been taking action on your behalf for the last fifty years.

Now it's time for you to do something for them. That means you'll be doing something for yourself.

Give CJAM referendum money - on one condition

This is a qualified editorial. It will come out in favor of something and will do so with some reluctance. Some might call it wishy-washy, but painfully honest might be more apt.

CJAM, our campus student radio station, is trying, via the October referendum, to get direct financial support from students to the tune of five dollars a year. With enrollment around 6,000, that referendum, if successful, would guarantee the station $30,000 a year.

Do they need the money? That can be answered with a loud "definitely!". Most of the equipment at the station is in bad, if not unusable, shape.

In addition, some parts of the campus cannot even listen to the station because they are not directly wired to the station (as they must be since CJAM operates on a carrier current utilizing Bell lines). Further, it is obvious that SAC can no longer afford to support the station. In the past several years, SAC has nickel and dimed CJAM, giving it about $6,000 a year to operate on.

That is a nice little sum, but radio is expensive and the money proved to be insufficient for improving the station. With SAC likely operating on a deficit budget this year, it is totally impossible for the council to support CJAM again this year.

Now that we have established the fact that the station needs the money, a major question remains: Does CJAM deserve five dollars from every student on this campus? This is where the editorial going gets rough. A good number of Lance staff members replied in the negative when asked this week by yours truly, the editor, whether the newspaper should support CJAM's request for direct student funding. The majority of staff members said we should support the station, but even they could not deny some of the reasons the others had for voting not to support CJAM.

CJAM has been managed by some petty, bush people in the past few years. They squandered the money that SAC could never really afford to give the station. It is an amateur effort in the worst sense of the word, with no fresh ideas, no large amounts of static and dead air.

This year, however, all that can change. Grant Gelines is a good station manager with the drive to get things changed. He knows the lark is money, he must learn, but he should realize one thing before he gets that... he should realize that if students are going to give the station $30,000 a year, they had better be getting a quality FM station in return. He should also know that if that change does not come about, the student press will demand and this campus should have the right to rescind a mealy-stipend result.

It is do or die for CJAM this year. The station must win the referendum this month and get an FM licence by the end of the year.

Otherwise, CJAM will have betrayed our faith.

 Though this, the second editorial, is usually a personal, signed one, this week it constitutes a staff-supported editorial. This is the first one.

"The principle of democracy is the right of choice, but also, and more important, it is the burden of choice - the responsibility of standing up and being counted." - M. Grattan O'Leary

In an attempt to uncover the reasons behind Dr. Allan's termination, The Lance has spent many hours on the phone to an assortment of people, who should know the reasons behind the departure. But all the phone calls were for naught, nobody would say anything in the first place.

The careful wording of the statement leads me to think that the reasons behind the dismissal are unanswerable. "I have agreed to terms," in my estimation is another way of saying, "you're fired." Usually when a high ranking official is terminated for whatever reason, the employer issues a detailed statement in an attempt to cover the institution and absolve it of any blame, for anything the employee might have done.

Because no details were released and President Franklin has not quelled any of the rumours on campus, the logical explanation is that the underlying reasons for Dr. Allan's departure, if made public, could cause embarrassment to one or both parties. If the dismissal is due in any way to any type of criminal act or if there was a high level disagreement between the two top ranking officials, it would be improper to speak of the reasons behind the departure.

Freedom of information is a right not a privilege, especially in the case of sensitive topics like this one. The public, not necessarily the University of Windsor, are the ones entitled to this information. The public, not necessarily the University of Windsor, are the ones entitled to this information.

As past events have shown, cover-ups may solve the problem now, but they have the tendency of rearing their heads in the not too distant future. If there has been a cover-up in this instance, eventually it will surface and cause more harm than if the reasons were revealed now.

Dear Editor,

Please accept this letter as an opening letter to the students of the University of Windsor.

Some 20 years ago, all across North America, students rose from their 1950s apathy to fight for the right to help determine their own future. They sought independent student representatives on the governing bodies of their universities, sought independent student media on campus; they fought—and they won.

Inflation has been rampant. The economic facts of our times are blunt. It is our challenge, not from the university administration but from the economic facts of our times, to serve our needs; and two independent, student owned and operated mediums, The Lance and CJAM Radio.

Ten to 15 years ago, such medium might be frowned upon by the administration, forced into underground status by the powers-that-be. Now, our mediums have been established as an accepted part of the university community—with so much so that the majority of students take these gains for granted and forget the struggle that produced student representation and independent student voices.

On this October 14 and 15, one of our independent student voices faces a life-or-death challenge, not from the university administration but from the economic facts of our times. Our SAC has not had an increase in fees in 11 years meanwhile, inflation has been rampant. SAC simply can no longer afford to support all the services it has provided in the past, at least, not without a fee increase. For most of these services, a referendum will be held to ask students for $5.00 additional per semester. Separately, but on the same two days, students will be asked for $2.50 per semester in support of CJAM, your student radio station.

What will this $2.50 get you? Right now, the radio station broadcasts or is on closed circuit to five residences, Vanier, the University Centre, the Pub and Human Kinetics. Part of the money received will go to capital expenditures in order to reach even more students and provide all students with better sound and better service.

CJAM is in the process of applying for an FM broadcasting licence in order to provide service to all students, both on and off campus. This is a long process, with some expense involved, and, when completed, will require studio renovations and a new transmitter. Again, this is an area where student funds would be applied.

Last year, CJAM's Sports Team broadcast live and direct from the Lancers' game for the Canadian Basketball Championship played in Calgary, Alberta. This was done on a very low budget and with helpful sponsorship from the Ford Motor Company and CBC Radio. Other special programs features also were provided throughout the season and are planned again this year.

The idea is to provide the students with an honest, individual voice, unaffected by non-student influences, and to do so as economically as possible. If the students, and that's you and me, vote "no" to this minimal tariff, then SAC must assume that the students no longer feel the need to have their own voice on campus and will close CJAM for good.

Can we afford to lose one of our independent student voices for the price of two and a half beers?

Right now, more than one hundred students, including all the station management, are working to provide the music, the special programs, the news and information that you as students want to hear. A small amount from you each semester will enable this volunteer staff to provide vastly better service to all students at this university through a capital expansion program. Failure to vote "yes" will not only stifle but kill this voice.

Economically as possible. If the students, and that's you and me, vote "no" to this minimal tariff, then SAC must assume that the students no longer feel the need to have their own voice on campus and will close CJAM for good.

Can we afford to lose one of our independent student voices for the price of two and a half beers?

Dear Editor,

The editorial page of September 26th began with the following words: "The principle of democracy is the right of choice, but also, and more important..." Tell me why you print Senator O'Leary's teachings and thus support a motion to remove students as full voting members of the Promotion and Tenure Committees of the U. of W.? If your only reason for supporting J.T. Culliton's motion is to avoid the anguish of the "the only dissenter in the crowd", I beg you to have more respect for Senator O'Leary's wise words or cease printing them in your paper. Editor's Note: The Lance did not last week, nor does it now, support Culliton's Motion. Rather, it would have the student rep., as a full member of the P & T Committee—a fact which Mr. McGuire seems to have missed.

CJAM appeals for your vote in the referendum

Dear Editor,

We would like to take issue with Father Culliton and the editor of The Lance on the topic of student representation of the promotion and tenure committees. Both make some rather rash assumptions about professors and students.

First, they assume that faculty members are not sincerely interested individuals who would mail anyone to the wall who disagrees with them. In reality, they are professionals who are used to dealing with differences of opinion by debate, not by by corruption.

Second, they assume that students are growing wimps who would say "yes" to anything to protect their own self-interests. In reality, the student rep. wants good faculty hired and promoted as much as the other faculty members. He or she also wants to keep our incompetents and prevent too rapid promotion.

Third, Father Culliton assumes that students are in-capable of handling the "mental anguish" associated with the promotion and tenure meetings. This paternalistic stance pats us on the head and says, "I'm doing this for your own good!"

Father Culliton's motion before the senate is not without some merit. If student representation is to continue on the P and T committee, a student represents maturity, integrity, and an openness to reason and debate is required. He must also have the courage to go against the grain, if necessary. Such representation requires a student body interested enough to elect such a representative.

Father Culliton also correctly emphasizes the importance of this committee. I know, because this is my second year as student rep. to the P and T committee, and my third rep. to the faculty council.

Drinking and driving is not a clever concoction

by Steve Roberts

It is Friday night and rumour has it that there is a good band at SAC’s, so you arrive at 8:00 p.m., and begin quaffing a couple of beers. By 9:00 p.m., you have had three beers and the band begins. During their first set you notice that they are not as good as the rumour made them out to be. Therefore you slowly sip on your fourth beer and decide to leave and attempt to get home before 10:00 p.m.

You proceed down University Avenue and notice a car following you, so you slow down and attempt to drive cautiously. The red lights flash and you pull over. The officer asks for your licence, you have some trouble finding it but manage to get it out for him. He asks if you have been drinking and, relying on the sincere approach, you reply that after studying The major problem is that society does not perceive the community to be a good band. As a result, they do not think you are capable of impairing the driving of a motor vehicle.

Is it a crime? The area of law related to motor vehicles is divided between the Federal and Provincial governments.

The Province of Ontario regulates the use of its highways through The Highway Traffic Act of Ontario, as well as the drinking while under the influence, careless driving) but in all seriousness, offenses (i.e., drinking and driving) that are regulated by the Federal Government in the Criminal Code (Canada). Yes, the same Criminal Code that also deals with murder, rape, theft and other crimes regulates the law related to drinking and driving.

Therefore, drinking and driving is a criminal offense and a conviction would leave you with a criminal record. The major problem is that society does not perceive the drunk driver as a criminal because he is only doing what a lot of the rest of us do but don’t get caught doing. Society has not used the use of alcohol and encourages us to drive, two very legal activities but when combined they become very illegal and possibly lethal.

The Courts

The Criminal Code defines conduct which is criminally in general terms and leaves it up to the judges to interpret these general terms and apply them to each specific case. The judge has broad discretion to deal with each case and usually in making his decision he will look at decisions made by other judges in similar circumstances. But the judge is in no way limited to following past decisions and it is very possible for two judges to interpret the same section differently.

A prime example of this occurred recently here in Windsor. The Crown Prosecutor decided to begin asking for stiffer penalties for drinking and driving offenses and, as a result, two first offenders were given jail sentences.

It might not appear fair that several months ago the penalty would have only been a fine, but those are the facts. The range of penalties for these offenses varies from a $50.00 fine to six months in jail for first offenders with second offenders facing up to two years in jail.

The Charges

1. Impaired Driving: Driving (or care and control) of a motor vehicle while ability to drive is impaired by alcohol or drug.

The major elements of this offense are:

a) This must be a voluntary undertaking. Example: your dentist gives you a drug and does not inform you of its adverse side effects; therefore you are not voluntarily impairing your ability to drive.

b) "care and control" is defined as having the intent to put a motor vehicle in motion, sitting behind the wheel with the keys in the ignition could be enough even if the car is not started. (As a result, sleep it off in the back seat.)

c) "alcohol or drug" includes any combination of the two.

Example: a beer and an antibiotic may result in impaired ability and if taken voluntarily would be within the offense.

d) Proof could be obtained by blood, wine or breath samples or evidence based on the accused’s appearance and performance of physical tests.

2. Refusal to provide (or refusing to accompany an officer for the purpose of providing) a sample of breath suitable for analysis on a roadside tester (i.e. A.L.E.R.T.)

3. Refusal to comply with a demand of a police officer to provide samples of breath as are necessary for a proper analysis to be made of the proportion of alcohol in the breath or blood (or failing to accompany an officer to place where such tests can be conducted.)

The major elements of this offense are:

a) The officer must have reasonable and probable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of impaired driving or blowing over .08 before he can make a legal demand for a breath sample.

b) Failure or refusal could result from not giving suitable samples (i.e. short puffs) or only giving one sample (two are required for proper test) or by not accompanying the officer to the station or any other similar unwilling action.

c) The accused may provide a reasonable excuse for not complying with the demand. Example: a request to speak with a lawyer. NOTE: you are only allowed to speak to a lawyer, this cannot be used as a stalling device. Therefore, you won’t be allowed to wait for your lawyer to appear since it is required that the test be taken within two hours of the alleged offense. This area is very complex and one should be careful in refusing since what you believe to be a reasonable excuse may not be accepted by the judge.

4. Blowing over .08: Driving (or care and control) of a motor vehicle after having consumed alcohol in such quantity that the proportion thereof in your blood exceeds 80 milligrams of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood (80 millilitres = .08%.)

There are some defenses to this charge by claiming that the test sample was not taken properly (i.e. was not taken within two hours of the alleged offense or there were not two samples taken). Evidence may also be introduced contrary to

Seminars: the not so secret things to know

by Scott McCullen

"Doing Your First Seminar" is the title of Assistant Dean of Students Carol Baker's first Studentship lecture, which she will be giving on Wednesday, October 8 in Vanier Lounge at noon and at 5:30.

"I'm doing this," explained Ms. Baker in an interview, "as I've seen so many students devastated because of not knowing how to prepare for a seminar and being afraid of public speaking.

Baker herself graduated from the University of Windsor in 1977 with an honours degree in history. She received a scholarship to do her masters but dropped out after three weeks to head for Europe, landing instead in Zurich, where she worked for the defense department for two years. En route to Calgary in August of 1979, a two day visit here in Windsor turned into an extended stay. She assumed her present position in May of 1980.

"I'm not really very comfortable with public speaking myself," Baker admitted, "but I can identify with students who get nervous. If you know your subject matter well enough, though, are interested in it, and set things up logically, you should do very well."

"I just want to get a few basic points across," said Baker. "Every seminarian is different and every discipline is different. That's why I'll stick to the basics. Among those basics are such things as "Don't use quotes if you don't know what they mean" and "Avoid plagiarism". Advice that applies to written essays as well as seminars. "Most professors usually ask for a seminar paper," Baker explains, "and it's so much doing an excellent seminar and a crummy paper."

The Assistant Dean of Students stressed the importance of choosing a seminar topic in which you are interested. "It's that much easier," she said. "Also, if you're bored with it no one else will be interested either. If you can't find anything interesting on the list of topics handed out, think of your own if your prof will approve it."

Another crucial point, in Baker's opinion, is limiting the topic to something that's not too unwieldy. "Narrow it down, be specific and you won't get lost," is her advice. "What most professors want is an argument presented logically and coherently. If you try to cover too much, you'll leave gaps and have trouble defending yourself."

"I also want to get across the importance of knowing the library," Baker said. "Use the library pathfinders, the journals, the abstracts, the microfilms. Don't rely on old books. Avoid doing too much research though."

Ms. Baker also cautioned against the use of audiovisual equipment. "Avoid it unless you really know what you're doing. If something goes wrong it can ruin everything."

Hand-outs are better."

"I haven't got any secrets," Baker admitted frankly, "a lot of it is reminders of what they've already heard in high school."

Ms. Baker's other duties as Assistant Dean include career guidance and personal counselling, which she said she enjoys most, and doing surveys.

Need a ride to class?

Students, are you tired of taking the bus? Are you upset because you have no one to share gas expenses with you? SAC can now help you out with the new car pool.

If you are looking for a ride to school or if you are looking for someone to ride in your car, come to the SAC office and fill in a local car pool application.

In the future, she hopes to get more involved in Orientation. "SAC does a good job on the orientation, but at Rochester, the administration has a whole Orientation department. We need to get away from just tables in the centre."

A survey on Orientation was recently conducted on campus and Baker said "We got some very good suggestions."

This form will indicate whether you are looking for a ride or need one and will last your arrival and departure times from main campus, Monday to Friday. If you are trying to save money, conserving energy or just avoiding long bus rides, come up and see us. It's a great way to meet new people too.

Ties the knot

"They've also done studies on student unemployment, foreign student problems, and they're currently working on the rights of professional students."

The issue of professional students (those in the faculties of Law, Business Administration, Engineering, and Medicine, to name a few) were of particular interest to the Windsor delegates to the last OFS conference.

"We were very interested in the rights of professional students, who tend to be underrepresented in student bodies such as these," said Simmons. "We (U of W SAC) sponsored quite a number of motions that dealt directly with professional students. For instance, Nursing students and others like them are not paid for the time that they must spend, as part of their degree requirement, interning in hospitals. We think this is unfair."

Negotiations between OFS and NUS continue towards a possible merger later this year.

Public awareness of health hazards needed

by Wendy Coomber

In the midst of one of the few perfect days we had left of summer emerged the murky specter of environmental pollution and health hazards.

Dr. Maxine Holder-Franklin did not want to spoil the day "with such heavy words" but, owing to the topic of the lecture she was giving at Assumption University this Wednesday, she couldn't really help it. Dr. Holder-Franklin spoke on "Environmental Health Hazards: Is the Public Forcibly Exposed to Man-Made Chemicals?"

"In the face of ignorance we must develop knowledge," she said, raising the question, "What about the chemicals we cannot detect?"

She said people are adapted to the sacrifice of their individual freedom due to our many laws and industrialists take advantage of this view. Foreign students are doing, nor do they know what the large industries are doing, nor do they care. She says pollution in this area has become an accepted fact of life.

Another problem she cited was that biological research has not kept pace with the manufacturing of chemicals. What is frightening, she said, is that many people, scientists included, know very little about these chemicals and how they interact with other chemicals in the atmosphere.

The Doctor earned her BA and completed her PhD. at McGill. Currently she is adjunct professor of Biology at the University of Windsor.

Dr. Holder-Franklin insisted the main problem rested with the majority of the public who neither know what the large industries are doing, nor do they care. She says pollution in this area has become an accepted fact of life.

SAC used book sale declared a success this year

by Joan Butler

Despite a late start, the Students' Administrative Council's Used Book Sale had sales of approximately $1,000, said President David Simmons. The book sale was held in Extension Lounge of the University Centre September 10 to 26. It was to start earlier but, at the last minute, Brad Mitchell, Vice-President of Finance, who was in charge of it, could not complete his commitment.

Simmons said they decided to go ahead with it anyway as it would "provide such a good service to students, we couldn't let it go down the drain." There were only three books sold the first day, but by the end of the second week sales had reached "close to $800," said Simmons. He feels the late start resulted in a loss of sales because many students had already been to class, knew the required texts, and purchased them at the bookstore.

He added that because books change so often students find it hard to sell and buy books. Social sciences texts were the biggest sellers, while there was a shortage of nursing, law and engineering books. The reason for this, said Simmons, is these students "keep their books", but he would like to see more of them brought in. Simmons said, "SAC didn't expect anything big... it was a tryout so we never set any goals." He was, however, pleased with the results and said, "we will have one again in January."

He feels the next one will be more successful because they would advertise and start earlier, giving students the opportunity to see if the books they need are available. "They can buy them here at a lower cost," he said. Of course, he added, the success "depends on people who bring in books to sell." SAC retains 15 per cent of the selling price as a service charge but, said Simmons, "what we make goes directly back to the students." He said, "We try to discourage people from charging too high a price," suggesting they deduct 25 per cent of the original cost.

This was the second attempt by SAC to have a used book sale, the first one, about five years ago, "was a failure," said Simmons. He said, "It wasn't planned properly and books were stolen because of improper security."

Mr. Simmons referred to the book sale at the University of Guelph last year to indicate how successful they can be. He said they made a $10,000 profit, charging a 20 percent service fee.

A Christmas gift that sets you aglow

(ZNS)--If you've always dreamed of getting your hands on nuclear power plant controls, now you can do so in the privacy of your own home. The Mose Computer Company has come out with a new computer game for home computer systems - "Meltdown!" - you deal with nuclear power plant running amuck. The game, which is based on a re-creation of the accident at Three Mile Island, often starts when a valve sticks open and cooling water drains from around the reactor's core. After that you're on your own. Players attempt to bring the reactor under control again by releasing steam pressure, opening or shutting valves, reading gauges and initiating the emergency core cooling system.

A speeded up clock ticks off the passage of time, and pumps and valves threaten to fail as the operation struggles to regain control of the reactor. If the video terminal tells a meltdown has occurred and its game over.

A Country and Western Band in Windsor? And making money? Seems hard to believe, but if anyone could do it, The Hatfields, presently appearing at SAC's Pub, are the ones. Combining a vast repertory of "Southern Rock" with "good ol' foot stompin'" music, The Hatfields left the crowd at SAC's pounding the tables. Several Lynyard Skynard numbers were featured, most notably "Sweet Home Alabama". Although the vocals seemed to be a bit strained at times, the fiddle playing made most of the crowd forget that the lead singer seemed to be singing about five octaves off the end of his range. The Allman Brothers were also relied upon heavily, with "Ramblin' Man" being the most readily recalled number of that genre.

The Hatfields being a welcome change to SAC's, being neither the rather amateurish "New Wave" bands we've heard off the end of his range. Daily, from 9:00am-10:00am, CJAM will feature Contemp- Love, from 11:00am- 12:00am Jazz At Noon will be heard. The Voice of CSA will be heard on Tuesday nights from 9:00pm-10:00pm. The station will then serenade you with classical impressions until midnight. Wednesday evening will feature a half hour of Concert Canada at 9:30pm. This show will encompass music and interviews with the big names in the Canadian music industry. This will be followed with an hour dedicated to the French Canadian artists, called Claire de Lune. From 11:00-12:00am, CJAM will return you to the splitting rock and roll that leaves the walls shaking at the end of the night. A highly entertaining band, they combine just the right amount of amateurism, showmanship and fun—and they don't rely too heavily on any one member of the band. Don't forget "Urban Cowboy Night" this Saturday. The Hatfields will be there and it's sure to be a good time.

Africa Week

by Lance Staff

In 1969 British Prime Minister Harold Macmillian, in adressing South African parliament stated that: “the wind of change is blowing through the continent.” This wind was strong; 16 African countries are celebrating twenty years of independence in 1980.

CBC Stereo will comemorate the progression of the dark continent with a week of nightly broadcasts on the topic,
October 6-10.

Africa Week will be an attempt by CBC to allow the audience to know life as it is lived in Africa. Radio in its nature dictates that we hear tales from within the heart of darkness.

Africa is an enormous continent covering eleven and a quarter million square miles, as large as the United States, China, Western Europe and India combined. The half billion people speak over seven hundred different languages and dialects. The emerging countries take on international significance in bodies like the United Nations which use a one country, one vote policy.

As the program hopefully will point out, all is not milk and honey for a still troubled continent. In the last two decades the news from Africa has often shocked with headlines of coups, assassinations, streets, and starvation and corruption. Africa now evokes images of danger and arbitrary violence.

Behind these negative impressions is another reality, the ordinary daily life of the African people, a routine life which persists in the face of change on Sunday, October 5 at 7 pm.
Admission is free.

It’s not your first job
that’s important!
But the one after that,
and the one after that...

You’ve heard about new graduates who find that their first jobs run out of steam before they do - and then find there’s no career option in the company.
That’s why you should be seriously considering Northern Telecom, an all-Canadian company and a world leader in the high-technology world of telecommunications. We’re big, still growing - and very, very successful.

As a new graduate in engineering, computer science, business, commerce or other suitable disciplines, you will find you can put your talents and energy to good use with us. And we’ll give you management responsibility as fast as you’re ready for it.

persists in the face of change and uncertainty. It is not a comfortable or glamorous life, but one underpinned by a tradition of depth and resilience, a life which finds expression in lively conversation, music, laughter and dance.

The five night series will begin Monday October 6 with a political profile of Nigeria;
also presented is a session with West Africa’s talking drums.
October 7 investigates the continuing French domination of its former colonies and follows the spread of Islam.
October 8 takes you from Tanzania’s Goughai Gorge, the cradle of civilization, to the business emperors of a million-site Kenyan entrepreneur, and documents the rise of revolutionary Ethiopia.

October 9 confronts the changing face of apartheid, visits Great Zimbabwe, the remarkable Shona stone ruins which gave their name to a nation, takes you to a Zambian soccer match, and looks at polygamy in Botsuwana.

October 10 starts with a feature on African music, how the sounds and rhythms of everyday life shape the music of the continent. It’s followed by the world premiere of a commissioned play on the life and death of South Africa’s black consciousness leader, Steve Biko, by Canadian playwright
James Nichol. The evening moves on to a round table discussion on the future of the continent. The week ends with top African entertainers in performance from Montreal, before an invited audience.

Each week at 9 p.m., a special Africa Week news bulletin on the day’s events in Africa will be read.

Listen to the whole week,
a full evening, or just an hour.
If you’ve never seen Africa, this adventure in sound is the next best thing to being there.
As CBC so aptly puts it, Africa Week takes the pulse of a continent.

Works by children

A concert with words by children, performed by children with music written for children —and more—will happen at Mount Court (University &Sunset)
on Sunday, October 5 at 7 pm.
Admission is free.

From all over the English-speaking world, Richard Lewis has collected poems by children.
He has published many of them, and he will be in Windsor to read some of them at the concert.

Paul McIntyre has set some of them to music, to be per-fomed by the Boys’ and Girls’ Choir of Christ Church Grosse Point under the direction of Frederic DeHaven.
Roma Riddell will open the concert with McIntyre’s
"Limerick of Limericks", and, with Steven Henderson, will appear in the popular "The Little Red Hen". Last heard in 1978 at the National Arts Centre in Ottawa, this little anecdota by McIntyre calls for a small chorus and orchestra, and a quartet of unannounced, anonymous barnyard characters.

Rhymin' Simon sings

by Peter Haggett

Someone should have reminded me.
I must admit that last Friday I went to Joe Louis Arena looking for the Paul Simon that was once part of the Simon and Garfunkel. I should have realized a singer with his talent would never rest on old accolades. His encore was made up of some of the finest studio music examples of martial arts — not kickboxing, but karate — to which Simon could never rest on old accolades.

The odds are stacked against someone not expecting the Simon and Garfunkel lover. Does Breakfast in America, the one best suited to recapture that their Paris performance was their first live album. After following him all the way to a sold-out tour of the States, it was before a throng of eight-thousand.

To someone not expecting the Simon and Garfunkel lover. Does Breakfast in America, the one best suited to recapture the momentum beginning at 9:30 pm. The show will be held at Cleary Auditorium beginning at 8:00 pm. The Lancaster Band, and The Ken Crone Quartette along with a Monte Carlo Casino will provide the entertainment. Tickets are $25.

Many Irishmen grow grapes—for raisins of their own.
Not here, not in time yet unspoken,
Not now, but in places far away.
We sail, or run, or Bewitch the pillars,
Among the manes,
Among the flowers.
Healing,
As often voices tell
Enchanted, confused about Dancing, one each other.
Yes, we, are all slaves!
You and I?
No, no longer the same between us
Still, dreams learn we become,
Or have yet to seek Hating the beauty
Among the flowers.

Where Is This Love?

Born in a Roman Empire, A man who never was was waited for and prayed over but never came because
You will hear what you will hear, and disregard the rest.
Here are rated by who can tell them best.
In an old Omen corner, a whisper soft whispers
"Where is the love?" my friend, where is the love?

Love is like a bar of gold, it cannot last you wrong
You can break it and you can watch it break, but as long as a man's heart, and things not understood
You would never find a man, if this story showed some good.
Supposing all at yellow, this perfect tale ends away
Where is the love? my friend, where is the love?

A man was born in the same, a man you do not know you go out to read the cross neither you nor him did see if you follow Matthew, then Matthew takes the lead and if you don't believe everything you read and standing in the door's wise little lie story
"Where is the love?" my God, where is the love?"
Tennis Tournament

Following a week of intense competition, the annual University of Windsor tennis tournament came to a close Monday. More than 30 students and staff participated in the event which was characterized by good sportsmanship and excellent displays of tennis skill.

The most popular division was the men's singles, with 21 entrants. Proving that consistency and endurance are prime factors in the game, Stewart Polsky defeated an aggressive Ron Lofl defeated an aggressive Ron, 6-3 and 6-2 in the final.

The winners of the mixed doubles section were Paul Doerr and Liz Symons who defeated the team of Sam Sloane and Suzanne Ekel in a fiercely contested match.

Men's Flag Football

This year the men's flag football has taken on a different look by offering a non-contact division as well as the traditional contact-on-the-line league. The move has resulted in an increase in the number of team and individual entries.

The contact league is lead by defending champion Big Macs who are sporting a 3-0 record. However, a strong entry in the form of the No Talent All-Stars could prove to be a threat to the Big Mac dominance.

The upset of the week saw the men's flag football league, the freshman team of 1st Year Chaos undefeated and posting a threat to league-leading Engineering Chem Heads and the Big Mech Attack. Games continue next week at the south campus field Monday and Wednesday.

Soccer

The soccer season kicked off at a fine start on Sept. 23. Eight teams are entered, all in the competitive division. After two league games, it looks like the CSA Red Devils are a strong contender for the championship.

Challenges can be expected from Caribbean, champions two years ago and always in contention, and Badshah 131 who took the title last year. Wins are worth three points, ties two and losses one.

Track Record Broken

Two new University of Windsor records were set at the Springbank International Road Races held last Sunday.

Linda Slaught took a familiar spot near the top by placing third in the field of 185 runners. Her time for the 4.5 mile distance was 23 minutes, 32.5 seconds to register the first record.

The other new mark came when Paul Roberts finished 44th in a field of 226 runners. His time for the same distance was 21:13:0.

Only one other competitor was entered in the women's section, that being Kathy Ricica who finished 23rd in 26:12.0.

Five runners besides Roberts made it to the tape in the men's section. They were Rob Stewart (62nd in 22:12.0), Ray Holland (75th in 23:10.0), Al Baird (80th in 23:24.0), Henry Eldracher (82nd in 23:33.0), and Scott McCulloch (108th in 24:40.0).

Don McKinnon failed to finish in the men's 12 mile race, Gary Malloy, finished 46th in the field of 170 with a time of one hour, nine minutes and 13 seconds.

The University of Windsor Invitation track and field meet will be held Saturday between 11:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Spectator support is required for the athletes to attain the highest level of achievement.

Racketeers busted

The Lancetere tennis team completed in the OWIAA singles rankings at McMaster University last weekend.

The four member team of Maureen Scarfne, Trudy White, Tamarra Tobin and Wendy Barden, were all defeated in straight sets in their two matches, with the exception of Scarfne who won her first match over a Wilfrid Laurier player by 6-1, 6-3 toes. She lost her next two matches and was eliminated from further play.

This weekend the team will compete in the OWIAA doubles rankings at the University of Waterloo.

Generous Lancers serve up victory for Yeomen

by K.P. Chang

The Yeomen’s 26-23 victory over the Lancers on Saturday at South Campus Field was more an overwhelmingly-generous loss for the Windsor team than it was a thoroughly-earned win by the York one.

In a phrase, the Lancers gave the victory to York on a silver platter, in a word, it was a gift.

What we are talking about here is a game the Lancers should have won—or, at least, tied—but decided instead to drop into the hands of the Yeomen. “Drop” in that sentence equals “fumble”.

Windsor bumbled three York punts in the game. The first one early in the first quarter, did not result in a York score, but the other two were costly.

Both occurred in the point-filled second quarter when the Lancers scored a real shot at winning this see-saw game. One minute and 12 seconds into that period, Windsor place-kicker Zoran Miljkovic thrilled the crowd with a booming 52-yard field goal. That made the score 20-13 for York.

The Lancer defense held the Yeomen on the following series, and York, penalized for illegal procedure, punt from their own 25 yardline. The punt, as was most in the game, was an excellent one, bounces near the Windsor 25.

There it was touched by a Windsor punt returner who failed to grasp it firmly. The ball headed for sideline freedom but was grabbed before it went out of bounds by a hustling Yeomen, giving the ball to York at the Windsor 23.

The Lancer defense again held, but York kicker Sergio Capobianco’s 36-yard field goal put the Lancers down by ten again, 23-13.

On the next series, Windsor quarterback Bob Dalley directed a 60 yard touchdown trek.

Dalley, 12 of 18 for 189 yards with two TD’s and two interceptions for the day, threw two TD passes in this march: one to end Scott Essery that took the Lancers to the York 36, and then a sideline pass to end Wyatt Clark to move the team to the 10.

There Dalley threw one incompletion before scrambling on second down and throwing a perfect over-the-shoulder pass to a Yeoman-scraped Scott Essery in the end zone. The convert made the score Yeomen 23, Windsor 20.

York’s offense was again shut down by the now fired-up Windsor defense to hang tough. They did that, batting one pass down and forcing Dalley to throw the second one out of bounds. There isn’t much defense against Zoran Miljkovic, however, and he came on to kick a 45-yard field goal to tie the score at 23.

The tie was established at 8:01 of the final quarter and, with neither team able to shift the score 20-13 for York.

There Dalley took the ball back. there and moved it in another ten yards. With 20 seconds left in the game, Capobianco came into the game and kicked an 18-yard field goal.

Golfers may cart away victory

by Steve Rice

The Lancer golf team finished fourth out of 12 teams entered in the OUAA finals last Thursday and Friday at Glen Abbey Country Club in Oakville.

The placing qualifies them for the semi-finals advanced. Queens was the overall semi-final champion with a four-man total for two rounds of 540. The University of Toronto was second at 441, York third at 445 and Windsor fourth at 448.

Paul Kowalyshyn topped Waterloo and Western tied for the final two spots with scores of 452.

The Lancers will be attempting to get the boys up for this weekend.

“Last week was like a track meet where you run the heats just to finish in the top three and make the final. It was hard to get the guys up for last week. But, Miles along with assistant John Hacar, who is club champion at St. Mary’s Golf Club, will be attempting to get the boys up for this, the last tournament of the season.

“The biggest thing is convincing them that they gotta keep going. They can’t be doing bad, but then someone else may be going worse and their score will have to be counted. You can’t win with two guys giving you bad scores.”

“Players of the Week, as selected by the team are as follows:

Offensive Lineman: Terry Braunsgan, Mike Williams

Defensive Back: Rob Dalley

Special Teams: Zoran Miljkovic

Motion dismissed with howls

by Ed McMahon

A motion calling for the removal of student representation from the Promotion and Tenure Committees at the University of Windsor was soundly defeated at the Senate meeting last Thursday, October 2.

In an almost unanimous vote (there were only three who voted for the motion) the Senate threw out the motion of Professor J.K. Calliton, head of the Religious Studies Department.

The notice of motion, which was presented at the September Senate meeting, raised howls of protest from student leaders, the most vocal being David Simmons, Students' Administrative Council President.

Simmons called the motion "paternalistic" and "unreasonable.

Department Senate Representative Eric Dixon addressed the motion, calling it "a giant step backward." He said it was impossible to mention the students who had served on Promotion and Tenure Committees of the highest calibre, and that the argument Calliton presented that students were incapable of judging professors because of lack of knowledge of their teaching was unrealistic, as professors themselves frequently have the same problem.

Dixon also brushed aside Calliton's claim that students would be "highly subjective," saying "as if they (professors) have the monopoly on objectivity."

He also said while students may feel some "undue pressure," the same pressure must be felt by those members of the faculty who serve on the committee.

In his ten-minute speech, Dixon also made reference to the minutes of the Senate meeting on April 21, 1971, in which the motion was passed allowing students to sit on Promotion and Tenure Committees.

In that meeting, Dr. Francis Leddy, then President of the university, stated "the Department Heads were frequently unfamiliar with the teaching ability of certain members of their own staff" and the only alternative was to get the opinion of the students.

Dixon also noted that it was proposed that teaching faculty of the committee, the same objections about objectivity and breach of confidence were made.

At that meeting Dr. Leddy said, "If it is not possible to assess a member's teaching ability through faculty sources...it should be directly obtained from the students."

Also discussed at the meeting was a notice of motion by Dr. C. Lloyd Brown-John, calling for a Special Committee of the Senate or the Committee of University Government to be set up to look into the status of final examinations.

Dr. Brown-John is especially concerned with the disposition of final exams, and the methods of posting marks. Also mentioned in the motion was the practice of leaving exams, lab assignments and essays in public locations such as hallways and lounges after marking.

Brown-John said that this practice does not protect student confidentiality in terms of marks.

The next Senate meeting is scheduled for early November.

Lunch and radioactive isotopes

by Mike Mantone

Those of you who frequent the University Centre on campus may have noticed the new food service available in the cafeteria. Instead of dipping your coins into a metal slot and getting your food a la carte, you can put your magnum funds in the palm of a cashier, for a little fresh food in return.

The service is presently in the experimental stage, but its profits have been steadily increasing every day. Various salads, sandwiches, fruits, pastries and a "soup of the day" are available at every lunch hour, between the hours of 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m.

Of course, food is still available from the Canadas of Canada machines. And, according to Randy Johnston, the University Centre director, Canesta sales have not fallen off any. The burgers and butter tarts are still as popular as ever.

The cafeteria holds approximately 220 people and, of those numbers, the individuals who usually buy from Canesta of Canada are still doing so, while those who refused to eat "machine food" are now patronizing the new food service.

The lounge is still a popular place for brown-baggers, and holds the attraction of a television set tuned in on General Hospital. In September, 591 students used the Essex Lounge, said Johnston.

One can even see the same program in the friendly atmosphere of the pub. Here, sandwich sales are still steady, along with the usual pop, juice and potato chips.

The new food service will be experimenting with new foods in the future, and hopes to please the appetites of the student body.

It may not be haute cuisine, but there's fresh food in the Centre now.

Is it soup yet?

by Bill Mantone

Some of the radioisotopes which are used by the various departments include Carbon 14, Sulpher 35, Tritium and the strongest, iodine 124.

According to Mike Larocque, a spokesman for the radioisotope disposal agency TRICL, which operates out of Saintes, Phosphorus 32, another low-level radioisotope, can actually be disposed of via the common toilet and into the Great Lakes, ultimately ending up in the ocean.

Jacques Coutreau, where are you?

Mr. Larocque stated phosphorus (a major water contaminant) floats when disposed of into water, and that the University of Windsor has decided to enlist the services of his agency for "proper" disposal (this is accomplished by intensive incineration).

According to the sources contacted, then, all is safe here on campus.

American students at University of Toronto don't have to worry about registering for the draft, because the U.S. government cannot keep track of them, Frank Luchesa, counsellor officer at the U.S. consulate in Toronto, has revealed.

The registration process, instituted as a direct result of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the so-called Carter Doctrine ("...any threat to the stability of the Persian Gulf (constitute)... American vital interests...") is required of all male U.S. citizens born in 1960 and 1961. Those of draft age living or studying abroad are required by law to register at the nearest embassy or consulate. Those who fail to register risk prosecution but, at Mr. Luchesa readily admits, "We have no real way of telling."

Although precise figures are not available, most Americans on student visas at U of T are graduates and, as such, are unaffected by the presidential directive. However, an estimated 400 Americans are here as undergrads. How many of these are of draft age remains in doubt.

Alumni Affairs is searching for its lost sheep

By Chris Woodrow

"We're on a roll, we have to maintain momentum," says John Sharpe, Director of Alumni Affairs at the University of Windsor. Since coming to the job a year ago last July, Sharpe has reorganized the office of alumni affairs and is in the process of reacquainting some of the 27,000 graduates of the University of Windsor with their alma mater.

Department chair said Sharpe, speaking of alumni membership, is the "annual alumni fund is really replacing annual membership." Rather than insisting on a specified annual membership, alumni office is itself a target, which it hopes to reach by contacting alumni alumni, and raise money for the fund, said Sharpe.

Sharpe continued, saying, "A lot of people in this community can't afford $10. We want to get our involved, regardless of how much money they give." But he added, "we are hoping that people who are able to give more than $10 will do that."

"They are the potential donors that we are going to spend a lot of money on. . . . it's a super room, complete with a lovely view of the campus and the river and the downtown area of Detroit" pointed out Sharpe. "It's a real showplace."

It will be used by the university to entertain alumni, by the Students' Administrative Council, and by any group on campus wishing to entertain through a university reasoning, he was going to avoid. When there is the peril of seeing people, and the world, there is the peril of being lecturers and guests speakers on campus, for the students, the alumni, the faculty and staff, and for the community," said Sharpe of the second objective.

The first objective is student aid, and a fifth each of alumni membership, student service, and community. "We're well on the way to this goal," said Sharpe of the first objective.

This interest has carried on to the present.

The $500,000 of alumni membership that is coming, Sharpe hopes. alumni office is itself a target, which it hopes to reach by contacting alumni alumni, and raise money for the fund, said Sharpe.

"We want to have the ability to bring lectures and guest speakers on campus, for the students, the alumni, the faculty and staff, and for the community," said Sharpe of the second objective.

The $500,000 Alumni Annual Fund has set itself a goal of $500,000 over the next five years and incorporated into the goal are four objectives.

The first objective is student aid, "in the form of bursaries and awards. . . . we'd like to help the kid who otherwise may not be able to come to university, who has a solid academic base and who is involved in the school community," said Sharpe.

"We want to have the ability to bring lectures and guest speakers on campus, . . . for the students, the alumni, the faculty and staff, and for the community," said Sharpe.

Part-time students have a vote

By Wendy Coonsenor

Professor Gerald V. Booth wants to make the academic faculties and departments more aware of part-time students on campus.

Why the concern? Because, as of October 15, Professor Booth will officially find himself in the role of Director of Part-Time Studies.

In this job, Booth will be responsible for the preparation of programs for part-time students, providing counselling for them, and making the various departments understand that part-time students are a target, which it hopes to reach by contacting alumni alumni, and raise money for the fund, said Sharpe.

Part-time students have particular needs, said Booth in an interview, and they need programs. The first objective is student aid, and a fifth each of alumni membership, student service, and community. "We're well on the way to this goal," said Sharpe of the first objective.

Poor publicity may mean another lousy Homecoming

When Thomas Wolfe said, "You can't go home again," he must have been thinking about Homecoming at this university.

Every October at most universities, huge Homecoming parades are held. Floats take place, large amounts of alcohol are consumed while the crowds dance to the wee hours of the morning, the alumni return to join in the festivities, and a loud mob turns out to cheer the home team to victory at the annual Homecoming football game.

Yes, at almost every other university in this province a massive party is held in the middle of this dreary month of October. But here...

Well, supposedly there is a Homecoming this year. We in the media know because we got a memorandum from the Student Office of Services. Unfortunately, memorandums were not sent to all the students on campus, nor were we informed of the parade.

It's as if the powers that be don't want anyone to show up. If that is the case, they will probably get their wish.

For your own information, the memorandum we got was specifically about the Homecoming parade, hapless for Saturday, October 18. The memorandum was dated September 29, so it probably arrived at The Lance on September 30. We threw it into the issue we were working on (October 3) as a "promo" on page 3.

The memorandum invited "representative floats from student groups and residences."

No, not necessarily the University of Windsor or the Students' Administrative Council.

The memorandum outlined the requirements and rules governing the floats, and asked such interested persons to submit written applications to have their floats included in the parade.

Those applications, were to include "a sketch of the planned float design, the number of participants involved and the name of a float contact person."

They were to be sent to George McMahan, Assistant Vice-President—Student Services, or Dave McMurray, Director of Food and Residence, by October 8.

Now, as previously mentioned, the Lance ran the aforementioned memorandum in the first issue we could, but that was on October 3, leaving interested float builders five crummy days to send in their detailed plans and personne.

With advance billing such as that, it is indeed doubtful whether the Homecoming parade this year is going to be a long, snaky obstacle to traffic in the city.

The publicity for Homecoming, something that can be a very exciting, traditionally prideful event for a university, was botched here this year as it has been for the past several years.

The publicity for the funding drive for the university's new gymnasium had been run as poorly, there wouldn't have been enough money raised to have built an outhouse.

NUS trying to become more effective for students

The National Union of Students is a student organization with a national representation of 48 student councils across the country.

Presently NUS is undergoing a restructuring which, if successful, would see the combination of all the student organizations and NUS into one national student federation yet to be named.

The Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) is one of these, which puts Ontario's student organization, and to which the University of Western Ontario belongs, in line with full support of the NUS restructuring idea. Also, in favour of restructuring are British Columbia, Alberta, and Nova Scotia.

Provinces which have no full-time representational organizations (Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland) are also trying to get into the national picture, which does organize a provincial council, has just made an application to NUS for recognition and a piece of the pie.

Presently, at the University of Western Ontario, a referendum is being run by the Student Council to rid that university of NUS. Although the student council has no official stance on the referendum question, the student newspaper The Gazette, has come out firmly in support of NUS.

John Doherty is the National Director of NUS, and he said some time at Western over the past week organizing the campaign to keep Western in NUS. The referendum has set a voting record, and Doherty is marginally optimistic about the outcome. "It's going to be close", he said. "I really don't like to try to predict the outcome."

Whether or not NUS survives at the University of Western Ontario, it intends to go ahead with its referendum.

Doherty feels that the advantages of restructuring are many, including the more effective use of money, a subject near and dear to the heart of any student. If the national provincial organizations were combined, he said, the work they do would be more coordinated and thus, more effective.

There is also a better opportunity for work to be complimentary on the national and provincial levels.

At a conference in Winnipeg scheduled for October 18, the National Federation will discuss the restructuring in full with as many member organizations as possible.

Hopefully the Winnipeg conference will result in a new, national student organization, which would go a long way toward the student representation on both the national and provincial levels.

The Fortnightner

By John Mill

It's beautiful and sunny out today (Wednesday remember). Football and frolics in the quad and students lounging on the grass. Days like this were not meant for writing, but here we go anyway.

How many of you out there know what "objective" means? No you don't, you don't have a clue until you try and look it up. Of course, after you've looked it up, you'll probably think it means "report the facts and nothing else", Organization (LSFLO), the heroic courage and fortitude discovered 40 billion barrels of oil found under the ground as it has been for the past several years.

A good example would be the hypothetical "Students of Western Ontario, a referendum means "exists separate of the mind... comedian means" No, you don't have a clue until you use the dictionary, or until you look it up. What does "exist separate of the mind... coin-"

The movie went on romantically about the saint-like dedication of the Lower Slobovian Liberation Organization (LSLO), the heroic courage and fortitude discovered 40 billion barrels of oil found under the ground as it has been for the past several years.

The LSLO demonstrated by the many operations (in the name of God) which advanced the cause of the Lower Slobovians. One of the most celebrated LSLO tactics was to leave explosive devices in crowded public areas where the resulting blast would send shocked and mindless deuces into human bodies causing them to writhe, spilling Blood on the ground. One freedom fighter boaster of eliminating 500 of the traitorous, blaspheeming Upper Slobovians in one day with four such operations (in the name of God)."

The review went on to explain why these operations were necessary. The Lower Slobovians wanted to drive the heathen blasphemers out of Slobovia because Upper Slobovians prayed while kneeling on a skull instead of the green Lower Slobovian prayer mat.

The argument over orange and green is a thousand year old, dating back to a little lost monk who wandered in a desert who had lost his green prayer mat in a sandstorm and ended up using the orange blanket from his donkey to kneel on. That night, his eighth without food or drink, he had a vision while kneeling on his orange blanket: God told him to go forward and lead the promised land of Upper Slobovia.

The green and orange factions have fought ever since.

Hopefully the Lower Slobovians stated clearly that the renewed freedom fighting has nothing to do with the newly discovered oil on land of Upper Slobovia. The green and orange factions have fought ever since.

The Lower Slobovians stated clearly that the renewed freedom fighting had nothing to do with the newly discovered oil on land of Upper Slobovia. The green and orange factions have fought ever since.

The Lower Slobovians stated clearly that the renewed freedom fighting has nothing to do with the newly discovered oil on land of Upper Slobovia. The green and orange factions have fought ever since.

Today, as it has been for the past several years.

Dear Editor,

On October 14 and 15, one of the referendum's being held is for a Social Science Society. The cost of such a society would be $2.50 per semester for Social Science students.

We would just like to express our views on why there is a definite need for such a society. To begin with, Social Science students are under-represented. Social Science is the second biggest faculty on campus, outnumbered only by the Business Faculty (and that has only been in the past few years).

Upon entering university, a student in Social Science hears about the Business Faculty's Career Night, the Engineering Society's Beer Bash, the Law Faculty's Wine and Cheese party, and the like. None of these activities involve Social Science students. Indeed, there are no special services or activities provided just for them.

We hope that the creation of a Social Science Society will give students belonging to the faculty special events that could not have otherwise enjoyed. Sporting events would be one of these activities. Hopefully there could be some Social Science team to play in the intramural program.

Social events would also be provided. These would range from proper wine and cheese parties with your professor, to beer bashes, to semi-formals in the spring. Where would you find these activities outside of studying at university and would we like Social Science students to have a chance to enjoy them.

We would also like to bring in guest speakers, people to lecture who would be interesting and who could never be afforded as scheduled by other departments in Social Science. Moreover, we would like to see a Careers Night for Social Science students. People to lecture who would be interesting and who could never be afforded as scheduled by the university.

Hard to do well on little cash

Dear Editor,

I would like to set the facts straight with regards to the used book sale that the Students' Administrative Council offered from Carleton University and offer a similar service here at the University of Windsor. With the help of Mark Greene and Roy Dickie, I designed an advertising campaign and developed accounting procedures to insure the success of the book sale.

My goal accomplished, I approached Dave Simmons stating that it was now necessary that I begin working on the Student Fee increase of which I am the Chairperson. Dave agreed and launched the book sale as it was scheduled.

I accept full responsibility for the book sale starting late because I should have anticipated the unexpected delays that always occur when dealing with advertising mediums. The late start was not, as stated in last week's article, due to my lack of commitment.

I would also like to thank the volunteers that helped make the book sale a success.

Social Science students need a good time too

A common argument of critics of the Radio Broadcasting Law, Engineering, Nursing, etc. et cetera. Social Science is composed of many students. The fact that these are too separate to merge together under one society, and yet they share such common aspects to these departments that they required the opportunity to form their own groups. We feel it is time to inform the community of our activity.

What we are asking for is $2.50 per semester. To form a society it is necessary to have financing. The $2.50 a year is not mandatory; it is refundable for those who do not wish to have the venture.

It is in our interests that we are trying to form this society. We are all Social Science students, ourselves and feel that the benefits of such a society are too numerous to mention. We feel that the losses of not having one are either.

The decision is yours, Social Science students. If you would like to see a society to serve your academic, social, and athletic needs, then vote "yes" on October 14 or 15.

The Committee for a Social Science Society

Not so fast

Dear Editor,

It is very reassuring to see you express support for the possibility of having an FM radio station at the University of Windsor. Indeed, this is the direction CJAM is heading, with the students' support.

At this point in time, the station is achieving this level with a staff of over 100 students. I personally would like to see the station acquire an FM licence by the end of this year. I say this because it is the CRTC which will decide when we are trying to form this society. Indeed, this is the direction CJAM is heading, with the students' support.

The haste in your support, though, has blinded your editorial writing with present facts, not fiction. How can you support a radio station if you have a knife in the back?

Thanks for listening.

Landlords aren’t all bad but if they are...

by Michael Reid

Are you one of the many student tenants on campus? If so, you have certain rights as a tenant. This article is an attempt to educate you with regards to some of these rights. It is not a complete statement of landlord — tenant law. If you encounter one of the problems discussed below, you are well advised to visit the Community Legal Aid in the Faculty of Law. It is hoped that this article will enable you to realize when one or more of your rights are being trod upon.

First, you should ascertain that you are a tenant and not merely a licensee. Only tenants are entitled to the protection which will be outlined below. Although it is not certain, it is felt that to qualify as a tenant, you must live in your own residential unit. You likely must have a private kitchen, bathroom, and private sleeping quarters. It is not necessary that your apartment be in an apartment building. However, it appears that rooms do not come within the relevant legislation.

If you are a tenant, you are protected by The Landlord and Tenant Act. This statute gives you certain rights which cannot be violated, regardless of the terms of your lease. Furthermore the statute pertains to your tenancy even if you do not have a written lease. It is not necessary to lease to be a tenant.

However you are foolish to take an apartment without a written lease. A written lease will contain the terms of the tenancy which you must adhere to while a tenant. Without a lease, it is your word against the landlord’s as to what the two of you agreed to, with no guarantees as to which one of you a judge will believe.

You may be a joint tenant. This situation arises if you take an apartment with another person, with the knowledge of the landlord. In such a situation each tenant is individually liable for the full rent. Your remedy is then against your roommate, for his/her share. Likewise, you are each able to enforce your rights against the landlord.

What are these rights? Primarily, you have a right to the quiet possession of your apartment. The landlord can only enter your apartment under the following conditions:

1. In case of emergency to put out a fire, for example.
2. With your permission.
3. To show the apartment to future tenants, when you have given notice that you intend to terminate the lease. Such showings only can take place in reasonable hours.
4. If the landlord has given you twenty four hour notice, specifying the time of entry. Entry must be made during daylight hours.

The landlord cannot simply evict you. He must have good reason for doing so. For example, the landlord will be able to evict you if you don’t pay the rent, or damage the apartment, or carry on an illegal activity. There are other grounds. However, the landlord can only evict you if he/she has a court order. Furthermore, the landlord has to give you notice when he/she intends to get such a court order. You can then appear at the hearing, and dispute the landlord’s right of eviction.

You have the right of a “fit” place to live. The landlord must keep the apartment in a good state of repair. The apartment must be heated in winter, have water, etc. It must comply with local health standards. It must be kept in a safe condition, in other words, there cannot be bare electrical wires, broken stairs or broken windows, as some examples. The building must be reasonably clean — not infested with rats, cockroaches or worse. You are responsible for the cleanliness of your own apartment. However, you need only repair any damages you cause. The landlord must make all other repairs.

What can you do if the landlord violates these rights? Many steps are open to you. If the landlord has not kept the apartment in a fit state of repair, you can apply to a county court judge for certain remedies. The judge can lower your rent, order that the necessary repairs be made, order that heat be provided, even order the landlord to pay you a sum in damages. In short, the judge has fairly wide discretion in dealing with the matter.

If heat is not being provided, you can phone the Windsor Board of Health. They will put a lock on the thermostat. If heat is not provided, they will prosecute the landlord.

As well, you personally can prosecute the landlord. To do so, you must get an order from a county court judge, who will have the police serve it on the landlord. Under this step, the landlord can be fined up to $2,000. It should be noted, however, that fines that high are rarely meted out.

If the landlord violates any of these rights, or any terms of your lease, you can withhold your rent. The landlord can only get the rent, or you evicted. See “MORE TENANT LAW,” PAGE 7.
Martin opens Law Lecture Series

by Peter Hnatowycz

"Participation is essentially an international issue, whereas constitutional amendment is a domestic affair."

With that statement, the Hon. Paul Martin, P.C., distinguished parliamentarian during the St. Laurent- and Pearson years, and, most recently, Canada's High Commissioner to Great Britain, set the tone for his public lecture at the Faculty of Law last week.

The occasion was the inaugration of the University of Windsor International Law Society lecture series. The students/ faculty group, under the direction of Professor Brian Mazer, is planning a number of lectures and seminars dealing with issues related to the study of international law.

Speaking to a large gathering of faculty and students is the

by court order. Should the landlord so desire to do so, you should pay the rent to the appropriate court officer. Once you have done so, no further action can be taken against you until you have "had your say". You can then file for a writ of the landlord's violation. The court will lower the rent to compensate for the violations. Here, the importance of a written lease should be recalled. It is your proof that a certain term existed. You must still show that it was breached, however.

In addition to these rights, you have the right to pay only a reasonable rent. These provisions do not apply to all tenants. For example, they do not apply to new apartments (those rented for the first time after January 1, 1976), public housing, and non-profit housing. If you are a monk, rent review does not apply to your monastery. Likewise, it does not apply to university residences. For other tenants, The Residential Tenancy Rent Review Act prevents the landlord from raising the rent during the time of lease. Before any increase can occur, the landlord must give 90 days notice. Furthermore, if the landlord intends to raise the rent by more than eight percent, he/she must seek a rent review hearing. The landlord must give you notice of this hearing, and when and where it will occur. You can then appear and dispute the rental increase. The hearing will be before a Rent Review Officer. These provisions may not pertain to you, if you surrender your apartment when the lease expires.

It should be noted that services and privileges are included as rent. If the landlord has provided free parking in the past, and the lease expires, your rent has gone up. The difficulty may be in determining how much it went up.

There are certain other matters of which you should be aware, as a tenant, or as a prospective tenant.

First, if you are looking for an apartment, the landlord cannot discriminate against you on the grounds of race, creed, color, sex, nationality, ancestry, or place of origin. Should the landlord do so, you can appeal to the Human Rights Commission for redress. The landlord must pay you interest on that deposit. When the tenancy is terminated, the security deposit must either be returned or applied to the last month's rent.

Finally, before either you or the landlord can terminate your lease, notice must be given to the other party. This is true even if you are on a fixed lease - say from June 1980 to June 1981. If you do not give notice, it is assumed that the tenancy is to continue on a monthly basis. If your tenancy is on a weekly basis, you must give or receive twenty-eight days notice. Otherwise, you must give or receive sixty days' notice.

It is hoped that the above information will put you in better footing with regards to your rights as a tenant. To repeat, if you do encounter difficulties, you are advised to see a law student at the Community Legal Aid office.

The Hon. Paul Martin before speaking on patriating the constitution.

Women, law, and the constitution

by Debbie Staley

While Trudeau is in Ottawa struggling over the constitution, the National Association of Women and the Law will be hosting their annual regional conference at the University of Windsor. The focal point of the conference will be Women and the Constitution. To facilitate this theme, the conference will consist of various workshops ranging from family law to the effects of the Bill of Rights on women.

Along with these workshops, the conference is featuring speakers from both the federal and provincial governments. According to Marilyn Bode, the treasurer of the Windsor caucus, the main purpose of the conference is "to establish NAWL's position of women and the constitution." The conference will also attempt to educate both law students and the general public.

In order to cover the expenses of the conference, a registration fee will be required. Ms. Bode stated NAWL is restricted in their access of funds. According to these restrictions, the funding for the conference cannot be obtained outside the university.

Ms. Bode expects to have a good turnout as a result of the cancellation of two previous conferences.

As a notice to all those budding lawyers, militant females or curious citizens, this year's conference will take place at the Faculty of Law on October 24 and 25.

Summer house cleaning in Windsor Hall ...

by E.P. Chant

Trying to draw a graphic to show the "chain of command" at this university right now would be a very difficult task. After an administrative shake-up this summer, some people in high places on this campus may not be quite sure exactly what administrative responsibilities are their own.

In addition, some administrators have left and not been replaced (and may not be). Although the university is still running, some chairs in Windsor Hall are still empty and may not be filled for a little while, yet.

When these chairs are filled, The Lance will let you know. But, since that may take a while and since a lot of important changes were made this summer, we thought we had better introduce you to the new administrators that have already taken their positions.

Before delving into their sordid histories, however, perhaps it would be a good idea to tell you how the university runs. Actually, people on student newspapers don't know how their universities run—they just know how they should. Be that as it is, here it goes.

Think of the university as this country. Parliament Hill is, then, the Windsor Hall Tower, with the university president acting as Prime Minister (except he is not elected). Around the president is his cabinet (the vice-president and assistant vice-presidents profiled below).

These gentlemen advise the president about matters pertaining to their specified areas and are advised in turn by those people under them.

This cabinet is advised by various "royal commissions" which take the form of university Senate sub-committees. Collectively the Senate is a large regulatory body for the university, like the federal government's Senate, but with more power and less old age.

The faculty constitute provinces, with all the Deans sitting as premiers. Professors, then, are the backbones of the whole country since they can only be equated with the national and provincial regiment of civil servants.

Rubber-stamping all the administration's decisions is the Board of Governors, which is like the Governor-General but, again, rather more powerful. It is composed of numerous people, both from the university and the Windsor community.

Obviously, then, the students of the university equal the constituents of the country and taxation equals taxes (except a lot higher).

Enough of this analogy. On to the profile of the powermongers ...

President Mervyn Franklin

The man responsible for all the administrative changes made this summer, President Mervyn Franklin, feels he has the administration "pretty well" the way we want it now.

In an interview early this week, Dr. Franklin said the recent reorganization of his "team" still might need some "fine tuning" (perhaps a few more faces, shuffling, or more responsibilities for the new appointees), but, basically, he was satisfied that he now has "people in the administration who are accountable for their actions."

Since, self-admittedly, Dr. Franklin feels one of his chief responsibilities is "to make decisions and recommendations for the best of the university", he used the rather inactive summer months to suggest some of the personnel switches to his overseer, the Board of Governors. With that board's stamp of approval, people started moving into new offices and jobs.

One of the more noteworthy summer reorganizations occurred in Student Services. "We needed one clearly identifiable organization to serve students..." the University Centre included," said Dr. Franklin, explaining his creation of the new post of Assistant Vice-President, Student Services.

That position was given to former Dean of Students George McMahon, who, Dr. Franklin described as "an experienced man with creativity and understanding for student problems". McMahon will be responsible for overseeing many student-related campus areas and departments, including the Centre, Food Services and Residences, and the Office of Student Affairs.

The integration of all these areas was not a recent idea, said Dr. Franklin, but he could not get around to it last year because of his involvement in the faculty contract negotiations.

Though he said McMahon could, in many instances, report directly to him, Dr. Franklin pointed out the administrative re-structuring would usually have the new assistant vice-president reporting to Dr. Paul Cassano, the new Vice-President, Academic.

That connection was established, Dr. Franklin explained, "because the entire objective of the office of the Vice-President, Academic—and from research and faculty matters—is directed to student education and life". Also, he continued, the students involved with the search committee that decided on Dr. Cassano felt the new appointee should be more visible to the students and involved with Student Services.

There are still two holes in the administration caused by the departure from the Windsor Hall tower of two administrators, Dr. John Allan, formerly Vice-President of Administration, has left the university for good reasons perhaps never to be officially confirmed, and Dr. Frank DeMarco, formerly Vice-President of Planning, has returned to teaching full-time in the Faculty of Engineering.

Dr. Franklin could not say whether these empty posts would be filled, changed in scope, or amalgamated into another part of the administration. The Board of Governors, he explained, is responsible for "determining the best structure to satisfy the services needed" and the matter had not yet been discussed in great detail.

In addition to his attempt to make his administration more accessible ("without open lines of communication to the administration, campus problems can become festering sores") Dr. Franklin discussed his concern about keeping the universities of Ontario accessible to students.

In the 1960s, he explained, the provincial government thought post-secondary education was a great thing and that enrolment for the same would always be high. Thus, the government built perhaps too many universities according to Dr. Franklin.

Now that enrolment is dropping severely in many universities, the government has frozen capital funding for such institutions and is even considering closing some of the smaller ones. Dr. Franklin said such measures constituted "the wrong decision by the government for the wrong reason... an irresponsible idea that goes against accessibility, slow strangulation by the government... and something the government has not thought through sufficiently since it has so far looked only at the costs incurred by universities."

"Ontario has always been the workshop of Canada," he elaborated. "If universities are closed, we'll lose that. It will erode... we must have human resources."

What follows are profiles of the men who are very much concerned with developing this university and the human resources within, the vice-president and assistant vice-presidents of the University of Windsor's administration...

new faces in new administrative places

In those first 15 years, said Morgan in an interview, there were one or two buildings in the works at all times. The West Ldey Library was one of those. Among the events outstanding in that busy time, Morgan said the reception of awards from the Massey Institute for the design of the main library and the Energy Conversion Power Plant was one of the best.

In 1970 he became Director of Planning and Construction. In the two years that he spent in this position, he managed projects in this area totalling over $12 million.

1972 found him in the role of Assistant to Vice President of Administration. With this job he became responsible for Physical Planning, operations, campus security information, and involvement in staff work studies, which entailed gathering and studying research in various areas.

In 1974 he assumed additional responsibilities with Administrative Services, property management, and campus safety.

Morgan took over his present job, Assistant Vice-President of Administration-Operations in 1978. He is still responsible for campus construction and he sets as project manager on the new St. Denis Gym, but his job is now more of an administrative one, as his title implies.

Morgan now receives reports in his office from the directors of the physical plant (maintenance), security, Administrative Services (purchasing, bookstore, post office, microfilming, etc.), Physical Planning (space allocation), research shop, and electronic designs.

As well, Morgan is also Chairman of the Space Committee which studies the space available on the campus and employs or relocates it according to how it is needed.

“We’re always rearranging space,” explained Morgan, adding that departments are always shifting—expanding or decreasing. The relocation of the Registrar’s, Cashier’s, and the Awards Offices to the first floor of Windsor Hall was decided by this group.

Last year Morgan also became Special Chairman of the Centre Renovations Committee. In this role he convenes meetings of the Committee and assists in acquiring the money needed for the renovations.

Assistant Vice-President, Student Services

George McMahon

By Joan Butler

After 17 years on the administrative staff, the new Assistant Vice-President of Student Services, George McMahon, said, “I’ve never looked forward to a year more than this year.”

McMahon filled the newly created position September 1, 1980, having been the Dean of Students since 1967. He joined the administration as Assistant to the Dean of Arts and Science, July 1, 1963, the day the University Centre opened.

The Centre is not the only concern of the team—“to get students acquainted with the administration, Student Services is sponsoring a ‘Candlighit Buffet Dinner’ at Vanier Hall October 24, where staff will sit down with students,” said McMahon.

In the spring, Food Services hopes to break the Guinness record for the longest submarine, and, he added, his office is thinking about forming a student police force, instead of having to hire a policeman for campus functions.

McMahon said a lot of a student’s learning takes place outside the classroom, and the job of his “team” “is to encourage learning.” He said a head resident, who has to operate a budget and manage the residence, learns more through that experience than by sitting in finance and management classes.

Assistant Vice-President, Human Resources

John Lynch

By Joan Butler

“I deal all day with people problems and that’s the most challenging part of the job,” said John Lynch, Assistant Vice-President of Human Resources in an interview Tuesday.

With a full time staff of about 1,500 at the university, it is easy to see why employment relations take up so much time.

Besides dealing with day to day problems of the staff, Mr. Lynch negotiates contracts with the unions on campus. This year, said Mr. Lynch, “we will be negotiating salaries for academic staff and contracts for three non-academic unions.”

Mr. Lynch started at the university as Assistant Vice-President of Staff Relations in April, 1979, and held that position until entering the newly created position of Assistant Vice-President of Human Resources, September 12, 1980. In this position, he is responsible to the Vice-President, Academic. Conversely, the Director of Personnel and University Safety Officer reports to Mr. Lynch.

Mr. Lynch said the reason he got the position “because of my academic and labour relations background.” Before coming to the university he worked for the Cultural Affairs Branch of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities as manager of student and staff affairs for the 22 community colleges.

This position involved responsibility for labour relations at the colleges, he said.

Before working for the ministry, Mr. Lynch taught staff training and development at George Brown College in Toronto, where he worked with the Toronto General Hospital, Metro Toronto Police, and Monarch Foods, among others, training staff in supervisory skills and communication techniques.

His job, said Mr. Lynch, “is to promote and facilitate harmonious employment relationships,” and, by trying to handle all employee complaints himself, he fulfills his position. He added he is responsible “for the full human resources function.”

Mr. Lynch said he likes to see “full participation in unions as they are hit by apathy like democracy.”

He said good union relationships are achieved through good management working with unions and added “we get a good measure of that at the university.”

Mr. Lynch said he would much rather work with a strong union as “they are more responsible.” He said they are organized and know exactly what they want. When negotiating a contract, Mr. Lynch said he bargains “within the mandate approved by the Board of Governors.”

“I know where my limits are and don’t dare go outside them,” he added.

On October 14 and 15, your Council will be asking you a student fee by $5.

The increase is made necessary because inflation has made it impossible to introduce new services and special events. The increase actually threatens the Council's ability to continue providing the services you deserve.

Without an increase, everything the council funnels to you, including the Student Liquor Services, are in jeopardy.

Presently, your Students' Administrative Council is the only student council at a major university across this province. If you have the same number of services that other universities receive, you're going to need the same number of services that other universities receive, you're going to need money.

Each year this council collects just over $156,000. McMaster University has 7,700 students, each paying a fee that allows their council to collect over $329,000. The University of Western Ontario, whose many services include a record store and even a bowling alley, collects $306,000 and has a cash flow in the millions. Laurier University, which has an enrollment of less than 5,000, collects $350,000. These universities can offer many services because they have the necessary monies. In short, double the services because they collect nearly twice the money.

We're not asking for twice as much money at this campus. If the referendum passes, the student fee will raise to $16.25 per semester. By voting yes to the referendum, you will be giving your Students' Administrative Council the mandate to be able to offer even more services. Clubs and Societies will benefit from increased funding and will be able to offer even greater activities for their members, and you will be better with your help.

Help us help you.

SAC
Students’ Administrative Council are asking you to increase the present student fees from $42.50 per year to $50 per semester. This is necessary because of rising costs, such as increased fees for services like concert and movie nights, and to fund other rising costs such as the Drug Plan, The Lance, Societies, Clubs, etc. The council often wondered why your council does not offer more services for the money you pay in fees. The answer is quite simple: the council operates on a level far below that of any other student council at universities such as the University of Toronto, in a riding stable, with more students than 4,000, who offer as much money from students as we do in the upcoming year. We can make it work further, and more services will benefit students by expanding and planning for the future.

Slam out with a bang; SAC’s pub gets the lowdown

by Peter Haggert

They call themselves Slam. They certainly started this week at SAC’s with a bang. A four-piece new wave band, Slam hails from Kingston, Ontario. Their Monday-through Wednesday start at SAC’s is just one on their multi-university tour.

Playing long sets of loud and lively music, the group proved themselves to be better than most bands from this area. Word spread quickly, and by Wednesday night, the crowds lined up to get into the pub. But was it their music that attracted the audience? I’m inclined to believe their luscious lead singer had something to do with the attendance.

Having a female vocalist always adds versatility to a band. Hit Me With Your Best Shot, a self-penned number which graced their repertoire, showed their new wave tendencies. In case you prefer old-fashioned rock and roll, Slam revitalized Sufferin’ City, and resurrected I’m The Man. Never mind the music—this group features music from the early ‘60s.

Low Down has a more laid-back style, probably easier on the nerves, but bordering on disco. It has been hinted that they play a lot of dancing music. That’s about all I can tell you—you are going to have to judge them yourselves.

That’s Low Down, at SAC’s this weekend.

Toreador waltzes into Essex Theatre

The University of Windsor Players open their twenty-second season this weekend at the Essex Hall Theatre. The initial presentation is Jean Anouilh’s The Waltz of the Toreadors.

The intricate plot actually involves two main story lines; one, a comic sex farce about a general who fancies himself as quite a toreador of the ladies; the other expounding the bitterness and disgust he feels toward himself, and the hollowness of his triumphs, on and off the battlefield.

Tickets are available at the Essex Theatre box office. For additional information, please contact Dennis York at 253-4565, or 253-4322 ext 146.

Thanks to all who participated in the Siren’s review.

The response was positive, leading me to believe only one thing:

We should go metric—every inch of the way.

THE CINEMA CRITIC

by Rosemary Comiso

A game usually played by children matures quickly into adulthood when Walter Matthau and the C.I.A. are the opponents in a new movie called Hopscotch.

Instead of cement sidewalks and paved driveways, these rivals hop, skip and jump from one end of Europe to another, sometimes crossing the Atlantic into the United States as part of their strategies. The result is a delightful and sophisticated comedy that pokes fun at the serious and clandestine business of espionage and information-gathering systems.

This globetrotting pantomime all starts when Kendig (Matthau) quits the C.I.A. and runs to Austria, where he decides to write a book about his life in the agency, much to the chagrin of Myerson (Ned Beatty), a former boss, and other intelligence agencies around the world.

Not satisfied with just publishing his memoirs, Kendig teases his adversaries by mailing instalments of his manuscript to all of them. Together with his team-mate Isobel (Glenda Jackson), an old girlfriend and ex-C.I.A. agent herself, they manage to outwit their pursuers by keeping one step ahead of them in a whimsical and adventurous romp against time.

Director Ronald Neame has used sight gags sparingly and instead relies heavily on the ex-c.I.A. agents’ low-keyed humor. Even though scenes with Glenda Jackson are few and far between, her calm, cool, controlled character provides a needed balance for the frenetic and exasperated role of Ned Beatty. As for Matthau, only a confirmed misanthrope with no sense of humor can resist his elusive and colorful character of Kendig.

Although the movie fails to deliver belly-laughs and knee-slapping responses, it does evoke some well-deserved and genuine smiles and chuckles in its place. For this reason, Hopscotch is forgiven its minor infractions and despite the fact that it will never be regarded as great, at least it is worthwhile seeing and does inherit a notable mention as one of its comments.
Want to hear your favourite band at SAC's?

by John Doyle

It's Saturday night, you're sitting in your regular bar waiting for the band to begin to play. The band's name is unfamiliar—buy they have to get a start somewhere so you're giving them the benefit of the doubt.

The thought crosses your mind that it would be nice if the band was famous or at least known locally. Scepticism gets time, instead of having another tune up and then proceeds to play, why not let someone know someone to talk to is the upper hand as the band time. Instead of having another tunes up and then proceeds to beer, why not let someone know who is un­known locally. Scepticism gets at the same mind that it would be nice if thinking of the doubt.

They find you hoping that the band begins to play a favou­rite for the band to begin to present in the bar at the time the band begins to play a favourite song, not only is it a personal favourite but they also do a good job of playing it. It's very similar to the —yayal, I'm impressed, wow." This is a sur­prise. All of these thoughts cross your mind at the same time.

Jody Stanton, manager of SAC's Pub, which if you hadn't guessed already is the afore mentioned regular bar frequented by you and your friends. New talent is always welcome in the pub. If you know of a band that you think would be successful in the pub, talk to Jody Stanton about it, get some promotional material, relevant in­formation, phone number, etc.

Diamonds in the Sky

Valentine was at one time a U.K. professional sprint champion. In fact, his earnings from asphalt endeavors is what financed the band's trip to converge. As such, he was famous. Valentine is not the best lyricist around; his songs speak more of triviality than important things like philosophies, flowers and trees.

Despite all this criticism, I can't say I dislike the album. It is definitely better than most bands' initial releases. Maybe it's the style I like and not the band. I don't think the album will make it to the charts, but who knows? Stranger things have happened. (After all—did get this job.)

(F.S.—R.A.F. is not an indication of aircraft allegiance. In this case, the famous acronym is said to stand for "rich and famous").

Somebody's Gotta Give is a prime example of her excellent vocalisation. Bad Bad Girl has the same strength, but is further glorified by an outstanding guitar solo.

Oh Daddy reminds me of the Fleetwood Mac tune of the same name, but is even slower, with a violin solo integrated. Mysterious Child is a much slower ballad. The piano bridge compliments the piece beautifully.

One more notable selection is Best Act in Town. This honky-tonk piece best exemplifies the way Ulrich can create a mood through her vocals.

This album has been criticised as being too old fashioned—too much in the style of the '60s ballad singers. I find the album quite refreshing, as there seems to have been a recent tendency against new female soloists recording their own works.

Long Nights may be successful on the Canadian market, but like many Canadian releases, don't expect to hear much of it down here.

Shari Ulrich:

Long Nights
by Peter Hagger

This album isn't exactly new, being released in mid-summer, but it is just too good to ignore. Shari Ulrich (for all you non-Canadians and Windsorites), was lead singer and violinist for the now defunct Canadian superstars, the Hometown Band. This band had a long association with Van Dyke (another Canadian biggie), and won a Juno Award for Best New Group in 1977. Long Nights is her first effort at writing—her lyrics are bountiful but don't really say a lot. The album does not need strong lyrics to survive. Shari Ulrich has one of the better female voices in the business. Even with a slightly general delivery, she has a good range. She knows her limits too and does not try to hopelessly extend these bounds.

The album is a mix of fast, slow and funky tunes. I imagine her act would perfect for a prestigious night club. I couldn't imagine hearing A Friend Like Me anywhere else.

Sometimes's Gotta Give is a prime example of her excellent vocalisation. Bad Bad Girl has the same strength, but is further glorified by an outstanding guitar solo.

Law School a gamble

by Peter Hrastovec

No one came close to breaking the "house bank." Had that been the case, some lucky "Diamond Jim" would have probablycornered the market on Monopoly money. But the gambling sharks all stayed at home last Friday night, making room for law students and friends at Monte Carlo Night, staged at the Faculty of Law.

The evening culminated with an auction of prizes ranging from baseball caps to an electric popcorn maker. Participants were asked to bid their "winnings," the prizes going to the most outrageous bidders. Faculty Dean Ron Ianni led a succession of professors and students as auctioneers.

The next Student Law Society entertainment offering is the Annual Law School Gong Show, scheduled for Friday, October 24th at Donlon Hall.

Paying for the privilege

"It's a crime the way record prices are going up." "I don't buy records anymore, I just tape all the songs I like from the stereo!" How often do you hear such quotes.

The first step was to set up a price comparison involving various record selling outlets in the city. The campus Bookstore, along with Sentry are representative of the multi-disc stores, Exclusive record retail outlets, Records On Wheels (Huron Church and Orleans Street stores), Sam The Record Man and Shopper's Record and Tape Mart (Dundas) were also surveyed. Among records priced are The Game, Queen's newest No. 1 release, The Wall, highly esteemed double album by Pink Floyd and Equinox (The Grand Illusion). These are just a few of the answers Lance Staffer Bill Buchanan set out to answer.

It is discouraging to pick up a record album and discover that it costs two dollars more than it did two years ago. Record high record prices are worth investigation. What is the dealer mark up on albums? Why are prices cheaper in the United States? How much profit is made in a "rock-buster" sale? These are just a few of the questions Lance Staffer Bill Buchanan set out to answer.

How are these prices set? An unidentified Records On Wheels employee pointed out that the store is sent a suggested sale price from the manufacturer (i.e. an A&M album may be listed for $9.99). "No one is going to pay that for an album, so we would mark it down to maybe $7.99." She went on to say that the outlet is taking a cut in profit, but still make money on the album itself costs the store approximately $5.57.

Claudia White, of Sam's Record Man gave some examples of list prices:

Polydor $10.40
CBS $9.29
Capital $8.98
Singles $1.99

Remember seeing those large orange stickers saying "Sale! $4.99?" Spokesman for Records On Wheels proved to be the most expensive outlet. The games room now found in the back of the store has been recommended to keep the store profitable.

Winchell is noted for notoriously high record prices. "Toronto has lower prices because the cost of shipping is less than ours," says the girl from ROW. "Most of Canada's record presses are located in or near Toronto. You also find price wars among competitors on Yonge Street."

The spokesman from Sam's attributes lower American prices to the bulk buying not possible in the smaller Canadian chains. Most of the records available in Canada are pressed on the better quality Canadian presses. This also accounts for higher prices.

The campus Bookstore, who are usually criticized for high pricing, fared well in the survey. Bookstore manager Ms. June Breidel told the Lance: "It must be made clear that we are not a record shop. We try to be competitive, but it's not our business." "We have an agent in Toronto who keeps figures on the most popular albums in the Universities across the province. We are then distributed those albums," remarked Breidel. "The store strive for a minimum markup. We're really only performing an extra service, but still try to maintain a competitive price."

The bookstore also carries classical not found always in other stores.

The Campus Bookstore carries all your favourites.

Record manufacturers have used gimmicks lately such as fancy packaging or "picture discs." According to the ROW spokesman, these are strictly collectors items and are not sold for quality, sound reproduction.

For the pub is the type of music they play. Also Sac's is limited for quality, sound reproduction and are price wars among competitors on Yonge Street."

The structure of Campus Recreation explained

by Lisa Leveque

New students at the University of Windsor this year may have noticed the extensive use of bulletin boards throughout the campus and the abundance of information they provide.

Campus Recreation, which relies heavily on this form of communication, can be considered as its advertising efficiency. This observation was an incentive to inquire further into the functions of this organization and to provide new students with an insight into its objectives and structure.

The Campus Recreation Department is headed by a director, Dr. Bob Boucher, and two coordinators, Jim Weese and Sharon McNamara, and a number of students who work the office hours and assist in competition, the ever-so-popular turkeys and the like. New students with an insight into the nature of the activity and the various intramural activities offered on three levels: recreational, intramural sports program, and competitions, the Campus Recreation Department finds it necessary to provide a moderate set of rules and regulations for the intramural activities. However, these standards by no means impede the enjoyment and excitement of participation.

For the winning teams, individual champions and outstanding participants, many awards are presented as bonuses for efforts and achievements. These awards range from trophies, plaques and medals, to beverage steins, t-shirts and certificates.

To give you an idea of some of the very diverse activities offered by Campus Recreation, here is a preview of some upcoming events: Men’s and Women’s Intramural Volleyball—Oct. 7th to Nov. 11th, Men’s Hockey—Oct. 27th to Mar. 26th, Coed Volleyball—Nov. 18th to Jan. 12th.

 Турkeys Unite

The annual Turkey Trot competition will take place at the H.R. track Friday, Oct. 10th. Show up at the track between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. to register. You will be told the exact distance you will run (between one and two miles) and you will estimate the time required to complete this distance. The closest competitor will receive a plum, handsome turkey for their holiday celebration. Everyone welcome.

In the contact division, Eclata Hall won their second game in a row with a 28-10 victory over the Mic Marx. That game was followed by a closely fought defensive struggle in which Law B emerged with a 6-0 victory over Cody Sucks. Two undefeated teams played excellent football in adverse conditions Monday night with Law A eventually overpowering the talented No Talent All-Stars 18-6 to take sole possession of second place.

In the non-contact league, the Engineering Chem Heads retained first place with a 41-19 victory over the high-spirited Tight Ends. The undefeated 1st Year Chaos team added another win by defeating the B.E.s 13-6. The “Mech” Attacks managed to hang on to second place with a 24-0 shut-out in their rain-soaked match with the Tight Ends.

Captains of both leagues should note that there will be no games Thanksgiving Monday and those games scheduled for Oct. 17 will be played on Oct. 29.

U. of W. host club races to second-place finish

by Scott McCalluch

The University of Windsor track and field team finished second overall at the University of Toronto by eleven points in the invitational track meet held here last Saturday. The men's team was second to Toronto, while the women's team was third, behind Toronto and Waterloo. Despite the cool temperatures and occasional drizzle, several new Lancer and Lancerette records were set.

Paul Roberts easily outdistanced the rest of the field in the 3000 metre steeplechase to set a new school record of 9:21.8 for that event. Windsor athletes placed one-two-three in the men's 100 m. with Kevin Coughlan coming across the line first, followed by Andy Buckstein and George Henry. Coughlan's time of 10.8 set a new record but all three men equalled or bettered the old mark of 11.2 seconds.

New records were also set in the men's 400 m., hurdles by John Key (first in 56.61), the men's javelin by John Udfury (first with a throw of 63.9 m.), men's long jump by Coughlan (third with a jump of 6.52 m.) and the women's long jump by Sandee Carson (third with a jump of 4.98 m.).

Coughlan also competed in the women's shot put, where she finished third with a throw of 12.28 m. She also competed in the women's discus, placing fourth with a throw of 33.45 m.

In the men's high jump, Dave Dempsey tied the school record of 1.85 m., while Jim Dowling achieved a height of 1.80 m.

Lancerette Paullette Pierre was fourth in the women's high jump with a height of 1.53 m. Pierre also competed in the women's 100 m., but placed second in a time of 16.4 seconds.

Linda Stuczynski, troubled by a nagging cold, was unable to finish the women's 3000 m., the day's first event, but Kathy Rieica placed second in that race with a time of 10:53.8. Rieica was third in the women's 1500 m. in 4:09.3.

In the day's second event, women's 800 m., the team topped the race with a time of 2:01.4. Al Bains also competed in this event, finishing in fourth spot in his heat.

Jolyane Condon of the University of Windsor ran well to place second in the women's 400 m. in 29.0 behind Waterloo's Payne Blackwood.

Windsor dominated the relay events, capturing three firsts and a second.

The 400 m. relay team of Pierre, Condon, Conlon and Lori Domarchuk won their event in a time of 52.6, while the team's version, featuring Buckstein, Henry, Coughlan and Kwaku Apagru finished second with a 45.4 clocking.

Other relay firsts came in both the men's and women's 1600 m. relays. Domarchuk and Condon joined Laurens and Leslie Yee to form the women's team which ran 4:26.0, with Buckstein, Eldracher, Kozak and John Key running 3:33.0 to win the men's section.

Teams from Laurier, Queen's Brock, York, McMaster, University of Toronto, Waterloo, Guelph and the Royal Military College journeyed to Windsor to compete in the day's events which were under the direction of Dr. Michael Salter.

Lancer gridmen no match for number one Blues

by Steve Rice

Last Friday's Ontario University Athletic Association football action had the Lancers and coach Gino Fracas singing the blues.

Or, more precisely, singing the praises of the University of Toronto Varsity Blues, who handed the Lancers a wholesale 42-8 defeat and proved that they are worth every wrinkle of their number one national ranking.

The Blues took their vengeance on the beleaguered Windsor secondary, led by a magnificent performance by air traffic controller Dan Feraday who safely guided down 25 of 35 flights for 479 yards and five touchdowns.

Feraday compiled those numbers in little more than three quarters of play before being replaced by rookie QB John Fishley whom he connected on five of eight for an additional 43 yards. That, combined with 81 more yards on the overland route, gave Toronto an impressive 603 yards of offense for the afternoon.

Toronto now rests safely on top of the OUAA with the only undefeated record, 4-0, and this loss is their first in eight attempts.

Napper signed the Lancers a while ago with Toronto Blues. Mallender successfully used up his five years of eligibility made him ineligible.

But he is not thinking about that. "I'm not in top form, not like I would be if I'd played four games into the season," Mallender said at practice Wednesday. "But I'm coming along day by day. I'll be ready for Saturday.

"They run variations off the wishbone T," Fracas said. "But it's something that has to be overlooked in order to compete."

He's back!

By now the news of Scott Mallender's return to the Windsor lineup has spread from one corner of the campus to the other. Certainly, it has reached the ears of every coach and team attending Wilfrid Laurier University and his lawyer, Geoff Mallander, successfully gained an injunction against the rule which the OUAA main Tackle John Celentano ($5) leaves in vain as Blues QB Dan Feraday sends out another long-range missile.

However, a loss in any of the first four games of the season after having made them 1-3, not about to break tradition.

Lancers, no reeling at 1-3, were top of the OUAA with the only undefeated record, 4-0, and they have yet to break open with the rushing which limits the dimension of air on the field.

"We're going to keep peckin' away," said Fracas of the run. "It's a matter of execution and we've had breakdowns in our assignments at the point of attack."

"They had what's called a C-15 fungus which made them bumpy and patchy. Of course, the other teams had to play on it, too, but they seemed a little more bumpy for us," he concedes that return of a second day, "I don't care if I win by one or by 50. We've got to win it."

And while Mallender has his sights on the playoffs, he allows that the chance to play may give him another shot at making it in the CFL.

"I think if I have a good showing, the CFL will definitely take another look. But professional football isn't the only thing in life. If I don't make the CFL, I'll be the end of Scott Mallender."

Chris Hreljac is the Ontario Universities Athletic Association golf champion for the second straight year.

And for the second straight year Hreljac and the rest of the golf team finished second in the OUAA championship at Glen Abbey Golf Club in Oakville Monday and Tuesday.

"We have an excellent chance to make the playoffs," said Lancer coach Gino Fracas Tuesday. "You have to figure the best player in the country is going to make some kind of difference."

Feraday was quick to add that Mallender's return shouldn't take anything away from the performance of rookie quarterback Rob Dalley who has been at the pivot all season.

"He's done just a superb job for us," Fracas said of the 19-year-old, first-year Business student. "It's just that when you have your veteran quarterback returning, that's the guy who's going to do it for you." But is Mallender ready to take the helm after the long layoff?

New logo's origin disputed by graphic artist

by Laurie Bergeime and E.P. Chant

A graphic artist with a Windsor firm claims he came up with the "Five Ws, forming the Canadian maple leaf" idea for the new University of Windsor logo, but was not given credit for the basic design by the university. Al Pazitch, the artist with Leadley Advertising said he was asked by the university to design a logo and that he came up with the "Five Ws, maple leaf" idea after playing around with the letters.

When he handed his design in to the committee that was working on a new logo design, it was rejected but he was paid for his time.

A month later (September of this year), a copy of the university decision upon was unveiled to the media and the community. A slightly more flashy one than Pazitch's, but with the same basic concepts.

The work on the university logo was done by Harris Advertising of Windsor, after a committee of various people at the university decided what they wanted it in, said John Lafreniere. Assistant Vice-President of Communications.

Referendums elsewhere affect student organizations by C. Woodrow, The Varsity, and The Gazette.

The University of Western Ontario has voted to pull out of the National Union of Students (NUS), and in a similar move, the University of Toronto has rejected a proposed fee increase for the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS).

Both referendums were held last week.

At UWindsor students voted 2,091 in favour of rejecting membership to NUS and 1,296 voted to stay in. The 3,387 votes cast in the referendum constituted approximately 20 per cent of the student population. According to a spokesman in the Students' Council office it was one of the highest voter turnouts in years.

Jim Vair, Western Students' Council Vice-President External and leader of the "No" side said he was very happy and that he was generally pleased with the campaign.

"There were some problems and misconceptions on both sides," he said. "If there were errors of fact made on the "Yes" side, it was unintentional, he said.

Chris McKillop, one of the leaders of the "Yes" side and a former Vice-President External said, "There was a lot of lying going on. Does the mud wash off? I hope it does."

He went on to say the campaign was one of the dirtiest in years. The campaign had nothing to do with issues, it focused on personal grudges. The UWOS Students' Council will be setting up an ad hoc committee at the next meeting to decide what to do with the approximately $15,000 that regularly went to the National Union of Students. The Board of Governors will hold the money until a decision is made regarding the allocation of the money.

At the University of Toronto, in a similar move, students voted to reject a fee increase of $1.50 to $3.00 per student for the Ontario Federation of Students. By a vote of 2,265 to 1,113, the increase was voted down.

At the polls the pulling was considered heavy, 65 per cent of those students voting rejecting the fee increase.

Allan Campbell, leader of the "No" to the Increase" campaign said he interpreted the results as a "swift kick in the rear for the OFS." He went on to say that OFS and the Students' Council conducted the campaign for acceptance of the fee increase was "out of touch with the students." He cited this as one of the reasons the referendum failed. The reluctance of SAC to finance a "No" campaign also helped defeat the proposal.

SAC Vice-President of External Affairs Peter Galway said the referendum failed because SAC didn't adequately explain OFS to the students. He said the rejection was a repudiation of the fee increase, not of OFS. "The students have spoken," he said, "but we ran the risk of being alone."

Galway admitted the results of the referendum at Toronto would affect the outcome of other institutions. "We think the OFS increase is essential. I wouldn't want to see these referenda [sic] fail," he said.

OPS chairperson, Karen Dambinsky, said, "This set back at the U of T tells us there is work to do." She also said she was concerned about the sleazy and misleading campaign that was apparent on the University of Toronto campus.

Currently the University of Windsor student is paying $1.00 to The National Union of Students and $1.50 to the Ontario Federation of Students per year. The OPS has asked Students' Administrative Council here to run a referendum next spring, asking for a fee increase of $1.50.

SAC celebrates

by Debbie Staley

Judging by the smiles on the faces of the Students’ Administrative Council (SAC) and CJAM Radio crew when they threw open the doors to the station last night, they were all too happy with the results of the recent referendum. Students who are happy was the result of “taking the problem directly to the students” rather than engaging in “simple advertising campaigns.”

The members of SAC feel the positive results reflect the students’ belief in SAC, and said Shaban, this is “a clear mandate that they have the students’ support.”

Shaban feels “the undergraduates are responsible for our victory, however, they were surprised with the dispersion of the votes.” This problem did not seem to be due to advertising by SAC or other university clubs.

Both Shaban and Mitchell feel the referendum results were inevitable since “the students never really knew why the money was needed.” This year, SAC is not very surprised with their victory, however, they were surprised with the dispersion of the votes. The faculties which they had expected to receive the most support from did not come through, whereas the faculties which they had not expected a great deal of support from did.

Grant Gelinas was very disappointed by the lack of support received from the Human Kinetics, Drama and Music faculties, since the radio provides programs directly oriented toward these areas.

Not only do they wish to thank those who supported them, but SAC is also interested in the reasons for the “no” votes. Gelinas feels this information will enable SAC to better understand their deficiencies and accommodate the students.

If plans for CJAM’s future are carried out, Gelinas feels CJAM “can become the social fabric of the university community and eliminate the fragmentation that now exists.” This statement clearly eliminates any of the epitaphs thought out by the bored pessimist and calls for a new motto, “long live CJAM!”

CJAM ruins pessimists’ day

It looks as though the university pessimists will have to forget about the grey tombstone, because it appears that CJAM student radio is not dead.

This year’s referendum results simply verified what the Station Manager of CJAM, Grant Gelinas, already knew: the students of the University of Windsor want a radio station.

According to Gelinas, the changes that will result from the referendum will deal with expansion rather than changed programming. Gelinas stated they have received approval from the administration to put speakers in Huron, Vanier, and Cody Halls, but have been bombarded with excuses explaining the lack of follow-through for the referendum.

This year, CJAM is going to try to make the station available to all university students. The expansion of the CJAM facilities will constitute the “intermediate step” between now and the achievement of an FM license, said Gelinas.

According to Gelinas, getting the license will be a long drawn out process until the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) decides to recognize CJAM. However, the referendum results will benefit CJAM since it will provide them with a financial base, which is a requirement for an FM license.

Social scientists societize (?)

by Joan Bodler

Social Science students no longer have to feel left out when they see ads for beer bashes and other events in other faculties. They can now look forward to attending these events.

The Lance, Vol. LIII, No. 6, Friday, October 17, 1980, Page Three
The principle of democracy is the right of choice, but also, and more important, it is the burden of choice - the responsibility of standing up and being counted.

- M. Gratten O'Leary

While it appears that the Students' Administrative Council and CJAM have won victories in this week's referendums, it must be noted that the monies must be approved by the University. Thus far, the University has set all fees for students at this university. The Board of Governors meeting is sure to be a simple rubber stamp of the proposed fee increase, but it is wise to note that they have turned down fee increases in the past.

Congratulations should be in order for SAC and CJAM, but in the case of the former, one is left instead with the feeling that some sort of miracle has occurred and SAC has been pulled from the depths of its ineptitude by a ten dollar miracle.

Perhaps ineptitude is too strong a word. Perhaps ignorance would be better. Compare, for instance, the CJAM and SAC approaches to the whole campaign.

CJAM had their staffers out campaigning last weekend, this whole idea was first tossed around. They had well motivated people who were sure of what they wanted and fairly sure of how about getting it. They spoke in low tones about how good they could be if only they had the money. In short, everyone at the station knew what the whole deal was all about.

SAC had four or five people stashed away in their second floor Centre office who started mysteriously whispering about two weeks before the vote (for so it seemed) about "the referendum".

SAC President David Simmons spent most of the time, with which he should have been preparing for the referendum, out of town. Conferences in Toronto, boards in Toronto, conference in Winnipeg. And, on the first night of the election, Simmons is off to the NUS conference in Toronto, to attend the Windsor, Ontario side. Along the line Mr. Simmons' priorities got all mixed up.

But Simmons' absence was not the only problem the SAC executive had with this campaign. Rumours of internal squabbles abound, and one executive said that "Simmons didn't really go along with the referendum idea from the start. It wasn't something he had come up with and therefore it wasn't a good idea."

So much for the word of mouth campaign. As for the campus media, it was fairly simple for CJAM to be its own best friend. It has the equipment, and it is an effective advertising vehicle all by itself.

But CJAM did not stop at that. Since September, they have been running ads in The Lance. At least two per week, and paying for them. The progression of advertising showed a well planned, well financed, and well organized advertising campaign by CJAM.

SAC, on the other hand, was scurrying around at the last minute making special arrangements with the print shop and The Lance to use facilities which would be difficult, if not impossible, for most other groups on campus to use. The posters came out one week in advance of the voting day. The advertising consisted of one centre spread ad in The Lance. The cloth button-stickers also came out one week in advance, and found many creative uses. We have one stuck to the refrigerator holding up the telephone messages.

So much for the media aspect. And now to costs.

Advertising space in just about any student newspaper is dirt cheap, and very reliable, reaching a very specific market. The market that both CJAM and SAC needed to win their referendums.

CJAM spent about $350 total on their campaign. That includes all the costs in the paper, their posters, and all other printing costs. SAC spent "about $200" (according to John Rizzi, External Affairs Commissions) on posters and buttons. The Centre spread ad in The Lance will cost them nearly $400. Total cost — something close to $600.

SAC may argue that the cost of the ad in The Lance is not really a campaign expense, since SAC runs the Student Media Corporation, which includes The Lance. Any expenses incurred by SAC when they run an ad are really only "paper expenses". SAC does not, in effect pay for ads. But the method in which it was obtained was questionable.

SAC Vice-President Jim Shaban is ecstatic about the victory. Shaban stated last night that it was indicative of the fact that "SAC went to the students. We didn't sit up here and ask for them, we went down and asked for them.

The results of poor planning: using all kinds of your money to get more of your money. Not that the additional money wasn't needed, but that the method in which it was obtained was questionable.

SAC Vice-President Shaban is ecstatic about the victory. SAC went to the students when they were absolutely desperate. At the last minute. And cost them your money. We can only hope that SAC will manage its new money better than the old.

The Lance is late coming out this week because we wanted to get all the election news in. Sorry, kids.

The Fortnighter

By Chris Woodrow

The reasons for celebrating Thanksgiving are far ranging and diverse. Many different cultures from all walks of life give differing reasons for celebrating Thanksgiving.

In the USA, it's a time to remember the voyage of the Mayflower and the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth.

When asked what we are celebrating, my sample comprised of choice, but also, and more important, it is the burden of choice - the responsibility of standing up and being counted.

Student's Councils and radios in bad shape elsewhere

by E.P. Chant
and Canadian University Press

The referendum victories of both the Students' Administrative Council and CJAM Radio here are indeed surprising in light of the situation of similar experiments at other Canadian universities.

At the University of Alberta, in both the Students' Union at the University of Alberta in Montreal, two student bodies which go hand-in-hand in the running of student councils have run up what can only be described as huge debts.

"The Students' Union (SU) at the University of Alberta, a body which runs the student newspaper, the McGill Daily, has not exactly been kosher in its budget and has its budget examined and approved by a separate Students' Council, lost approximately $320,000 last year.

The SU lost over $87,000 on its day-to-day operations in 1979-80, reported the university's student newspaper, the Gateway. In addition, it spent over $140,000 on capital (equipment and renovations) and made an additional repayment on the mortgage for the Students' Union Building. Also, the SU's capital expenditure was $61,000 over its original budget projection.

The debt, though run up by the SU, is the Students' Council's responsibility. At a council meeting in September, the Gateway quoted Arts representative Randy Dawson saying this to the SU, "Finally you're asking us to sit back and accept a $320,000 loss. I'm not happy to notwithstanding the audit without any explanation of the problems we're going to get out of debt."

SU proposed some cuts in services, but CAU finance manager Glyden Headley apologized for the accounting mistakes. "The accounting methods of the SU have been conducted on a half-yearly basis and would have to be looked into, as well as keeping a more careful check on the university."

CUTTING BACK on services will include the Student's Council's way out of its financial mess, along with borrowing more money from the university to continue SU operations (as of March 31, 1980, the SU owed the university over $400,000 in loans). At McGill University, the Students' Council owes the university administration approximately $715,000 which was borrowed by the council via the McGill Students' Society.

Since 1979, the McGill Daily, a newspaper owned by the SU, has not found until half-way through the year after the budget had been passed.

Although money was available, the campus radio station was shut down by the Student Council because it was not worth the expenditure.

The Wilfrid Laurier University Student Union decided September 14 to disband Radio Laurier. Mike Brown, council president, said the station was not worth the investment.

"The amount of Radio Laurier was not serving the campus, (it) was not worth the expenditure."

Brown admitted, "some people were hurt and deprived because of their strong commitment to the radio station but that is not enough to make Radio Laurier work."

Ted Musgrove, radio station manager, said in the student newspaper, The Cord weekly, that the criterion for closing the station as a "trade off" for the building of a new student lounge on campus.

"Mike is using Radio Laurier as a scapegoat for the costs of the new floor", said Musgrove. According to Musgrove, it was a planning committee of the students who chose the station, despite protest from the staff of the station. He also said that the decision was made prior to the September 14 meeting.

Musgrove further charged that the financial argument, cannot be used because John Baskis, treasurer of the student council, said there was no shortage of funds.

The new lounge will cost $220,000.

Enrolment increases the second year in a row says Registrar

by John Doyle

Full-time enrolment at the University of Windsor is up an estimated 420 students from last year, said Registrar Frank Smith this week.

The enrolment for 1980-81 is estimated at 6,197, Smith added. He is pleased with this year's increase, noting it is the second year of solid increase after three years with no enrolment increase.

The November 1st figure released to The Lance is estimated rather than exact because the registrar has not yet received notices on payment from the cashier's office. Nonetheless, he feels the figures are fairly accurate.

Only one faculty experienced a decline, the Faculty of Arts. The programs that decided to close a substantial amount were Computer Science, Business, and Engineering. All others either held their own or showed a slight increase, said Smith.

Smith added he feels the university enrolment had already bottomed out and now was on a steady rise. The larger enrolment will eventually result in an increase in grants from the Ontario government, this increase being spread over the next four years due to the system by which the grants are allocated, he explained.

Are your habits a hazard to your health?

"Are you running on all cylinders?" If you're looking for a job at GM you're probably not. But if your job is depressing you, or if your health habits are wearing away at your mortal being, then it might be a good idea to check out the School of Nursing's Health Hazard Evaluation Day.

Spreading the good word

It may not be the same thing as being the Ambassador to Chile (or even Ypsilanti), but the title does have a catchy ring to it: Student Ambassador. You don't have to cross borders but you might have to cross paths with your old teachers because one of the jobs you will be doing as a student ambassador is returning to your old high schools and spreading the world of how beneficial an education at our university can be.

But that's not all. The student ambassadors conduct tours of the university campus for secondary school students, converse with prospective university students, help write The Spirit of Windsor newspaper and send it out to these students and their high school guidance officers, assist in special events (they will be the guides at the upcoming Open House), and conduct telephone campaigns to discuss with university applicants their course selection.

Cheryl Hemstreet, assistant to Joe Saso, Director of Secondary School Liaison, is hoping to add to the flock of ambassadors this year. The service has been in existence for the last two years and presently the group numbers fifteen.

Minimum wage, $3.00 per hour, is provided for some of the services performed by the ambassadors. But the key-word is spirit, not finances. Ms. Hemstreet maintains the ambassadors are "a group of students who are enthusiastic about the university".

In the future, Ms. Hemstreet hopes to send her ambassadors out to lecture at high schools. "It's not the Marines, but..."

If you think you might be interested in joining the student ambassador group, contact Cheryl Hemstreet at the Liaison Office, by ext. 218.

All we want is blood

The Nursing Society at the University of Windsor in cooperation with the Canadian Red Cross Society is sponsoring a Blood Donor Clinic Tuesday, October 28, 1980 from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in the Ambassador Auditorium at the University Centre.

Members of the community are invited to attend this clinic as well as students, staff and faculty. The faculty or school with the highest percentage of its members donating blood will be awarded the Red Corrugate Plaque.

Parking is available in parking lot M and the Assumption Church lot, located adjacent to each other off University Avenue West.

The goal of this clinic is 250 units of blood.

Marked for Sales Management Interview, November 14th Campus student gay club ratified:

by Ed McMahon

Mostly routine matters were discussed at last week's Students' Council (SAC) meeting on Thursday, October 9, according to Jim Shaban, SAC Vice-President, Administration.

SAC passed a motion to undertake negotiations with the university administration to take over management of the University Centre Game Rooms, which SAC feels could be made a more reliable source on an exactly similar one: both involving Social Work students being allowed by ballot boxers to vote in the Social Science Society referendum. SAC passed a motion to ratify the move on the recommendation of the social work students being allowed by ballot boxers to vote in the Social Science Society referendum.

"At least one other faux pas was being made by some ballot boxers. The Lance observed first-hand one mistake and has a reliable source on an exactly similar one: both involving Social Work students being allowed by ballot boxers to vote in the Social Science Society referendum. The Board of Governors does not consider the significance of referendum results. The person who will be presenting the results to the Board of Governors has any doubts about the correctness of the results, the person can note those doubts or even advise the Board to reject the results. The person who will be presenting the results to the Board of Governors meeting on Tuesday, October 21 is SAC President David Simmons.

More referendum stuff

Will Simmons note voting irregularities?

by E.P. Chant

Although they probably didn't do much to effect the outcome, there were some voting irregularities during this week's referendums/elections.

On a quick tour of the campus on Tuesday, several SAC/CAJM, and Social Science Society posters were still up. All campaign posters are supposed to be taken down at least 24 hours before an election or referendum.

Further, on Tuesday a CAJM staff-member was observed at the polling station in the University Centre wearing a CAJM T-shirt. In 1977-78 when a referendum was held to give The Lance its own funding, the newspaper staffers were told to keep away from the polls if they were wearing their Lance shirts. The electoral officer that year ruled that the shirts constituted "walking posters."

...In one instance, one of this newspaper's staff members was allowed to vote on all the referendum questions. Newspaper people are allowed to vote, so that's not the problem - the problem is that part-time students were not supposed to be voting, but the student member is one of those and was allowed to vote. Whether this was a completely isolated case is difficult to say.

At least one other faux pas was being made by some ballot boxers. The Lance observed first-hand one mistake and has a reliable source on an exactly similar one: both involving Social Work students being allowed by ballot boxers to vote in the Social Science Society referendum.

According to Jim Shaban, SAC's Vice-President of Administration, Social Work students should not have been voting in that referendum, since Social Work constitutes a distinct school in the Faculty of Social Science and since Social Work students already have their own society.

Re-run results must gain Board of Governor approval before they become official. The Board will consider the percentage of eligible voters who did exercise their franchise: that was approximately 20 percent in the SAC and CAJM referendums and 33 percent in the Social Science Society one.

The Board of Governors does not consider the significance of any noted voting irregularities, according to Shaban. He explained, however, that if the person who presents the results to the Board of Governors has any doubts about the correctness of the results, that person can note those doubts or even advise the Board to reject the results.

The person who will be presenting the results at the Board of Governors meeting on Tuesday, October 21 is SAC President David Simmons.

University Players open new season with a waltz

by Peter Hristovec

"What a farce. It's so sad" muses General St. Pe, the central character in Jean Anouilh's The Waits of the Toreadors. His petite diatribe captures the foolishness of man's aimless pursuits in acts of love and war. And the play, directed by Robert E. Dorrell and performed by the University Players, is itself a dramatic farce, a grotesque exaggeration of virtue transformed into folly, a theatrical reminder of how golden memories can lose their brilliance in the wake of darkening reality.

General St. Pe, a retired cavalry officer, lives in the romantic world of his youth. Failing to observe that time has taken its toll, he becomes its unsuspecting victim. He dwells upon the minor museum pieces of his past with the reckless abandon of a daydreaming child. In any real sense, he is inevitably doomed to destruction.

But the irony of fate is not in its underlying note of despair. Rather, it is the influx of the comic element, characterizing the "pathetic" as the grotesque or the "ridiculous", which truly captivates our interests. In essence, what is presented to us is a comic plot with a qualified "happy ending" — a happiness upon which each of us must render a personal judgment.

Andrew Willmer does a fair job as General St. Pe. Despite his occasional "loss of character", Willmer properly dispatched the General's propensity to elicit a sarcastic response in the face of an ever-persistent evocation of a past.

And truth is represented in tandem by Mme. St. Pe (Marlene Charney) and Dr. Bankast (Lance K. McIntyre). Miss Charney is as splendid as she is vitriolic in attacking the General's foolish self-obsessions. McIntyre is prim and gentle as he balances the pressures of male ego with a conservative understanding of social propriety.

A true delight in this production is Lionel Walsh's interpretation of Gaston, the General's Secretary. Across the General's "private" life, Walsh captures the foolishness of man's aimless pursuits in acts of love and war.

The play continues tonight and Saturday at the Essex Hall Theatre. "Waltzing " in the aisles will be prohibited.

THE CINEMA CRITIC

STARDUST MEMORIES

by Rosemari Comiso

Woody Allen, writer, director and the exalted comedian for the past two decades has replaced his funny-man persona with a more serious and philosophical character.

Stardust Memories, his latest endeavor, is so heavy with philosophical questions and serious contemplation one gets the impression that he was trying to make a filmic tribute to his revered idol, Ingmar Bergman. While successfully achieving his goal, he all but loses his identity in the attempt.

At the same time, his role in this movie will probably be the closest we will ever come to seeing the real Woody Allen without his traditional clown facade.

In Stardust Memories, he conveniently portrays a famous comedy writer, director and actor named Sandy Bates who bears such a striking resemblance to Allen that it becomes difficult trying to separate the authentic Allen from the fictitious Bates. Like Woody, Sandy has deviated from his accustomed comic style and made a film that differs so drastically from previous ones that he spends much of his time explaining to audiences and producers the reasons for this change.

With this built-in explanation, Allen has anticipated the obvious responses that Stardust Memories would inevitably provoke, but fails to heed the repeated criticism echoed in the movie, "Too much reality is not what the people want". For this reason, audiences will feel as alienated by Woody as Bates' Jovens Doree (Charlotte Rampling), Isabel (Marie-Christine Barrault) and Jessica (Jessica Harper) do.

Moreover, Woody Allen fans will leave the theatre with a genuine sense of betrayal realizing that he neglected to deliver the very commodity he has come to be known and loved for — comedy.

Chamber music to be heard in court

A concert of chamber music will be presented by the Trio Trian, Op 38 and the Trio Pathetique by Glinka — two duets, Souvenir (cello and piano) by Drdla and Du Lontano, Fantasia (clarinet and piano) by Kavak都是 will also be presented.

Oktoberfest arrives on campus, catch it at SAC's

GROTTRYBEATS

by Peter Haggert

How many of you alcoholics even noticed there was no band in the pub Tuesday and Wednesday? Because of the short week and numerous festivities planned for this weekend, live entertainment was kept under wraps until Thursday.

Thursday, and tonight, SAC's will feature a German Oom Pah Pah Band to bring to the university the spirit of the Oktoberfest. Along with the band, the pub will serve various German foods and mugs of beer.

Saturday night, the Student Council will present a twinebill of entertainment, in honour of homecoming. The music of Masque will be eminiscating from the Ambassador Auditorium. For those of you who don't climb stairs, or find your radar heading directly for the basement, SAC's pub will feature the return of the Grottrybeats.

If you will remember, the Grottrybeats aren't exactly the lads from Liverpool, but pretty darn close. These four Toronto musicians, who even dress and talk like the Beatles, feature three sets of complete Beatle material. Admission to see the Grottrybeats and Masque is $2.00 for alumni and students, and $3.00 for guests.

English Beat at Bookie's

by John Liddle

The English Beat are in gear! After religously playing (I mean experiencing) their album, "Just Can't Stop It!" and catching their live performance last Sunday at Bookies in Detroit, I'm sold. Their energetic, strikingly original sound is a refreshing, moving experience.

Consider the two musical styles that have prevailed in the clubs of the civilized world over the past few years: punk rock and reggae. Take the two, add shake and bake, and voila! It's the hybrid music known as "ska." Other bands that are defining this style are the Specials, Madness, and, to a lesser extent, Desmond Dekker. Come to think of it, who has heard any bad ska? Not I. For the record, true ska has been alive and well for almost two decades, bailing from, where else, but funky Kingston (Jamaica).

On Wednesday, the Bowling Green Brass Quintet treated School of Music students to an hour of music in Ambassador Auditorium, accompanied by Paul McSherry on the piano. Members of the quintet are Edwin Betts and George Nowak on trumpet, Ivan Hammond on tuba, David Glassmire playing trombone and David Rogers on french horn.

English Beat at Bookie's

The English Beat draw on a vocal style more than vaguely reminiscent of that of Toots and the Maytalls, and rhythmic melodies that remind one of the Rastafarian genius, Bob Marley (they're quite a bit faster, mind you). Take this, add a magnificent sax and slamming percussion and the pulsating musical experience is wrought.

To the album, One of the more outstanding cuts is a cover version of Smokey Robinson's "Team of a Clown." Although there is no improving on the original, the English Beat do it more than justice. It's fast, but has the discipline that makes ska the fantastic party music that it is. Another song, "Can't Get Used To Losing You" was originally recorded by that violent punk, Andy Williams. With its punchy bass and smooth sax solo, it's a delightful slow no exception. After this small lapse, they bounce back with "Best Friend," another fine cut.

Their best work, as the sweaty crowd at Bookies will surely attest, is "Twist and Shout." Lyrically, there isn't much to it, but it's the awesome, overwhelming power of the music that makes the song a hit.

Their live sound is a startling, electric experience. Their set never had a dull moment, fast paced and incredibly entertaining, in the intimate confines of a small club. It's for this reason that the trend has been for many artists to seek out the smaller taverns, where music is more personal, and the performers are humans, not demi-gods.

Well, I've attempted to be objective, but I've heard the album, so I'm prejudiced. Get it!

The Boss: born to rock and roll

by Laurie Bergine

"You've been there before; you already know. You sent last week; now you know. You're going tonight; you're gonna know." (Larry Barone, a first year student, one of Bruce Springsteen's greater fans, to some of his friends.)

"Know what you're asking yourself? Know why the Boss IS the BOSS?"

Thursday, October 26, Bruce Springsteen came to Detroit for his second show. It was the first concert booked of his 1980 tour at Cobo Hall and sold out quickly.

For nearly four hours, with only one twenty minute break, he and the E Street Band, rock and rolled Cobo Hall and all of its contents.

Solos from all the members of the band were heard to the extreme delight of the audience. Leading the guys in solo performances was Clarence Clemons, who plays the sax as if it were as easy as playing in the back streets.

Clemons and Springsteen maneuvered towards the edge of the stage, enticing the main floor audience awaited them with open arms.

Although Springsteen asked everyone to remain in their seats, the music was too much for many, and the aisles were filled with dancing fans.

The Boss sang most of the songs from his new album, The River, which brought continuous clapping through most of the show. "Born to Run", "Thunder Road" and "Rosalita" had everyone out of their chairs. Even Mitch Ryder's tune "Deed with the Blue Dress On", sung by Springsteen, had the house dancing in the aisles.

There were many high points to this concert. If he wasn't singing to the crowds content, he was jumping from the stage, into the crowds and dancing with the girls; all the while staying close to his bodyguards.

After the last set, when everyone knew he would be back, the crowd of "Bruce, Bruce. Bruce..." started up, raising in tempo until the Boss again showed his face on stage.

Three times he came back and these being his true fans, all knew what his last encore would be: "A Quarter to Three", even after this they were reluctant to leave.

The energy he emits when singing, the response he receives from his crowd, NOW YOU KNOW WHY THE BOSS IS TRULY THE BOSS. He has proved it again.

MONLIGHT MADNESS Downtown Windsor Tuesday Night!
Bruce Springsteen: The River

by Dave Garlick

Springsteen’s first album of the eighties continues on in the exact same way as his previous four. Springsteen’s style hasn’t changed much over the years, but then again, why should it? The two album set has the typical combination of hard driving songs and heart-rending ballads, all written by Bruce. He may have written them all by himself, but he can’t perform them all by himself. His side-kick, Clarence ‘The Big Man’ Clemons, the Tenor Saxophone player, shines through on this album more than on any other. It’s hard to pick just one or two tunes where his influence is felt most.

The only player that doesn’t shine through as much as he should is Steve Van Zandt. He is an excellent guitar player, as he exhibits in his solo on “Crush on You”, but he is completely overshadowed by Springsteen.

When a performer like Springsteen puts out a two album set, it’s hard to pick out the best songs, because they are almost all fantastic. “Sherry Darling,” “Jackson Cage,” “Hungry Heart,” “Out in the Street,” “Crush on You,” (see what I mean?) “You Can Look,” “Point Blank,” “Cadillac Ranch,” and many others all move with the same Bruce style. They are heavy rockers and are destined to become hits.

In a review of the September 9, 1980, concert at last summer’s Harvard Square, The Boston Globe said: “In a review of the September 9, 1980, concert at last summer’s Harvard Square, The Boston Globe said: “An Australian hit single, “I See Red”, was taken from the album but it never even rippled over here. I mean, what’s the big deal about having a hit single in Australia! How many kangaroos own runabouts over there? Not many. They probably don’t even have the Visa cards to buy them with.

There is no reason why Windsor should ever have this album out. The two album set is good, but it sounds very much like Eddie Money. Still the song “Two Hearts Full of Love” is the first song on the record and it is good but sounds very much like Eddie Money. Still the song was well played and Eddie Schwartz’s voice has an appeal all its own. If this album ever gains some airplay I would have heard it. There is also no reason for someone to follow up or imitate something that just because it is a current chick. Musical choice to believe that this song would be the first hit.

When the new-wave tumors took the stage at last summer’s horrible Battle Of The Bands at the Can-Am Jam, in both cases Windsor’s rock “con­­nisseurs” really showed their stuff.

In a review of the September 6, Kinks concert the Windsor Star claimed the band “out­­punked” the punks. Such a statement ignores the Kinks’ musical history and their tongue­­in­­­check approach to rock. By infusing en­­curing punk rhythms into their repertoire the Kinks acknowledged the music’s merit. Needless to say, they left every­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­&...
Lancers fumble their way into OUAA basement

by Steve Rice

Turnovers. That's the one word that Lancer head coach Gino Fracas used to sum up a 36-23 loss to Laurier Golden Hawks last Saturday at south campus field. It was an apt choice.

Turnovers translate into five fumbles and two interceptions and they effectively ensured Laurier the victory with only a minimal effort on their parts.

There were, however, indications at the start that the Lancers, under the guidance of returning veteran quarterback Scott Mallender would make this game the first in a series of victories which would rocket them into the playoffs.

After Hawk Ian Dunbar boomed a punt deep in the end zone for a single, Mallender moved the Lancers, in only their second possession of the game, 75 yards in five plays and capped the drive with a 39-yard pass to tight end Wyatt Clark.

That didn't seem to rouse the Hawks as much as it did the Lancers. After a series of short jousts at centerfield, Craig Mallender, who caught seven of his brother's passes for 98 yards, fumbled on his own 41 yard line. From there the opportunistic Hawks moved the ball into the end zone in just eight plays. That series, which ended with a five-yard run by back Paul Fergus, was typical of both the Lancers' offense sputtering at the wrong time or coughing the ball up. Windsor got touchdowns and field goals of 42 and 12 yards.

Windsor got touchdowns via the scoreboard from Paul Falcon, Billy Burke, Bennie Fickett and Chris Burgans. Ian Dunbar converted all four scores and added two singles and a field goal of 42 and 12 yards.

Windsor got touchdowns from Wyatt Clark, Scott Essery and John Ivan with Miljkovic converting all three and adding a single. Essery also kicked a one-pointer.

Statistics good

Statistically, the Lancers played an exceptional game - one of their best of the season. It was primarily a matter of the offense sputtering at the wrong time or coughing the ball up. Mallender, in his first game of the season with only a week of practice, did an admirable job. And his return seemed to spark the rest of the offense to greater things.

Mallender completed 20 of 34 passes for 314 yards and three touchdowns while Rob Dalley, who had done a fine job of quarterbacking the team through the first four games, completed three of three passes for 96 yards from his halfback position.

"I missed a couple of crucial passes that I should have made," said a disappointed Mallender after the game. "We did all right offensively, but we just turned it over in crucial situations.

"A lot of people wondered why I didn't wait until next year to play when I'd have a full year. But I really thought this team had a good shot of making the playoffs. I guess I can't say 'there's always next year.'"

Laurier opened up their lead on the first series of the second half as Fickett ran in from seven yards out after quarterbacking the team through the first four games, completed three of three passes for 96 yards from his halfback position.

"I missed a couple of crucial passes that I should have made," said a disappointed Mallender after the game. "We did all right offensively, but we just turned it over in crucial situations.

Introducing the 1980-81 basketball Lancerettes

by Steve Rice

An excellent blend of height and speed promise to make this season's edition of Lancerette basketball both thrilling to watch and profitable for the team.

One half of the team of 12 are rookies which might be cause for concern to most standards. But the six who have invaded the ranks of Lancerette-Land have proven that they are worthy of their positions.

Coach Sue Swain

"This year we have rookies that can support the older players rather than the older players having to bring the rookies along," said coach Sue Swain Wednesday. "It's a really nice mix."

One particularly pleasing freshmen entry for Swain is six foot tall Theresa McGee who Swain described as "an all-around player who moves well for someone her size."

"She'll be a key," remarked Swain.

As well, there are two players at 5'9" on the squad and another at 5'8", but according to Swain, "they can all jump really well which is like adding a couple of inches to their height."

The Lancerettes also have strength in returning forward Tracy McNair who finished eighth in rebounding last year and was a second team all-star in Tier II. Dubbed "Whiz Kid" in her rookie season last year, this fiery-haired talent can really do a job under the boards.

Because of the quickness on the team, they will employ a number of offensive and defensive tactics to take advantage of it.

"We'll last break a lot," said Swain. "And we hope we go with a full-court man-to-man most of the time because the girls will be able to come back and help out with their speed. We've got the speed, so we might use it."

Windsor finished fourth in Tier II of the two-division league last year and thus were eliminated from any further action.

Teams in Tier II must finish first or second in order to move on to a pre-final tournament in which they will meet the four last-place teams in Tier I. A victory against any of those teams will move a Tier II team to Tier I for the playoffs.

"If we play as well as we have been in a game situation we should finish first or second in Tier II. We have the talent and based on the way the league was last year, we should be able to move up by beating the fifth or sixth-place team."

"Overall, they're really talented athletes with a lot of skill. They have a good attitude and motivate themselves because they want to work hard."

Stan Cunningham, a professor of Communications, won the Turkey Trot held on Thanksgiving. Cunningham, who won with an estimated time of one and one quarter miles, was just four seconds off his personal record of 19:10.

The race was won by Mr. Jim Demarco, who finished 43 seconds ahead of Mr. Kathy Ricica of the University of Windsor. The event was a part of the annual Turkey Trot, a race held on Thanksgiving to raise funds for the food bank.

The Turkey Trot was held on Thanksgiving Day, with the winner, Mr. Jim Demarco, finishing the course in 19:10. The event was sponsored by the University of Windsor, and all proceeds went to the local food bank.

In the non-contact league, the 1st Year Chaos team took over first place after their victory over the Eng. Chem. Heads. The 1st Year Chaos scored 6 goals against the Eng. Chem. Heads, who scored 2 goals.

The regular season for the Turkey Trot is rapidly drawing to a close with only two league games remaining. The races for a playoff berth and top spot are very tight and there are no clear leaders. At present, Colonial National Flyers are in the lead with 16 points, but they have yet to clinch a victory in the contact league. The next race is scheduled for Oct. 27.

Ricica joins Staudt

by Scott McCullough

Kathy Ricica of the University of Windsor will be joining teammate Linda Staudt in Ottawa on Aug. 23 for the Marathon championships, thanks to her eighth-place finish in the Avon Women's 20k (12.4 mile) run held last weekend in Chicago. The race was part of a series sponsored by Avon in which points are awarded for placements. Runners accumulating at least 20 points qualify for an all-expenses paid trip to Ottawa to run the race there. Staudt had already qualified and Ricica's performance last weekend brought her point total up to 22. Kathy's time for the event was 79:30.

The organizers of the series hope that they will bring about sufficient recognition of female proficiency at the 26 mile, 385 yard distance that a women's marathon will become part of the Olympics. Ricica and other University athletes will be competing in the OWI AA and OUAA track and field finals held in Sudbury Saturday. Good luck to all.

Paul Roberts of the University of Windsor won the Great Lakes USA/TFA Cross Country Meet in Rouge Park, Detroit on Saturday, Oct. 11. Dan Mackintosh finished eighth in the same race.

ADVISORY REPORT

The Students' Administrative Council, University of Windsor

The Students’ Administrative Council

The Students’ Administrative Council

We have examined the balance sheet of the Students’ Administrative Council and Student Media as at April 30, 1980 and the statements of net earnings and members’ equity and changes in financial position for the year then ended. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests and other procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion, these financial statements present fairly the financial position of the Council and Student Media as at April 30, 1980 and the results of its operations and changes in its financial position for the year then ended in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

Background to Council tension

by Ed McMahon and E.P. Chant

When David Simmons was elected in April of 1980, the first black president of a Canadian university students' council, the administration and the students at this university were assured of an interesting year. At that time, several high ranking university officials approached Simmons and told him that his power lay in his executive -- and that his year would be successful only if he trusted in their ability to perform and delegated various tasks to them; also that all that he or any other council president could hope to accomplish was limited to one or two achievements.

Since that time, personality conflicts and what can only be described as a severe communications breakdown between the president and his executive has brought the situation to the point where the cabinet, at least, feels that they cannot go on much longer in such a tense atmosphere.

Last Friday's Lance featured an editorial which was highly critical of the actions that Simmons had taken in leaving the campus while the SAC referendum for a fee increase was going on.

On Tuesday, October 21, Simmons returned to the campus and asked for a meeting with E.P. Chant, the Editor of The Lance, and Ed McMahon, the Managing Editor. In the meeting, Simmons called the information we had been given about his activities in Winnipeg (at the National Union of Students' Conferences) and at the last SAC meeting "outrageous blatant lies." Simmons said that whoever had given us the information was engaged in a "malicious attempt to put a smear on me." (These are) attempts to make it seem like I'm an absolute dictator," he said.

During the course of the meeting, Simmons made it clear that he was not happy with his executive, and went "on the record" as saying so. The meeting ended with the understanding that if Simmons wanted to clear up any of the "inaccuracies" in our stories, he could write a letter to the paper. We would not make any retractions, as we considered the sources from which we had received the information (SAC members) to be reliable.

That same day, Vice President Administrative Jim Shaban, Vice President Finance Brad Mitchell, and External Affairs Commissioner John Riopoulos met with Chant and McMahon to present their side of the story. It was clear that they too were unhappy with the present situation at the SAC office. They claim that Simmons has yet to carry through with his "teamwork concept" which was such a big part of his campaign.

Following a meeting in the Office of Student Affairs, which had attempted to mediate the problem between Simmons and Shaban, we decided that it was impossible for The Lance to sit on the story any longer.

Interviews with more sources followed, and a meeting was called to decide what form the story would take. It was decided that a backgrounder had to be done (which is this introduction), followed by a straight news story, an interview story, an analysis, and finally an editorial to wrap it all up.

The happy people above constitute the SAC executive after their elections and appointments. Few are smiling now.

The work of the executive as a whole. He said he spoke to the cabinet at the beginning of this month and "told them they should be doing more."

Asked also whether he thought the executive was working well together, Simmons said, "No, I wouldn't say that."

In the interview, the president also "graded" the individual work of his subordinates, refusing to comment on the job performance of External Affairs Commissioner John Riopoulos and refusing to comment on the quality of Brad Mitchell's work (Mitchell is SAC Vice-President of Finance). Simmons added, "It's possible that I'm just expecting too much (from the executive)," but he was upset that he had not received many creative suggestions from the cabinet members. He displayed a letter dated Aug. 6, 1980, which invited such advice from the members.

Student's Administrative Council's SAC executive officer was eradicated this week, the president and his cabinet brought their internal disputes to the press.

In an interview with The Lance on Tuesday afternoon, SAC President David Simmons responded "on-the-record" to rumours of a severe rift that was developing within the council's executive. Simmons is dissatisfied with the way his cabinet is working together. Simmons said that whoever had given us the information was engaged in a "malicious attempt to put a smear on me." (These are) attempts to make it seem like I'm an absolute dictator," he said.

No you don't have to live like a refugee

by Ed McMahon

A three part resolution calling for the establishment of centers to assist American draft evaders to come to Canada to avoid the draft was passed Wednesday by the University Students' Association. The motion also called on the government to recognize them as refugees.

The motion came out of an international relations workshop in which representatives from the United States students' association asked for Canadian support. Steve Shallhorn, who attended a recent USSA conference, said several delegates to that conference described the problem as "too big to solve."

Shallhorn, who attended a recent USSA conference, said several delegates to that conference described the problem as "too big to solve."

He said he believes the NUS motion could be very effective in changing the minds of the Canadian government, since the minority Conservative government was the one which initially said that draft evaders would not be granted refuge in Canada.

The Liberal government has not made any official statement of the matter.

Tim Feher of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute spoke for the draft less successful. "It's a question of the international ramifications are." He said the SEE "IMPEACHMENT?", PAGE 3.

Amicable settlement may not be real possibility by E.P. Chant and Ed McMalbon

The extent of, and some possible causes of, the internal dissen tarting the Students’ Administrative Council’s (SAC) executive was discussed in the Lance in a Tuesday-full of interviews with the parties involved.

When asked how David Simmons started the ball rolling by re- viewing the performance of his cabinet, Rizopoulos, Simmons’ executive secretary, said, “He said he has been trying to work out their differences.

Collectively, he feels the executive “could be doing a lot more” and, he said, they deal the problem at the beginning of this month.

As for the cabinet members were quite willing not as far as if their job performances went, Simmons explained he re- tired over the necessity and other matters to attend to and added, “I have to listen to those types of excuses and try to understand... It’s possible that I’m just expecting too much from his executives.”

Evaluating his major cabinet member, Simmons said the follow- ing.

On Jim Shaban, Vice-President of Administration, Simmons said, “He’s informal as to what goes on in here [the SAC office]. He does a good job so far!”

On Brad Mitchell, Vice-President of Finance: “He’s doing his job, too.” Asked if he thought Mitchell was doing his job well, Simmons replied, “No comment.”

On John Rizopoulos, External Affairs Commissioner, Simmons replied: “It’s a question of being able to work with him, for reasons which are not clearly de- fined. Though it may be true that his executives have not furnished him with a great deal of advice, it seems that Sim- mons is unwilling to accept said or misstated of his executives’ ideas now. He is fast becoming aloof and his stubbornness may make an amicable resolution of the problem impossible.

The Vice-President of Administration Jim Shaban, when the “dirty linen” was brought into the open by Simmons, explained his position and his view of the problem.

Part of the problem, as Sha- ban sees it, is the indecisiveness of presidential powers. As the SAC constitution reads now, Shaban feels the president can potentially seize too much power. He would also prefer to see an executive that is elected from council members, instead of presidentially ap- pointed.

“If things don’t change,” he continued, “I will do everything in my power that soxever is causing the problem is re- moved.”

There was no question that Simmons would try to find grounds to impeach Simmons at the present time and, he would not comment on the possibility of his own resignation. Shaban did state that “the executive was to- gether” in the matter.

Both Mitchell feels clearly drawn the battle lines. He does not hold much hope for an in- ternal settlement and is, instead, looking for someone’s office to be empty pretty soon.

Shaban feels his expertise from last year is being neglected. Whether it is and whether this enters into his motivation is in- formation which is still unavail- able.

“Ev aluating his major cabinet members, Simmons said, “I refuse to accept the idea that the president can enter into his motivation is in the performance of SAC vis-a-vis its members, and his own job performance.

Stated Mitchell, “I refuse to accept the idea that the main problem right now.”

There is not a sense that the president can enter into his motivation is in the performance of SAC vis-a-vis its members, and his own job performance.

“Mitchell feels con- sidering resignation. Shaban did state that “the executive was together” in the matter.

Corrective action must be taken very soon

Although in many circumstances a personality conflict can occasionally be very healthy, it is sometimes a potentially explosive situation. As such, attempting to resolve it, is not easy. We cannot continue with the hope that the information will make it easier to sort out the problems.

The whole students' council executive was suddenly crying on our shoulders, telling us of all the seemingly childish and, to some extent, ridiculous events which had led up to the situation being what it is today — the SAC executive may be unable to work for you as it presently exists.

Although we do not have all the facts now (too many meetings to attend), we have to say that Simmons is still "off the record" and we probably never will be, we were faced with two choices. One was to sit on the story for another two weeks or so, at which point it may have been that SAC would be in a shambles, as resignations flew and tempers grew to the point where nothing was being done, save for the attempts to resolve these personality problems.

The other possibility was that we could have gone to press with the information we had, hoping that the information will make it easier for the students on this campus to make some sort of a decision should one be warranted at some time.

And so, on the advice of several people, we decided it was best to make you aware of the situation. We could no longer sit on the story in good conscience hoping that it would resolve itself.

The parade itself was over, but the name of the students' writer and the Student Media Corporation, University of Windsor, 400 Sunset Avenue, Windsor, Ontario, Canada postmasters: Send address corrections to The Lance, The Lance is published weekly during the fall term and every other week (for the drug plan, would do the same.

The third option, the firing of all or most of the executive, was supported by some, but there was no consensus as to who would be kept and who would be fired. SAC cannot fire Simmons, and to fire any of the other executive would not create an automatic executive or administrative solution.

The fourth option, that the executive resign, is the least likely of all. There is a good possibility that some or all of the executive will ask for the resignation of the president, but it is not likely that he will give it willingly. Simmons considers the problems could be settled by more cooperation among he and his staff here. However, feels that giving that cooperation is impossible because of the nature of the personality conflict in the office.

The final option is that the executive could call for an impeachment. This involves a lengthy process only in the council chambers, but eventually on campus as an impeachment can go to a referendum. The possibility of an impeachment seems to be slim, however, as there must be grounds for impeachment, and so far, no one has found any, or is actively engaged in searching for it. An impeachment would also bring the SAC office to a virtual standstill.

We are not attempting to judge this dispute: we are not interested at this point who is right and who is wrong.

In the same light we are not advocating any particular course of action for either the executive or the students. We feel simply that if action is not taken by some member of the SAC executive, and taken soon, the future for SAC and the students on this campus is grim.

The Fortnighter by John Mill

Some times I wonder why I write this silly column. What cares.

Last week at the end of Chris (Lou Grant) Woodrow's column read the following editorial comment: "Thank God this story is over. What a pile of garbage." Lou lives over his typewriter every day and all the people he gets is "Go get stuffed Woodrow." No wonder this university is apathetic.

This year, with all new management and all, U of W tried to end student apathy, by having a parade for Homecoming weekend (the first in five years). Everyone loves a parade. (Editor's Note: I have them.) Memos were sent to the presidents of all student societies and Residence Councils. The parade was on. Ingenious creative drives swung into action. By the Saturday morning of Homecoming weekend the culmination of all this work and activity reached the parade route.

The parade itself stretched all the way from one end of the block to the other, there were floats and bands and police cars than the average amount of oranges in a half dozen.

The crowds that paraded the parade route were incred. On every block there were more people than the average amount of fingers on the hand of Alfred E. Neuman who is famous for his "what, me worry?" attitude. An attitude which seems to embody the post "me" decade philosophy here at Windsor U. The crowds doubled and tripled as the parade moved on thanks to the relentless efforts of the Huron Hall "Stars Wars" float (special mention to Lee and Ken) which drove cruise rolls to pashy children, who followed the parade solely for the purpose of taste bud gratification.

The BEBO Wedding and Funeral band could not get toooicous rolls because the sticky mass caused their cheeks to become glue-like, affecting trumpets the same way sugar cuales affect Kyle. This must have made them very upset when asked to do the "Stars Wars" theme for Huron Hall's Storm Troopers to dance to, they replied with all the joy and warmth of a tune deaf sloth. "We can't. We're with the Beaver." The beaver, incidentally, was a Godzilla-like replica of the engineering mascot built up over top of a VW bug.

The float that won first prize was the Halloween's float of Canberbury College. The main attraction of this float was a tuxedoed crane with a guinness mask and black velvet hood alongside various witches, gob­ lin and other curious designs. The float was so good it scared young children into squeezing Mothers' hands tightly. It is evident that a religious college could play demons so effectively.

Where is the apathy? Many of the float organizers stayed up all the night before working on their floats. That's not apathy. The crowds weren't apathetic—they had a great time running, jumping and carrying on. What was the problem with the parade? Simply this, nobody knew it was going on. There was no advance publicity, no mention in The Lance, no posters, nothing—just memes sent out asking for volunteer floats.

This school is showing signs of growth: a new gym complex, a new STM and more student council services, but this is not enough. We need more programs to get people involved.

For Homecoming at Western, they have a five-hour parade. Crowds seven and eight deep stretch for miles. Parties and panicking are abundant, and the football stadium insanity. Pizza parulls and barns in the neighbourhood speak of Homecoming in respectful terms while waiting for the fans to shuttle in and out. Remember their names.

I'm not suggesting that we should compete with West­ ern, but we can go a long way.

People here in the Ignorance have known what Homecoming is, let alone participate in it. One friend of mine asked me innocently enough what Homecoming was. He is a third year student.

What we need is publicity, lots and lots of publicity. The parade could have been a much bigger success. All that was needed was a little more incentive like cow­ pries for the best float and advertise, invite the city. Everyone loves a parade. (Editor's Note: Blah.)

If you are not interested in the parade, you can give them extra 10 extra on student fees, they can be convinced to come out and have a good time at a parade.

Now that we have spent that extra 10 each, let's look for increased student services whatever they may be and to whom it may concern, to end student apathy, publicize, publicize, publicize.

Students have the right to form their clubs

Dear Editor,

As reported in last week's Lance David Simmons opposed the ratification of the Lesbian and Gay Students Club at the last SAC meeting. This was not the only club that was challenged.

As well, Mr. Simmons and/or other SAC members challenged the "right to be recognized" of the OPIRG Student Club, the Norman Bethune Club, the Jewish Students Club, and an Orthodox Jewish Club.

All of these clubs met with the stipulations set out in the Social Work voter okayed

Dear Editor,

This is a note regarding the voting irregularities noted in last week's Lance. According to the article ("On last week's Lance..."), Jim Shaban stated that Social Work students should not have been voting ("Why were I told irregularities?"). Jim Shaban, for the Social Sciences Centre, I was given a ballot by Susan Hoo, a member of the Jewish Students Club, and an Orthodox Jewish Club.

On showing my student card at the polling station in the Centre, I was given a ballot for the SAC referendum and the CJSM referendum. I asked about the Social Science Referendum and was told by the ballot boxers that she did not think I could vote.

I went up to the SAC office and, in the presence of Jim Shaban, was told by Dave Simmons that I did have a vote.

Don't lay the blame on us Social Workers nor the ballot boxers as the fault of neither of these groups. Susan Hoo, Second Year, Social Work

SAC club by-laws, and none of them were seeking funding from SAC.

Simmons and other SAC members wondered if they should rally around the political, religious, or sexual outlook did not agree with their own. Thus, most of the clubs passed by only a slim majority. It could have gone the other way. Clubs that have a solid base among students of this campus could have been refused right to function here by people who let their personal bias interfere with their job of representing these very students. Obviously something is wrong; something has got to change.

Our Canadian constitution recognizes the rights of all of these groups to exist even if those in power do not agree with their policies. And members of our student council try to uphold this right to students? Anti-democratic Reactionary? Those SAC members can be called all of the above. Nothing guarantees that democratic rights of students will not be denied in the future as the by-laws now stand.

When a club's constitution and membership list is presented, the students are not asking SAC to condone their political, religious, or sexual viewpoint, but merely to recognize their right to congregate and to function as a club. To refuse or even threaten to refuse this right is not a prerogative that should be left to people who allow their personal biases or bigotry to interfere with their duty to represent the students of this university. And "bigotry" it is when David Simmons challenges Jewish clubs after having spoken in favour of a Catholic club. Furthermore, OPIRG lost its referendum for funding last year, 500 students did vote in favour of paying a $5.00 fee to keep OPIRG on campus. These students must have taken the time to look at SAC by-laws and at what SAC members spared and slandered OPIRG, and passed its ratification by only a very slim majority. With 500 people in favour of it, OPIRG should not have to be put on its knees for ratification as a student club that is not even asking for any SAC funding.

We, the undersigned, would like the issue of club ratification to be reconsidered in light of its potential of denying basic democratic freedoms to students of this university. The by-laws must be changed to prevent in the future what could have happened at that meeting.

Students must be guaranteed the right to congregate in the club of their choice, just as they are in the real world free to join whatever organization, religion or political party they wish.

Simmons doesn't understand issue

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express concern about SAC President Dave Simmons' objection to the ratification of the campus Gay Students' Club. His comment on October 9 at the SAC meeting: "If we have a gay club..." I'm relieved that despite Simmons' stand, the Gay Students' Club was eventually ratified.

Not a retraction

Let it be known from the start that this is not a retraction in any way shape, or form. It is, however, difficult to say exactly what it is, so perhaps I should just drive right into this.

SAC President David Simmons this week accused The Lance of maliciously attacking him in our editorial last week and in an article about the SAC referendum.

He was upset about the editorial because the writer said he was not on campus the day of the referendum because he was off attending the winter conference of the National Union of Students' gatherings in Nanaimo. He claims he was at the opening plenary, but the students' conference which the editor and two SAC officials who should have known where David was going for what reasons. If he was off campus, then why did the editor not check? Perhaps this says more about the complete communication breakdown in the SAC-executive officers (see front page) than it does about insufficient reporting. As far as we knew, the sources were unreliable.

Secondly, other arguments like a woman's conference or an opening plenary is a moot point; The Lance feels the immediate concern of SAC should be the students of this campus. Not an extraneous national student organization. Simmons' council was asking for a lot of money - he should have been around when it came in.

The president also bluntly denies he said (at the October 9 SAC meeting, "if we have a gay students club, we might as well have a Sadist's and Masochist's Club.") Again, we had that information from reliable sources and still stand by them.

NUS restructure brings fee increase

WINNIPEG (CUP) — The National Union of Students (NUS) has reconsidered its proposal to raise fees from members to four dollars per student. The current fee is one dollar per student.

Last week NUS announced they would be seeking a fee increase at their national conference, but the conference, however, the organization began restructuring itself and thus has called off the fee increase. When NUS announced the need for the fee increase last week Kirk Falconer would not speculate what would happen should the student organization be unable to continue current levels of services without the increase.

With the restructuring, however, they feel they will receive enough money to keep NUS running as it has been. Fees for the new restructured student organization will be four dollars per student. The new organization, which has yet to be named, will have its founding convention until at least 1983, said Mike Miller, BC fieldworker for NUS. However, Miller said, the concept of the new organization will be taken to students in referendums right away. At the campuses where the concept is accepted, the four dollars fee will be collected, Miller said. This money will be used to continue financing NUS and also for the restructuring process, said Kirk Falconer, NUS treasurer.

A number of student councils are ready now, Falconer said, to hold referendums for membership in the new organization. He said it is optimistic the new body will have six to seven paying members by May, 1981.

Included in this group of campuses which may have referendums before May include Carleton University, University of Winnipeg, Saint Mary’s University, University of Waterloo, and perhaps Mount Royal College in Calgary.

If the new organization can win these referendums and the per capita fees start coming in, NUS will be able to keep functioning and there will also be money available for restructuring costs, Falconer said.

Falconer would not speculate what would happen should the new student organization lose these future referendums.

To this, Gray said Canada just had to face the fact that a large portion of our business is in the hands of other countries. He said foreign ownership was not necessarily an evil. We must keep in mind, he stressed, our objectives and goals and, if they can be accomplished by a company funded from another country, then it is a worthwhile and positive boost to our economy.

He also said the decision the government will take on Japanese imports will be the action the Americans take because of the integral nature of our auto pact. We would not follow the United States, he emphasized, but we would take some measure of equivalent action.

Gray started his reciting the many jobs, programs, and committees dealing with marketing conditions and opportunities to hold referendums for NUS running as it has been. Fees for the new restructured student organization will be four dollars per student. The new organization, which has yet to be named, will have its founding convention until at least 1983, said Mike Miller, BC fieldworker for NUS. Studies would the other faculty to add their own questions to the questionnaire.

The exchange of students was seen as a way to improve student flexibilities and job opportunities.

The required courses at the two institutions were examined in detail to ensure each that the programs were equal to each other. Through 1979 and 1980 a Joint Committee for Cooperation from the schools test to investigate the possibilities of this venture. It was expressed at the Senate meeting that perhaps in the future more departments may be able to alter their program outlines to accommodate this kind of exchange.

This year's Media Centre Committee's report was accepted and its chairman, Dr. Brown-John of Political Science made some comments about it. He said the Centre had hardly been looked at since 1969 and its responsibilities and functions had not been updated since then.

The Committee found the Centre had strayed away from its original academic purposes and it should be set upon that track again. They recommended that the Centre be made responsible to the Vice President, Academic.

The Media Centre Committee also found much of the equipment was outdated and that there was not a lot of support around the university for the Centre. They found the management satisfactory, but its original function, that of an academic service institution, somewhat distorted.

The other recommendation made by the Committee was that it should continue to function in a policy advisory capacity for the Media Centre through its Director.

The meeting ended with "other business": this included a motion from a Senator of the Asian Studies department who officially adopt the Canadian spelling of "programme" instead of the American "program" which had appeared in this year's calendar.

The motion was greeted by a chorus of "Which one is Canadian?" at one end of the table. Dr. Franklin even admitted he thought the extra "me" was "excessive indulgence" and the extra letters irritated him. He wondered if the Senate should be given more time to deliberate on it but nationalism finally won out and the motions passed.
The Mature Factor: Difficulties Encountered Among Many Home-makers

by Sheelagh Conway

Sheelagh Conway is a Lance staff member who has done freelance work for various papers and magazines, including The Windsor Star. She is also a member of the Editorial Board of The Lance.

In my 28 years, life’s lessons have at times been rather jolting. To name a few, my trek across the Great Asian Continent taught me about poverty—a poverty without hope, written across the faces of the children; working as a volunteer in the midst of addicts, prostitutes, pimps and drop-outs in one of the world’s most notorious “red-light” districts was shocking; London’s Soho opened my eyes about the human condition.

My native Ireland founded a notion about the relationship between violence and injustice, living in politically-ruled Jamaica confirmed that notion.

With four teaching positions, 22 countries, one marriage and two children behind me, it was a big step to take—going back to being a student. Walking on campus, I suddenly felt alienated, scared and somehow cut off from sync. My ability to organize my studies was lying stubbornly dormant. I desperately needed to talk.

Sitting in a professor’s office, my problem was painfully simple. I was having difficulty adjusting to life as a student. My professor, a man in his late thirties and an academician by any standards, leaned forward over his desk and began, “Let me tell you a thing or two about life……”

There is no doubt it, mature student has much to contend with.

“a homemaker is de nigrated by society”

A sample study conducted by Dr. M.R. Haque entitled “Report on part-time studies at the University of Windsor” showed that in 1979, the average age of the part-time student is 21.2 years. This study would indicate that, generally speaking, the mature student is a part-time student.

Considering that part-time students constitute approximately 30 percent of the whole university population, inaccuracy data will be available for the second part of this article it is clear that the mature student body forms a sizeable portion of the student body. It is interesting to note too, that the greater part of the part-time student body is composed of women.

On a more widespread scale, Statistics Canada shows that, of the total enrolment of students at universities for the year 1978/79, approximately 22 percent were women 25 years and over.

These figures show that a substantial number of women are at school. Over the past decade, the number of mature women, either going to school for higher learning for the first time or returning, has increased dramatically.

According to Dr. Ann Diemer, associate professor of Sociology at this university, the reason women are attending school in such large numbers is primarily because they are having fewer children nowadays and also because more options are open to them in terms of education and employment.

“There’s also a growing concern among many homemakers, that being a homemaker is denigrated by society as a whole. T.V. and newspapers lower the esteem of the homemaker.”

Dr. Diemer also points to the women whose marriages have broken down and who are suddenly faced with the support of themselves and their children. “They have had the experience of being in the world and realize the importance of equipping themselves to adequately support their families and give themselves some intrinsic satisfaction,” she said.

The Maycourt Club

Many mature women go to university in order to obtain such intrinsic satisfaction. Linda Burgess is one such woman.

In her early thirties, she is a former school teacher, married, with three pre-school children. She is, at present, a part-time student, working towards her Visual Arts degree.

Ms. Burgess works part-time, in order to pay for her tuition, art supplies and also day care for the children. She has a strong sense of herself—Linda Burgess knows why she’s here: “Going back to university gives me a greater degree of personal satisfaction, it is more an opportunity to invest time in my own interests and in my, own personal growth. That would be impossible within the confines of a nine-to-five structure job, in addition to a family and home.”

Linda feels that being a mature student is an advantage. She maintains that she can work more efficiently, is more disciplined and her own personal resources are greater. “I’m more glad, I’m not as shy anymore,” she added with a laugh. When I met Mamie Greenhow in the lobby of Windsor Hall, she could have stepped straight out of the pages of the September edition of Vogue magazine. Her kilted skirt and chic blouse were perfectly in keeping with this year’s fall designs and colours.

Mamie Greenhow is in her sixties and a grandmother. She is also a part-time student at this university. This is a gracious lady who could easily belong to the Maycourt Club.

Her voice becomes faint as she talks about her dear husband who passed away a few years ago. “It can be very dull at home now. Days can go by and I don’t see anyone.”

Loneliness was one of the reasons Mamie decided to come back. But there are other reasons too. “I’ve always liked literature and I just thought I’d like to do something to improve my mind; to get me up and going.”

Mrs. Greenhow is not working towards a degree, as she feels that such pressure might detract from the pleasure and satisfaction that she is experiencing in her English literature course.

And what would Mamie Greenhow’s Scottish grandmother think of all this? “She would probably have thought it absolutely ridiculous—after all, back then, a woman’s place was in the home!”

“now is the time to make it or break it”

While many women go to university to broaden their personal scope, there are many more who enter the Great Hall of Learning with a firm stride and one thing in mind—a good job at the end. Many sacrifices have to be made and the pace is not leisurely. It can be uncompromisingly tough.

When Mary Wilk, a 26-year-old divorcee with no children, returned to university this fall, her goal was to become a medical doctor. "The going is not easy."

She works three nights a week as a nurse in a local hospital and she attends university full-time during the day, often despite having had no sleep the previous night. Her tuition is paid out of her earnings "I am at my economic and emotional peak. Now is the time to make it or break it."

Dr. Barry Taub, Director of the Psychological Services Centre, a University of Windsor facility, is familiar with the problems of the mature woman going to school. Not only does he have theoretical knowledge, but having a wife who has herself just returned to school, has given him first-hand experience in this regard.

realistic pressures

We explained that very often the mature woman can be experiencing realistic pressures even before she enters the class room, especially in the case of a failed marriage. "The pressure is there, particularly if a woman is separated or divorced and is shortages the responsibility of children but has no one to share that responsibility with," he said.

According to Dr. Taub, another pressure many women encounter, is that of a husband and/or children who are not supportive. "This is a new situation for a lot of men; often it is an absolute mystery and, as a result, anger and resentment can occur. Children too do not like the idea of competing with Mom's studies. Household duties have to be shared and this in turn causes early feelings of resentment to surface."

Once a woman actually enters school, different pressures emerge. Dr. Taub went on to explain, "The woman may feel that she has entered an alien world, she worries that she won't be able to keep up academically with her associates, and she can feel that she's not bright enough. Women's role in society is that of assistant and we don't tell them often enough that they are worthy."

It would appear that a mature woman going to school has to balance a lot of different forces, but Dr. Taub sees many advantages to being a mature woman, who he said is "often motivated academically more than the younger student who might not be here by choice."

"a very enriching addition"

With regard to problems the professor have in dealing with mature woman, Dr. Taub feels that one problem may be that the majority of faculty, being male, may not be sensitive to the mature woman's needs.

However, he is careful to add that such sensitivity largely depends on the individual faculty member. "Any woman coming back to school", said Dr. Taub, "is facing a challenge, but instead of outlining their deficiencies it should be seen that mature women have a tremendous amount to offer on campus—I consider them to be a very enriching addition."

A very comforting and essential point for any mature student—despite the circumstances. The mature man will, on the whole, have different pressures than women in returning to school, but generally speaking the mature male will be motivated more towards upgrading his education, with a view to a better paid position.

Larry Ribble, at 33, is married and is the father of two children. He is studying Human Kinetics full-time, and commutes from Kingsville daily. In order to pass the day, his wife works and he relies on a student loan. They had to sell their home.

wasn't happy at Chrysler's

His reason for going to university is simple. "For 12 years, I worked at Chrysler's and I just didn't like what I was doing," this aim is clear cut, he plans to enter the teaching profession after graduation where he will get greater satisfaction and better pay.

Larry is open about his difficulties. "Basically, being out of school for so long, I don't understand everything that easily," he feels that faculty should take into consideration the difficulty that mature students have in understanding technical material, having been out of school for so long and therefore, having forgotten the basics.

There are some men who leave one successful career to pursue another, again with success in mind but also with undertakings of personal satisfaction. "Bill" is 27, married with children, and is now in his second year of law school.

At one time a very successful teacher, he decided to switch careers, and he entered university. "I had the opportunity to do something I always wanted to do and Law opens up the flood gates a little more, in terms of opportunity." He too has had to make personal sacrifices and making ends meet can sometimes be a challenge.

"Bill" also found difficulty in adjusting to life as a student again. "It's a totally new area and takes getting used to. As a mature student, that is a serious effort and a much greater risk. I'm not here for a cup of tea", he said. "I have to evaluate my priorities, I must allow time for my family too."

Whatever the motivations, inclinations, or pressures, a mature student re-entering school or going for the first time faces uncertainty like a great yawning chasm. There is fear and there is alienation, there is frustration and discouragement. Returning to school can be like walking a tightrope over a chasm, where potential failure toys menacingly at the rope. There is no doubt about it, every effort must be made to encourage and support our mature students. It is awareness, willingness and co-operation, on the part of all involved, that can and must form the simple drawbridge to success.

Next week, Sheelah Conway will discuss how the University of Windsor is coping with the mature student.
Going to SAC's? You'll have Second Thoughts!

by Peter Haggart

Any band that names themselves Second Thoughts is asking for trouble! I think they've found it. It has been a while since SAC's has had a band play in the pub for a whole week—the question is, can the band last in the pub for a week?

The first song I heard was the "Theme From The Adams Family". Rather scrumby, but recognizable, this song was received well—most likely because it was unexpected. The ensuing set was filled with mostly original numbers. The most notable being "Small Town Time". It's hard to comment on their playing ability here; on an original tune you can get away with doing almost anything wrong (and they probably did). The lead guitarist and keyboardists both are adequate. The vocals (be they lead or harmony) were lacking a smooth delivery.

Photos by Heidi Pammert

As for entertainment, the lead singer does have a good rapport with his audience. His speech, along with his mugging on the dance floor at least made it interesting to watch. The light operator, who never took his hands off the dimmer switch, does a fine job controlling his single red light. I guess SAC's was due to present a mediocre band. Maybe Halloween came just a little too early in the pub.

Photos by Heidi Pammert

The highlight of his life comes when he is taken to the theatre. He is surrounded by superficial beauty and charade which should be totally irrelevant to him since he has lived his life one reality after another. In this reality he has also remained a child, a gentle human being.

The Police: Zenyatta Mondatta

by Mike Kosty

Close to Me" a song about the trials and tribulations of a relationship, to which some readers may identify with, to "When the World is Coming Down, You Make the Best of What's Still Around", a song that in many ways has proven to be true, particularly with the world being as chaotic and disorganized as it is at present. Songs such as "Behind My Camel", "Man In A Suitcase", and "Shadows In the Rain", go on a long way to proving how versatile and adept the band is at making full use of the range of their instruments. During the songs the band will often change style without appearing to do so, the music is merged in such a way that the transition is hardly noticeable.

There last two albums have produced many memorable cuts, notably "Roxanne", "Message In A Bottle", and "Walking On The Moon". Zenyatta Mondatta will surely produce more memorable cuts, "Don't Stand So Close To Me" and "Man In A Suitcase" are destined to become classics.

The front cover photo, featuring a room full of young innocent ballerinas surrounding Zevon, reflects the pensive poetic side of his personality. The back cover photo of a recently fired gun laying on a pair of ballerinas makes one ask: What kind of mind could have thought of such an intention?

The schizophrenic emerges in the music. "Empty Handed Heart", a languorous lament for a lost lover is highlighted by a nostalgic descant sung by Linda Ronstadt.

Zevon has turned schizophrenia to his advantage. The many facets of his personality make for an album full of surprises. When he controls the music, Zevon creates a slightly eccentric quality brand of music. Still, I wouldn't leave him alone in a dancing school.

So far they're batting a thousand!

Every Al Stewart album should come equipped with an atlas, a battle map, a biography, and a complete history of the world.

Once again, the master lyricist has come up with songs covering different aspects of world history, surrounded by his usual ditties on everyday life.

This album differs from his other endeavors in many ways. Gone are the days of his total accessibility. 24 Karat Gold features the talents of longtime Stewart associate Peter White's Parrots.

Stewart has written his songs around a major theme, which he discusses on the album jacket: "Some are born to leave. Some achieve leaving and some have leaving thrust upon them." Mr. Lincoln would have been proud of him.

"Running Man", the fast paced initial cut is one example of this theory. The running man he has brought leaving upon himself. "Constantinople" is the other advocate of this philosophy. The lyrics tell the story of the citizens of Constantinople, who were forced to leave their homes after the invasion by Mohammed and his hordes.

Another long historical ballad is "Murmansk Run/Ellis Island". I'm not going to tell you the plot—you're going to have to look it up yourself. This track is in the classic Stewart style of having a simple melody, letting the lyrics carry the song.

Two songs on the album merit commercial acceptance. "Midnight Rocks", a light but lively number with sumptuous chorus, has already: found its way to the airwaves. "Paint by Numbers", built along the same pop lines should join it soon.

"Rocks On The Ocean" is based on a traditional folk tune "The Bold Fisherman", its rambling poetic style allows the song to flow quickly through its five plus minutes.

Why is it that we ignore her? She is ten years gone, but not forgotten.

In a time when spastic rock was making its own musical breakthrough, Janis Joplin contributed to the early blues of Leadbelly and Miss Bessie Smith. We virtually ignored her flirtations with alcohol and drug abuse. We cared only for that scratchy voice, pulling and tearing its way through the airwaves. We were hopelessly blinded by the photographs of her stage-strutting character, glassy-eyed and rippling with emotion. We were only concerned about her music, which, for a brief moment in an idealistic age, we could call our own.

Ten years ago, Janis Joplin died in a motel room in Hollywood at the age of twenty-seven. The tabloids dwelled upon her drug overdose and referred to her as a "victim of stardom's fast lane". What a pity, mourned the media, that someone with so much talent should die in her prime. Apologies are in order for those who have earmarked this piece as somewhat melodramatic. But it's hard to defend a person's life and work without sounding a bit soapy.

Albie's somewhere out west now. The old gang rarely gets together. And, off and on, I'll hear some nostalgic D.J. play an old Joplin tune. It seems dust never settles on a spinning platter.

Talent ‘runs’ in Mallender family

by Steve Kie

The Lancer football team treated the modest crowd of homecoming fans at the south campus field Saturday to their second victory of the season, 23-17 over the Marauders of McMaster.

Mack as coach Gino Fracas had predicted, his team’s apparent relaxed mood, which comes from the removed pressure of fighting for a playoff spot, contributed to a raised level of play.

Seemingly most affected by the more casual atmosphere was running back Craig Mallender, who, even at six feet and 205 pounds, time and again squirmed through the line and scampered through the Marauder secondary in a more petite back. His final stats showed 23 carries for 182 yards. He replied, "not at all..." he has his Business degree - unless the pro draft takes him elsewhere. The publicity this year bothered him, in fact, the ball game this year. In fact, the Lancers may be back in a Lancer uniform.

Mallender said, in reference to the third period, but the Lancers struck back with a four-yard pass to end Todd Haskell to seal the victory. The officiating was worse right on, "he said bluntly. "It was the worst we've seen all year. They were inconsistent in their calls." Johnson specifically blamed the deep sniffer for not calling pass interference against the Lancers when one of his receivers away from the ball was knocked down. Two similar calls against the Marauders resulted in big gains. Meanwhile, the Lancer boss was happy to see someone else drop the ball. "Sure the turnovers helped us," said Fracas. "I think we deserved them. It's about time we got the breaks."

Craig Mallender gave the Lancers a 3-1 lead early in the second quarter on an 11-yard run which he set up with his own 38-yard romp down the sideline.

Corran's Miljkovic kicked a 15-yard field goal and Rob Dalley hit Scott Mallender on a razzle-dazzle backfield option play that completely fooled Mac to make the halftime score 16-3 for the Lancers.

"It was nice for a change," Mallender said, in reference to the fact that he has failed to break the century mark in any game this year. In fact, the ground game itself has been unable to get on track all season. Whereas brother Scott has finally used up his five years of college eligibility, Craig will probably be back in a Lancer uniform next year when he returns for one semester to complete his Business degree - unless the pro draft takes him elsewhere.

Asked if Scott's widespread talent was something that he was with his players. "The officiating stinks," he said bluntly. "It was the worst we've seen all year. They were inconsistent in their calls." Johnson specifically blamed the deep sniffer for not calling pass interference against the Lancers when one of his receivers away from the ball was knocked down. Two similar calls against the Marauders resulted in big gains.

Mallender's four-year rushing yardage to 1,672, tops among the Lancers since the team started playing football. Those numbers bring the most yards by a Lancer rusher since the team started playing football. Moreover, he has the most yards by a Lancer rusher since the team started playing football. The total to 22, also a Lancer career best.

Defenders, intended receiver and ball meet at the same place.

Corran seeks attitude change

by Steve Kie

Coach Bob Corran knows he's got some physically talented players on this year's Lancer hockey team. His job now is to work on developing their minds.

"Some of the players that we've had in the past had the idea that this is recreational hockey," Corran said in an interview Wednesday. "For them, practicing and working hard didn't matter. They just wanted to have fun."

Those players are no longer with the team and 13 keen and promising rookies have moved in to provide Corran with a fresh outlook on what has not been an extremely successful team in the past. That is, if you measure success by wins, the Lancers had but one in 22 games last year.

"Having fun is important," Corran said. "But this is competitive collegiate hockey. I'm not advocating a win at all costs system. But we don't practice to lose."

"I honestly believe we're going to do well this year. We have more talent than last year, but it comes down to attitude and how the players approach the game." Among the returning veterans are forwards Dan Martin, Jim Weese, Len Chiflet, Scott Kolody and Rob Dobson, defencemen Bill Naizan, Pat Byrne, Gary Rossanos, Paul Parsons and Mike Lefler, and goaltender Don Johnson.

The rookie forwards are Norm Synott, Kevin Bracken, Dave Easter, Mike McKegg, Marty Stover, Todd Bestid, Richard Caryn, and John Ivan of Patterson, Stuart Prince, Pete Weese, and goal-ender Don Johnson.

The team has played two exhibition games already - both losses. The first came Oct. 11 when they fell 9-3 to Michigan Dearborn, and the second Oct. 17 at Ohio State, an 8-2 loss. At Michigan, the team was still in the process of being chosen but they held a 3-2 lead after two periods, "playing on native talent," as Corran said. Conditioning proved to be the deciding factor in the final session.

At Ohio State, the Lancers were "a case of the players having their first experience to big league university hockey" and after three minutes they were down 3-0. But they came back to make it close and again Corran felt they were only outplayed and not outplayed for one period.

Kolody and Martin tallied for the Lancers.

"They haven't developed the intensity that they need yet," remarked Corran. "This team has been used to losing - it wasn't a matter of win or lose but how badly will we be beaten."

"Once you adopt that attitude, you lose intensity. That's something that has to be changed."
The University of Windsor track and field team finished first in the OWIAA track and field championships last Saturday, 18 October, at Laurentian University in Sudbury. The women's team finished first, second, and third in each of the events.

The team's other new record for the season was set by Kevin Coughlin, who took fifth spot in the men's long jump with a jump of 5.65 m, while the fifth gold medal was won by Andy Buckstein in the men's 400 m with a time of 4:59.3.

"I expected it to be between seventh and eighth place," said Brien. "I'm hoping the new indoor track will attract more girls. It will be a good indoor season." said Brien.

"They (Michigan) are not that strong as a team," said Brien. "We are always a competitive team and I feel that once our team develops a consistent attitude, we will be very successful. We need more girls to keep the development and also in developing a better flow from offence to defence."

Hurdling medals

Also setting two new records was John Key, a tall, long-legged student who is enrolled in post-graduate studies in Human Kinetics at Windsor. Key set a new record in the men's 110 m hurdles with a time of 11.0.

Conlon received the same time (13.1) as the third place finisher in the women's 200 m, but had to settle for fourth place. She was sixth in the women's 100 m.

Lori Domarchak was sixth in the women's 100 m hurdles, where she captured a bronze with her 16.3 clocking, and in the women's high jump.

The loss was not difficult to explain when other factors were considered.

The Windsor Wildcats (Michigan) are at the height of their season and this was our first time on the court together," said Brien. "Most of their players are on volleyball scholarships."

"I'm not sure if the Langevin would stand up against the league teams, Brien stated. "We are a strong competitive team and I feel that once our team develops a consistent attitude, we will be very successful. We need more girls to keep the development and also in developing a better flow from offence to defence."

SAC'S
SAC needs time to work out internal difficulties

by E.P. Chant

The current state of affairs in the Students' Administrative Council's (SAC) executive officers was a subject of discussion in various meetings this week, including last night's (Thursday) general council meeting.

Though this newspaper is unable to present the results of the debate at the general meeting (since The Lance goes to press on Thursday afternoon), a motion by SAC member Eric Dixon was on the agenda. Dixon's motion read: Whereas it is the duty and aim of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) to ensure and promote unity and effectiveness from its members; and Whereas recent events involving the President and Cabinet have been detrimental to this aim.

Let it be moved that the Students' Administrative Council urge the President and his Cabinet to resolve whatever difficulties there may be among them at the nearest possible date so as to ensure the effective functioning of SAC.

The "difficulties" Dixon speaks of constitute the personality clash/recommunication breakdown in the SAC executive which came to light last week.

At that time, SAC President David Simmons criticized his cabinet in general for not working well together. He also said he felt the cabinet could be doing more to serve the students.

After that, some cabinet members commented on the situation as they saw it, with Assistant Affairs Commissioner Rick Zago saying the problem was the result of personality conflicts, non-delegation of authority (by Simmons), and poor internal communication between the cabinet and the president.

Zago, External Affairs Commissioner John Rizopoulos, and Vice-President Jim Shaban and Brad Mitchell all said last week they would like to see the problem settled peaceably behind the closed doors of a cabinet meeting.

Towards that end, the executive met for three hours on the night of Monday, October 27. A Lance reporter in the newspaper office on that night said some of the points made by the cabinet members were delivered in raised voices.

After that meeting, Shaban said simply and (it is fair to say) with a note of dejection in his voice, "We are trying to work things out."

Rizopoulos was more verbose. He said the stories in last week's Lance were a major topic of discussion, since all the members at the meeting felt the paper had painted an excessively pessimistic picture of the cabinet's ability to serve the students while this situation existed.

Rizopoulos said the cabinet and Simmons "are very determined to make things work out for the benefit of the students". He also said the cabinet had always trusted Simmons and still did, but he did not know if that trust was mutual.

"To make things work out is going to take some time," concluded Rizopoulos, who went on to forward to another meeting.

Provincial enrolment increases by Cheryl LeSperance and E.P. Chant, with the University of Waterloo Impress

The fall enrolment at the University of Windsor is up from last year's figure and it is almost two percentage points higher than the provincial average increase.

The preliminary fall registration figures indicate an increase of five percent in first year enrolment, in Ontario's 15 universities and one polytechnic.

This is an increase of some 1,800 students over last year's figures.

The University of Windsor enrolment (full-time) is up 6.8 percent over last year, according to the University's Registrar, John Rizopoulos. The enrolment total is 9,200.

Blood bank a good investment

by Wendy Coomber

There was blood all over Ambassador Auditorium Tuesday as the Red Cross made its annual visit to the campus.

Approximately 300 students, 107 first timers, showed up at the blood clinic to willingly (until they were bled) allow themselves to be drained of a pint of blood.

Mary Taylor, Director of Blood Services, Windsor Branch, was hoping to reach a quota of over 250 pints. What she received was 284 pints.

This will supplement the quantity of blood gathered at the weekly donor clinics. Ms. Taylor said, even with all the donations they collect in this area, they still have to move more blood in from Toronto. Southwestern Ontario uses up 12,000 units each week.

Kathy Moreland, a third year nursing student who was helping at the clinic, suggested that, in order to make the heart beat faster and the blood pump from the veins quicker, "interesting" pictures might be placed on the ceiling for viewing. This, she thought, might speed up the turnover of donors and allow the clinic more time to take in donations.

Louise Armstrong of the Nursing Society organized the university's end of the blood clinic. The society has sponsored the clinic here for the past 20 years. It provides public relations for the event, helps at the clinic, and picks up any small financial problems left over, to name a few functions.

The next blood clinics will be March 3, 1981 and October 22, 1981.

Loud self-therapy

(ZNS) - Scream away your academic tensions. A group of Cornell University student say they've found the perfect way to relieve the tensions of academic life—organized screaming.

Every night at 11:00 p.m., dozens of residents of Cornell's north campus reportedly go to their windows and . . . scream. They say they are following the lead of the "primates"—six freshmen who have formed the Primal Scream Club.

The primates endorse a two-minute nightly session of non-verbal communication. The participantsgrunt and groan, but no words. Some students, however, are reportedly turning the scream sessions into half-hour orgies of insults between residence halls.

It seems that this year the students' council regulation board has decided to keep a closer eye on the conduct of the members. The concerns seem to be a clear reflection of the great amount of conflict existing in the university; students feel that some of the rules have been unfairly applied.

Register Frank Smith confirmed this week that there are 6,624 full-time students this year, compared to 6,197 last year, an increase of 426 students. First-year enrolments have seen a 5 percent increase, with 9,125 students enrolled this year, compared to 8,703 last year.

Debates have raged over the causes of the internal conflict in the SAC Office, which were brought to light by The Lance last week. A different aspect of the problem has recently been brought forward by a source close to the Council.

The problem is not trivial. Lack of communication was cited as one of the primary causes of the dispute, which, the source said, led to SAC President David Simmons "never really developing a working relationship with..." the Office. The source added that Simmons was "just winging it." The observer also added that "Simmons isn't obliged to consult his executive." The problem seems to be the lack of communication in the SAC Office.

We must give credit where credit is due

Advertising is the ultimate "dog-eat-dog" business. It's fiercely competitive, oft-times sneaky, and chock-full of stolen ideas.

University operation, on the other hand, has something of a dignity attached to it. Though running an institute of higher learning does involve copious amounts of money, universities seldom make mention of this facet of their operation, speaking instead about their academic quality and studiously energetic campus population.

What happens when the rather grimy world of advertising runs into the purportedly honorable world of the university?

Well, the result of such a collision at this university does not exactly constitute a scandal, but it's not a perfectly kosher situation either.

The graphic artist's name is Al Pazitch and he works for Leadley Advertising of Windsor.

This summer, when a university committee was working on a multi-faceted publicity and promotion campaign (including the logo), Leadley and another Windsor advertising firm, Harris, were asked to submit ideas for the variety of publicity material.

Pazitch set to work on the logo and, after playing around with some W's, came up with a logo that was changed in a semi-circle with a pointy maple leaf being formed in the centre. He claims he completed the logo in May, but did not copyright it.

Leadley's complete publicity/promotion package also included a rejected by the university's committee late in the summer and the contract was handed over to Harris. At a sangria-serving press conference in September, the university's committee later in the summer and the contract was handed over to Harris. Although the W's weren't quite so boxy, all of the elements of Pazitch's design were there, arranged in a semi-circle forming a maple leaf in the centre.

Now, let's not say Harris Advertising played any major role in the rejection of Pazitch's idea, but let's just say that the committee may have been a bit surprised. The committee gave that firm the general idea for the logo, Harris took it and came up with a slightly different version.

As for the committee's action... What happened when the rather grimy world of advertising runs into the purportedly honorable world of the university?

The main reason Orientation failed was the lack of student support, which was evident in the results of our survey distributed at the end of the week.

What cannot be granted or approved was such an ethically questionable action by a committee of this university's administration.

What cannot be granted or approved was such an ethically questionable action by a committee of this university's administration.

At a sangria-serving press conference in September, the university's committee later in the summer and the contract was handed over to Harris. Although the W's weren't quite so boxy, all of the elements of Pazitch's design were there, arranged in a semi-circle forming a maple leaf in the centre.

Now, let's not say Harris Advertising played any major role in the rejection of Pazitch's idea, but let's just say that the committee may have been a bit surprised. The committee gave that firm the general idea for the logo, Harris took it and came up with a slightly different version.

As for the committee's action...

President Simmons responds to cabinet criticism

Dear Editor:

It is my duty as the President of the Students' Administrative Council to respond to the statements that have been made about my administration.

It is perhaps best to remind you, Mr. Editor, that the express purpose for which I sought to be a student in this Cabinet. Perhaps for the purpose of sensationalism, you have greatly exaggerated a sensitive situation.

As a young advocate of peace, I do believe in unity and peaceful coexistence. However, there have always been and will continue to be differences among people. The use of "watergate" language, portraying of gloom, complete distortion of facts and misinformation does not, however, reflect a true picture of the situation.

On separate occasions, you have deliberately printed pieces of information which were not thoroughly checked to determine whether or not they were correct. If you had had a reporter at the last Council meeting, you would have known that I never made any reference to gays and sado-masochistic clubs. If you had checked further, you would have known that the statement you quoted me as having uttered was incorrect. Also, in the same issue, your paper stated that I attended a Women's Conference in Winnipeg. Again, I must state that it was technically impossible for me to have attended a women's conference.

In my efforts to serve the students efficiently and effectively, I may have set too high a task for myself and my Cabinet. These contributions are visible, but I believe that a lot more can be accomplished. The present problem as far as I am concerned does not revolve around "personality conflicts" as you suggested, but around output and effort.

It is my fervent hope that, at least this letter, the students will be cleansed of this unnecessary alarm. My ability to function effectively has not been impaired and I do intend to normalize relations in a more quiet and judicious manner.

If I do stand guilty of anything, it is trying too hard. If you as "Judge" find me guilty for that, then sentence me.

David A. Simmons, President, SAC

We are not the first

Dear Editor:

I would like to set straight some erroneous reporting about the October 24, 1980 edition of The Lance.

The front page article "Back to Grounds to Council tension" states, as a matter of fact in the opening sentence, that Mr. David Simmons, incumbent president of U. of W. students' council, is "... the first black president of a Canadian university students' council..."

I would like to bring to the attention of your readers that Memorial University of Newfoundland elected a black president before David Simmons in 1965 who served in that capacity during the 1965-66 academic year. The gentleman's name was Mr. Percy Mangreola, a foreign student identified in my yearbook as a native of Nafeteng, Basutoland.

I do not know whether or not Mr. Mangreola was the first black president of a Canadian university students' council. But I do know that Newfoundland is a bona fide province of the Canadian union, that Memorial University of Newfoundland is a bona fide Canadian university, and that 1965 predates 1963 by some 15 years, more or less. I reiterate my call! Twa, tut, Messrs. McMahan and Chant.

Clubs round out education

Dear Editor:

I would like to make further comments on the issues raised by Cecilia Deek et al. in last week's Lance.

During the ratification of the Norman Bethune Club, David Simmonds raised the question "Should we allow political clubs on campus?". Our answer is "No!"

The university is supposed to be a place where students can gain well-rounded education, although many students will agree that this is far from being achieved. One key aspect of this education is knowledge of how world events affect his life. In society. It is inescapable that this means knowing about political struggles in the world; whether it be by decisions. Indeed, the question raised by David Simmonds as to the Vietnamese/Soviet aggression against Kampuchea, the victorious liberation struggle in Zimbabwe, the role of US imperialism in Canada, or the fight of Ontario workers against the current recession.

University students should have the opportunity to learn about these political and social issues, from an antiimperialist, worker's, or Communist point of view. With very few exceptions, this does not happen in class.

For a year and a half, the Norman Bethune Club has sponsored films, seminars, book-tables, and photo displays on these very issues. We therefore feel we have made an important contribution to filling a gap in university life.

In conclusion, whether we like it or not, politics affect our lives every day (for example the recent tuition fee increases), and every day we make political whether political clubs should be allowed on campus, is a political question.

Brenda Sweet, President,
Norman Bethune Club

Praise the Lord!

Dear Editor:

Why does Sophie Nuish Yobuah, "Thank God," in her letter about the campus gay club to the editor, when the "club" she is in favour of being escaped, not openly contrary to His will?

Let us all pray for another. Praise Jesus.

Studentship Lectures plan for next season

The University of Windsor is planning to launch a five-year campaign in an effort to raise 2.5 million dollars. Entitled "New Heights," it officially begins April, 1981, with an appeal to individuals, businesses and corporations.

Before that date, however, seven other campaigns will be underway or completed, all coordinated with the general campaign. Each one will have a different appeal either to faculty and staff, alumni, equipment, library acquisitions, affiliated institutions. This all will have a different appeal either to parents, foundations and others. Teaching excellence, specialized areas, the environment is called the "enrichment program" said Dr. Paul Cassano, vice-president, academic.

Dr. Cassano is the committee chairman of the University Fund for the '80's, the first of the eight campaigns to be launched. The canvassing of faculty and staff officially began October 23, 1980. It strays from the obligation of the others, as it is faculty and staff, alumni , equipment, library acquisitions, affiliated institutions. "Getting stoned can be dull (ZNS) — Students in Sacramento, California are earning $50 a day to smoke free marijuana, drink free liquor, and drive around a test track in an official state car.

A federal-state study of this kind has been underway to determine the effects of pot and alcohol consumption on driving skills.

You'd think that volunteers would be beating down the door to get into the program. But The Los Angeles Times reports that half of the 35 volunteers who signed up a few months back have dropped out of the program after just one day of being stoned on the course.

Robert Drake, the project's director, says that while it sounds easy and fun, it's really hard work. "It looks easy, but you go out there and do it and it's pretty damn dull. You get your arm poked every half hour, and draw blood. You start drinking at 8:00 a.m. That's pretty exciting! Then you're off (from liquor and pot) at 11:00 a.m. and keep you out there until 4:00 p.m., when you want to sleep.

"Save your old didies

(ZNS) — John Travolta moves over the fashion scene. Calvin Klein has come out with a line of denim diaper covers featuring the designer label on a hip pocket.

And a spokesperson for Saks Fifth Avenue says the diapers are selling like Vanderbilts jeans, even through the price tag is $15, for one diaper.

But one group is not crazy about the idea. Tony Schwartz, treasurer of the Childrenwear Manufacturers Association, said, "I think the idea is absolutely ridiculous. The designer does not deserve to be hit by a speeding car."

Laboratory animals abound around Windsor Hall

by Wendy Coombes

The next time you plan to go a-wandering through the base­men of Windsor Hall, you might like to take a friend because there are rats and other little furry things down there.

These animals are involved in the psychology and biology depart­ments who use them in their classroom experiments. They are in­volved in such research areas as determining the responses of the animals to certain chemicals like hormones and in building little furry things down there. The rodents even have their own Animal Care Committee.

This department is testing the exposure of ethanol into the rats’ food to determine the amount of brain damage caused by lesions on the brain cause behavior changes.

Presently, the department is testing the effects of chemicals on reproductive physiology, and Dr. Paul Taylor is looking at the neural proteins of the heart.

Dr. Jerome Cohen of the Psychology Department bases his experiments solely on albino rats. Here the emphasis is on the behavioural patterns displayed by the animals. The psychology experiments look at what effect drugs have on behavior, and to what extent brain damage caused by lesions on the brain cause behavior changes.

"Enough of these Biology experiments—I’m breaking out this joint.”

Conference coming

The tenth anniversary meeting of the Canadian Council for Southeast Asian Studies (CCSEAS) will be held at the University of Windsor, November 6-9. CCSEAS is one of the councils of the Canadian Asian Studies Association which is helping to sponsor the meeting. The theme of the confer­ence is Southeast Asia in the 1980’s: glimpsing the future from the past. Special attention will be paid to determining the cultural values—art, music, dance, etc. Highlights include a keynote speech by the Hon. Mark MacGuigan on the subject of Canada’s policy toward Southeast Asia.

Sessions begin again at 9:00 a.m. Saturday and continue through the day. On Saturday evening, there will be a reception and an Indonesian banquet followed by an Indonesian music and dance performance by the University of Michigan gamelan orchestra featuring great artists from Java. This will be the orchestra’s first Canadian appearance.

The conference will end late Sunday morning.

How to apply for and appeal your O.S.A.P. loans

by Cathy Massel

Finding the necessary funding for a university education can be a frustrating experience. Combined summer or part-time earnings, savings and parental assistance may not provide the amount of money required for tuition, books, transportation and accommodation.

In an effort to assist students from lower or lower-middle income backgrounds to meet the costs of post-secondary education, the federal and provincial governments have instituted O.S.A.P. (Ontario Student Assistance Plan).

It is intended that O.S.A.P. supplement, but not replace the financial resources of the student and the family. Neither grants nor loans are based solely on need.

O.S.A.P. is a programme of grants (Ontario Study Grant Plan) and loans (Canada Student Loan and Ontario Student Loan). The grants are unconditional and non-repayable and the loans are interest-free until six months after graduation.

Eligibility for grant assistance is restricted to eight eligibility periods (for most students four years of study). Students in many professional and graduate programs are therefore ineligible for grant assistance.

For the most part, students are assessed simultaneously for grants and loan assistance. A student may receive all of the grant money without taking any of the loan money, or take as much of the loan money as desired.

It is not too late to apply as students in most courses may apply as late as January 31, 1980. O.S.A.P. applications are available at the Student Awards Office in Windsor Hall. If you need the money, do not wait any longer to apply. Applications take six to eleven weeks to process. The earlier you apply the sooner you will receive your award.

How is an O.S.A.P. award calculated? Awards are presented on the basis of a demonstrated financial need; where the resources available to the students are insufficient to meet educational and living costs during a period of study.

Allowable expenses included tuition and compulsory fees, books, equipment and supplies, personal and living expenses, local transportation, return home travel, a deficit allowance for married students and babysitting fees, equipment and supplies, personal and living expenses, local transportation, return home travel, a deficit allowance for married students and babysitting

If you have applied for an O.S.A.P. and your award is insufficient to meet your expenses, or your financial situation has changed since your application was filed, you may appeal the award and it is possible that you will receive additional financial assistance.

The government has instituted an appeal mechanism in recognition of the fact that not all student or families would be able to make the required contribution. The amount of additional assistance received largely depends on the nature of the appeal as well as financial circumstances. Such applications are often six to eleven weeks to process.

Appeals are of two types: those processed by the student awards officer and those administered by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities O.S.A.P. Appeal Board.

The O.S.A.P. Appeal Board is composed of a financial award officer, two student representatives, one member of the public and one Ministry of Colleges and Universities Appeals section representative. The Board provides recommendations for special consideration of a student's application.

Each case is decided on its own merits. The nature of the appeal dictates the necessary supporting documents: letters, bank statements, job search records, budgets, and so on.

The appeal is compiled and reviewed by the student awards office. Each file is forwarded to the Appeal Board with a recommendation for additional assistance. It is important to note that most decisions of the Appeal Board are for one year only. If a student's appeal has been turned down by the Board, reasons will be provided. Appeals can be resubmitted to the Board in light of new information.

There is no guarantee that you will receive additional assistance should you appeal your award. Appeals provide an excellent opportunity to include additional information that the government may not have prejudiced in your original application.

OOPS

by the Community Legal Aid Columnist

On Friday, October 10, 1980 a Landlord and Tenant column appeared in The Lance. The article, unfortunately, was a little inaccurate and needs some clarifications.

The article stated in paragraph 4: "It is not necessary to lease to be a tenant." The lease referred to is a written lease. In strict legal terms, a lease will exist in law upon the rented of a residential unit, but it may merely be oral or implied. As the article stated the landlord should keep the apartment in a fit state of repair. If not a judge can order the repairs be made. The law is unclear as to whether a judge can force a landlord to pay damages to a tenant.

The article appeared to advise tenants to withhold rent if the landlord did not live up to certain obligations. This decision should only be made after obtaining sound legal counsel. Each case must be judged on its own set of facts. The tenant risks eviction if she/he withholds rent at the wrong time or for the wrong reasons.

Finally, a landlord may not increase the rent by more than six per cent of the last rent that was charged for an equivalent rental period. The Residential Tenancies Rent Review Act cited in the article has been repealed and replaced by the Residential Tenancies Act. Decisions under the act are made by the Residential Tenancies Commission or a rent review office.

The point of the article was to educate students as to what they could recognize possible problems and seek legal counsel. Students should be aware that the law can change quite quickly and should not make any decisions on their own. If you have any questions concerning Landlord and Tenant matters, contact the Community Legal Aid Office, Room G105, Law Building, phone 233-7150.

Pianist entertains at Moot Court

by Katey Noslin

Last Friday, October 24, in the Law Building's Moot Court, an audience of about seventy enjoyed a performance of extraordinary brilliance.

Marion Hall is originally from Colorado and studied in Chicago with John Powell and Rudolf Gay. She has served on the faculty of Roosevelt University in Chicago and was also a member of the Chicago Piano Quartet. Known as a performer, adjudicator and clinician on Quartet, she has been the faculty of Roosevelt University since 1964. Dr. Philip Adamson, assistant professor of piano in the School of Music studied for his doctorate under Ms. Hall at the University of Indiana.

Friday night she presented the most fortunate audience with an unparalleled concert. Her Sonata in F Major by W.A. Mozart and Chopin's Sonata in B Minor virtually moved the audience to tears in their demonstration of her dexterity and exquisite touch. Her fingers seemed to fly over the keys, yet her complete control of the instrument was quite obvious. A piece with a different flavor, George Walker's Sonata No. 2, Theme and Variations, was lectured Friday in the School of Music's Recital Hall. Participants successful in audition took part in Ms. Hall’s master classes on Saturday.

Marion Hall is the first of three famous pianists to present lectures and master classes. Early in 1981, Beka Siki and Eugene List will be here and will perform concerts.

The First Deadly Sin

Few books can make the successful transition from bestseller to hit movie. The First Deadly Sin is no exception to this rule.

The vivid characterizations and chilling scenes that Lawrence Sanders brilliantly created in his novel are barely recognizable in the film adaptation. The movie is guilty on three counts of negligence: poor performances, a flimsy script and misguided direction.

Unlike readers, audiences cannot identify with the protagonist, Sgt. Edward Delaney (Frank Sinatra), a New York detective obsessed with finding a homicidal maniac who is terrorizing the city, while his wife lays dying of a kidney disease. Sinatra's phlegmatic portrayal is a misrepresentation of the Delaney character, who, in reality is a quick-witted and dedicated detective.

Not even scenes with Delaney's wife (Faye Dunaway) trigger a valid contribution to the story. Let's face it, how much of an intellectual conversation can a man have with a woman who is in a coma most of the time?

Perhaps the most perplexing and neglected character of them all is the murderer himself, Daniel Blank (David Dukes). Although he is a stereotype, his personality is never clearly defined. We are not provided with enough information about him to ascertain his motivation for committing such heinous crimes. For this reason, Blank remains as much a mystery at the end of the movie as he does at the beginning.

The First Deadly Sin seems to be just another example of Hollywood's ability to reduce an important and relevant book to a trivial and meaningless film and for that sin there is no absolution.

Gongeat Emptor: Let the gonger beware!

by E. P. Chest

A couple hundred law students stepped up to the bar last Friday night at Donlon Hall. They received their drinks at the bar, only beer which they took back to their tables to imbibe, while watching the faculty’s “Gong Show.”

The co-winners of the first prize, however, escaped those difficulties. Darc Hilts Debbie Barkhout, Brian Marks, Larry Hopkins, a few girls who went naked on the program, and Peter “Freddie Mercury” Starkey loud and energetically conquered the sound system and, in turn, the judges and the audience with “A Crazy Little Thing Called Love.”

The other first-place finisher’s act was a visual treat that might be hard to describe. This was another unnamed-in-the-program student who put a shirt around her neck, attached a pair of children’s pants to the shirt, stuck her hands into the legs of the pants, and got down on all four facing the audience. The resulting performer was then, a two-foot tall person with arms for legs—legs that can-nanned and twisted wildly to Leo Sayer’s “You Make Me Feel Like Dancing.”

The woman on the right does a Richard Nixon impersonation, causing turned-away disgust in one viewer and a severe back spasm in the other.

The study of “Pride and Prejudice” is followed by a tour of Derbyshire similar to that in the novel; and the elegant 18th century world of Chatsworth House and Norton Oakes.

D.H. Lawrence’s home town, Eastwood, and the surrounding countryside had a profound influence on the writer. His home is a blue brick slab, concrete bricks, and 12 sheets of glass. The audience cheered the groan shots.

Most Tasteless Act was also a tie, between the B.C. Brawler (a guy running around in underweaer) and the Law School Drama Team (a rendition of “Old MacDonald Had a Farm” with clear visual reference to bestiality, followed by a group moon after a loud gonging).

Impression left by the night’s events if these people are our layers of the future, I’m going to be a good boy for the rest of my life. I’d never want to get in trouble and have to hire one of them.

Tull transition ‘A’ success

by Tim McBeathern

Jethro Tull has made their annual Detroit appearance. This was not the same Tull seen in Detroit in previous years, the band has grown through a few personnel changes.

New to Tull are Dave Peggi (Bass), Mark Craney (Drums) and Eddie Jobsen (Keyboards, Electric Violin). The only original member visible that night was Martin Barre (Lead Guitar), and the showman himself, Ian Anderson (Vocal, Flute, Acouscic Guitar).

Anderson arriving on stage in a white uniform you would expect a per­son working a nuclear energy plant to wear. For the next ninety minutes or so, Tull played to an enthusiastic almost sold out Cobo crowd.

This was not a night for the Summer School in England

The English landscape played an important part in many of the writings of the country’s famous authors and poets, and now lovers of literature have an opportunity to see the surroundings which inspired these classics.

Based in Yorkshire, English Literature Summer Schools offer three-week courses in which ten students are led on excursions off the beaten track to settings which inspired the writings of the country’s best authors. The setting of George Anderson tossing three huge balls into the audience.

Arends, a little older (33 now) doesn’t move on stage as fast or as much as he used to, but his age hasn’t seemed to affect his ability to play the flute.

One Tull feature absent this time around was their use of props. The only visual aid they had was a large red letter “A” which moved around above the stage during a keyboard solo. But then again I was seeing a new Tull... but still an excel­lent Tull.

Turning old record albums into profit

by John Liddle

Some of those old records that you've got stashed away in the attic could fetch you a bundle! More than likely, you're not even aware of how much your old albums are worth. How, do you know if you've got a rare album? And if it is, how do you go about selling it without getting ripped off?

A record that a fanatic collector would gladly dish out upwards of twenty bucks for is worth twice as much as its stereo counterparts. Some of the Monkees' later albums, notably Head are worth upwards of twenty to twenty-five dollars, depending on the quality.

Albums that you're likely to find in your big brother's parent's collections would be the rockabilly masters such as Johnny Cash and Elvis Presley, (80-$400), Eddie Cochran (460-$40) or the twangy Duane Eddy ($10-$30).

A semi-rare Elvis Presley album could fetch you a fast twenty bucks. If you can find a Buddy Holly album on the Coral record label you can expect a very good condition to be worth around $5). Albums in good or better condition are worth approximately one-half and three-quarters, respectively, of the value of a mint condition album.

Imporras are generally worth about twenty percent and more in value. DJ and joke box records vary in value according to the artist. Some of, these, notably ones by Elvis Presley, are worth a good deal of money, that is, if you can find them. Okay, let's say that you got the Monkees' Head album and you're working a collector. (Not bad, considering that the album returned for $15). Albums in very good conditions are worth approximately one-third and one-half, respectively, of the value of a mint condition album. Imports are generally worth about twenty percent and more in value. DJ and joke box records vary in value according to the artist.

The University of Michigan gomelan, or Javanese orchestra, under the direction of Judith Becker, will appear for the first time in Canada at 8:15 p.m. on November 8th at the Ambassodor Auditorium, University of Windsor.

This unique performance of Indonesian music, ranging from the soothing to the exciting, will be a part of the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Southeast Asian Studies of the Canadian Association of Southeast Asia, running from November 6 through 9. On stage with the musicians, a large ensemble of gongs, drums and xylophones.

The concert is jointly sponsored locally by the Asian Studies Programme and the School of Music of the University of Windsor. Admission is $2.00 for students and senior citizens, and $4.00 for others. Proceeding the concert there will be a Malaysian banquet prepared with the co-operation of the University of Windsor, University of Toronto and Singapore Students Association at the University of Windsor. A limited number of tickets will be available for both the banquet and the concert before November 5 and $9.00 for students and senior citizens and $12.00 for others.

Olympic Submarine
2160 Wyandotte West

For $2.50 you can score a delicious “Gyros in Pita”: chopped lamb, tomato and onion slices, and garlic-yogurt sauce stuffed in a pocket of Greek bread. But the Olympic is officially a purveyor of submarines and there’s all kinds of fillings: from the traditional Greek specialties include a soup of the day, souvlaki in pita, shish kebob, Greek salad and baklava. Service is quick and friendly. If you go there late at night you might catch a glimpse of authentic Greek dancing.

Canadian Submarine
2000 Wyandotte West

Rated by The Windsor Star as serving the best submarines in Windsor, Canadian offers Greek food which is not so good.

The intention, very similar to a certain submarine chain, are cold and impersonal. Of course this should not reflect on the quality of the submarines themselves, which is excellent.

Harvey’s
2160 Wyandotte West

This is the only hamburger chain in the campus area worth commenting on. The fries are made with real, fresh potatoes, not frozen-dried; the burgers are charcoal-broiled, not fried; and you get to say exactly what condiments you want. The shakes are as good as McDonald’s, although there is no choice of flavors, only chocolate. Hot dogs and steak sandwiches are also available for non-burger lovers.

Service is fast, and the place is kept cleaner than some of its competitors.

The Historical Domestic House

Wab Court
2037 Wyandotte West

Wab Court is one of the few Chinese restaurants in Windsor that serves dim sum—Chinese lunch—daily. You have to ask for the dim sum menu specially, and when you get it you have to pretty well guess what to order unless you have a Chinese friend along to translate. But it is fun to guess and when each item costing only about one dollar, you don’t have to worry about bad choices.

My favorites are turnip cakes, pork balls, tiny spare ribs, and spring rolls. Drink Chinese tea along with the meal and enjoy a great cultural adventure!

Willie’s Restaurant
2085 University West

Willie’s is a good place to go for coffee at 4:30 a.m., which isn’t surprising since it’s one of the few 24-hour restaurants in the city.

The menu is traditional: sandwiches, burgers, etc., and everything is good and unpredictable. The coffee is always hot.

Service can be fast or slow, polite or rude. You take your chances at Willie’s, but at 4:30 in the morning who really cares, anyway?

University Smacks
2424 University West

This place has a lot going for it: close proximity to the university, a diversified menu, and really good food.

Breakfast foods are served all day long as well as sandwiches, burgers, a few main dishes, and Chinese food.

Sometimes, when it’s really packed, the service is on the slow side, but usually there’s no problem. Prices are reasonable.

And you’ve always sure to run into someone you know there.

Diana’s Pizzeria
1974 University West

As well as excellent pizza, Diana’s also serves some great Greek food. The souvlaki dish includes both fries and Greek salad, and could be the best in Windsor.

Late at night, the after-the-Bridge-House crowd can be obvious: take heed if your appetite is easily ruined.

Service and prices are reasonable.

2085 University West

You can have a really good meal at Don’t’s if you know what you want. The pizza is fine, the salad bar varied and fresh, the French onion soup is superb. But watch out for the nubs and the Italian main dishes— you could be in for a disappointment.

To let you know this is no “eat-and-run” place, the service is . . . well, leisurely.

You get what you pay for in the way of interrior design: there’s yellow velvet upholstered chum, subdued lighting, stained glass windows, etc. Food prices are_jacked up accordingly.

Dominion House
3140 Sandwich

The decor of the Dominion House, which does a lot to create its warm, friendly atmosphere, was, I am convinced thrown together haphazardly over the years. Now half a dozen bars in Windsor are trying to imitate it, without success. The Dominion House is almost an Olympic specializes in top quality barbecued spare ribs and chicken, but everything else it serves is equally delicious, from salads to burgers to steak.

The desserts are tasty and rich, containing chocolate, fresh fruits in season, mounds of whipped cream, and other novelties for which you might consider sacrificing your virtue.

It is always busy, but, even so, the service is courteous and timely.

Prices are generally reasonable, and there are daily specials which are real bargains.

Ukrainian Restaurant
1148 Marion

As the name implies, this is a tiny, unpretentious restaurant that you might not even notice. But when you do, you are justly rewarded.

Everything is homemade and delicious, there’s borscht (beet and cabbage soup), stuffed peppers, cabbage rolls, perogi, spicy sausage, chicken stew, and/or whatever else they decide to cook up. The menu is a blackboard and nothing is ever spelled correctly.

All items may not be available on a given day, and you should get there early because supplies do run out.

Prices are reasonable, service can be markable when things get hectic.

Borden’s Place for Steaks
461 Wyandotte East

This is the place to go for steaks, or even for seafood, when you want to just relax and enjoy.

Everything is handled with the utmost discretion; you discreetly take your piano sounds while you sip your drinks and snack on hors d’oeuvres, you make your dinner and wine choices, everything is mellow and pleasant.

The salad bar proves to be worth the trip, the steaks are exactly as you ordered them, the waitresses smiles and your friend is induced to eat it, without success. The Dominion House is almost an

Service is quick and friendly, and the prices are reasonable.

You may have a tendency to linger after the meal and, at a leisurely pace, it makes for a rather blissful mood.

Top the meal off with a cup of Turkish coffee and be prepared for the check which will be a little steep but well worth it.

J. Michael Bottoms
481 Ouellette

Many hanging plants and laminho furnish make for a very tropical atmosphere, right out of the movies. The menu is varied and interesting: diverse salads, soups, omelettes, Mexican, Italian, French, Chinese, and other delectable dishes. The food is good and fresh.

New Games’ newest way to have fun at University

by Lisa Lemerise

Campus Recreation will present an evening full of fun-filled games with the New Games Night (Monday, November 9th, 7:00 p.m.) in St. Denis Hall.

"New Games" originated in California and is an event that has spread widely throughout the United States in the past five years. Being just recently introduced into Canada, "New Games” takes its largest shape in the form of "New Games" festivals where people gather together for a chance to participate in this extraordinary event.

The students and faculty of the University of Windsor are all invited to participate and speculate in their very own "New Games” night. The evening will consist of several familiar games but with revised rules. The theme of the evening is "FUN" because this is the purpose of "New Games Night". Some of the games that will be played are: slaughter, earth ball, sura, people pyramids, infintiy volleyball and blab. At 9:30 p.m., “New Games Night” will finish with everybody a winner.

Hey Fatso!

Have you ever wanted to trim off a few pounds or increase your fitness level? Ever look in the mirror and throw up? Well, here's your chance to do something about it.

The "Channel Swim" is beginning Monday, Nov. 3 and continuing for one month at the Human Kinetics pool.

What is the channel swim (you may well ask yourself). The channel swim is the fun way to shed some of that blubber and get yourself into a semi-respectable state of physical fitness. How can that be fun? Just listen or read on (we are actually reading this yourself).

Four bodies of water can be sworn: Lake Erie (8 miles), Lake St. Clair (14 miles), Lake University of Windsor (18 miles) and The English Channel (22 miles). Seventy-two lengths of the pool are equal to one mile. All do you swim during the recreational swimming periods (Mon.-Fri. 12:22 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., Saturday 1:30-3:30 and 6:30-9:30 and Sundays 1-7 p.m.) After you swim the number of lengths you desire, add them to the chart entitled "Distance Swim" which is located in the pool office. The voluptuous life-guards on duty will be glad to assist you (but don't come just to see them, you perverts.)

For further information, call Campus Rec at 256-0217.

Pick-ups pick up championship

Amid the cold winds and light snow flurries on the south campus fields Sunday, the Teddy Bears defeated the Campus Recreation office at Ex terion 121. Come on out and get in shape.

IM Hockey on

Another year of intramural hockey is set to begin. The season actually had its first game Thursday at the Bulls faced the Eng. Soc. A team at 7 p.m. In all, 24 teams will compete in three divisions of eight teams, one division of "A", competitive hockey, and two divisions of "B", recreational hockey. Come on out and watch a game this year.

Referees are still needed. For more information, call Paul Parsons at 256-0217.

Sports program big part of CJAM

by Mel Raskin *

Now that the referendum is behind us, CJAM'S Sports Department is busy planning for an exciting year of sports coverage. Last season, CJAM was the only campus station in Calgary to cover the Canadian University Basketball Finals, and bring back the students to the University of Windsor Fireman, the Windsor Lancers' championship games. It is our intention to build on that success and make this an even better year for sports coverage.

The Windsor Lancers' basketball team will continue to get the all-star billing it deserves. Former station manager Dean Zutkan is back again to do the play-by-play. He'll be joined by myself and former Lancer statistician Jim Roser. Having Roser on the broadcast team as analyst is a real plus: his knowledge of the game, plus his affinity with the team will enhance our broadcast coverage of the Lancers.

CJAM will open its coverage of the basketball team with a special broadcast on Monday Nov. 10 at 5:30, when the Lancers travel to Wayne State to take on the Wayne State Tartans.

The Lancers' hockey team under new coach Bob Corran looks promising. CJAM will be covering all the home games of the Lancers both from Adie Knox Arena, and the Windsor Arena. CJAM's broadcast team will be composed of promising newcomers, Danny Orman, Dennis Parson, and Michael Herrington. Kevin O'Brien, who handled play-by-play last year, and Professor Brian Mazer from the Faculty of Law, (who was involved in university radio as a student, will also be doing a few game broadcasts. First broadcast is Saturday, Nov. 1, at 8:15 when the Lancers meet the Queen's Golden Gaels and Sunday at 3:15, again with the Gaels.

The Sports Department also features a half-hour talk show on Fridays at 11 A.M. known as "Talking Sports". Here, items that don't get the usual round of publicity are featured. Dan Alice has been featuring the football team, and other shows have ranged from an interview with Dennis Corre, a law student who is also a master of the martial arts, to an in-depth profile of the state of women's athletics at our university.

This year, CJAM will have up-to-the-minute reports on the Windsor Lancers' road games. The team managers will be phoning in the game scores right after the games, and CJAM will immediately broadcast the results. You can get the results by phoning CJAM at 254-1494.

CJAM, in conjunction with the Faculty of Human kinetics, will again be giving away 2 free tickets to every Lancer home game in both hockey and basketball. In addition, we're finalizing plans for a pizza giveaway. Every time a Lancer hockey player scores a hat trick, or a basketball player scores 18 points in a game, we'll make a draw, and give away one free pizza.

All you have to do is give us your name and number on a card, and tell us on what show you heard of our giveaway offer. We hope to start this program in the very near future. Listen to CJAM for details.

Our sports broadcasts are not only done in a professional format, but, thanks to CBC Radio, we now boast the finest broadcasting equipment possible. We are excited and ready for an exciting season of sports projects.

Lancers prove themselves in thrilling season finale

by Steve Rice

The Lancer football team could not make the playoffs even by winning the season's final game against the Guelph Gryphons Saturday. That, in itself, is enough to take the fighting spirit out of any team. To make matters worse, the weather at game time was near-freezing and the field was awash with the rains of a gusty Fall storm.

Windsor could easily have taken the field and simply gone through the motions, hoping that somehow the rain would wash away bitter memories of a season that had been marred by injuries and poor performances. But they chose not to do that, and instead went into the game with all the vigor of a championship team, with pride, and they were rewarded with a 10-9 victory over the playoff-bound Gryphons. That says something about the character of the team.

"This is a helluva football team," said coach Gino Fracas as he stood in the jubilant dressing room after a smile of satisfaction on his face. "Except for a few tough breaks during the year, I don't think I've ever been so impressed."

This game was no exception to the exciting style of play that has characterized the Lancers all year.

Windsor had fought back to even the score at nine in the second half and with 13 seconds left on the clock, the Gryphons worked the ball to the 18-yard line of Guelph. Continual rains and a "no call" on the play that had churned the field into a mud bath and that fact, combined with the knowledge of a previous field goal failure by the Gryphons, led coach Fracas to decide to punt the ball, and for the second time in the game, wisely chose to punt the ball to the Gryphon returner.

"What can I say," questioned Guelph coach Tom Dimitroff amidst the silence of the Gryphon locker room. "It was a good game. Breaks decided it but that's what happens in the mud."

Refs not the best

Both coaches declined to comment on the officiating, which was, to say the least, questionable. Guelph's primary objection was to the calls which were made after their final possession of the game. The Gryphons had taken possession of the ball in the 15 after a poor snap on third down by the Lancers. Two plays later Guelph's quarterback, Ron Lively, gained 76 yards on only six carries, romped in for the go-ahead score. However, an illegal procedure penalty negated the score and moved the ball back to the 18-yard line. From that point, the Lancer defense held and the Gryphons lined up to kick. Here the Lancers got yet another break. As the ball bounded to the end zone, it appeared to touch punt returner Chris Owen and the Gryphon player downfield, obviously feeling that it had, fell on the ball.

However, the officials ruled that the ball had not touched Owen and the ensuing "no yards" penalty wiped out any Guelph score and gave the Lancers first and ten on their 15, from where they drove to the winning score.

"They're a very fine team," Dimitroff said in reference to the Lancers. "I just want to go into the playoffs with a victory, but we gave them (the Lancers) life and they came on."

The "life" that Dimitroff spoke of came primarily in the form of senseless outbursts of aggression by the Gryphons. Penalties were called on Guelph players for unnecessarily roughing when one took it upon himself to gain retribution for what he thought was a late hit on a teammate, and to another for a blatant late hit on Scott Mallender.

A similar late hit, which was not called, resulted in a concussion to cornerback Bob Geier. Wide receiver John Ivan came in to fill in at that position admirably, as well as continuing to play on the defensive unit, catching four passes for 45 yards. For that effort, he gets my vote as "Player of the Game".

Craig Mallender also was taken from the game early in the second half after suffering a ligament tear in the knee area.

The Lancers' other points came on a single from a missed field goal attempt by Zoran Miljkovic and a six-yard pass to Doug Finch midway through the third quarter which made the score 9-7 Guelph.

After the TD, the Lancers next startup was again just for the extra point, but when the ball was snapped, holder Joe Brannagan stood up and tossed a nifty pass to Chris Owen for the two-point conversion and a tie game.

"St. Clair played extremely well and forced the Lancerette team to concentrate on playing together as a team," said head coach Sue Swain. "In this regard, the tournament provided excellent opportunity for this young team to gain experience playing at a higher level."

High scorers for the game were Diane Melillo with 13 points, and Julieanne Colan and Mary Brannagan with 10 points each. Top rebounders for the team was Theria McGee with seven.

The team defeated Centennial College of Toronto Friday night by a score of 87-44 to qualify for the championship final. High scorers for Windsor were Colan with 21 points and Melillo with 11. Best rebounders were Roberta Smith with nine and McGee with five.

Guelph got a first-half touchdown from end Mike Hudson with the convert and a single from Tim Quirk. Wayne Laub booled the other single. Top rusher for Windsor was Jim Szankowski, who gilled in after Mallender left, and ran eight times for 40 yards. Scott Mallender, in his very last intercollegiate game, hit 19 of 32 passes for 215 yards, hit two touchdown and two interceptions.

Fitch picked up the most yardage of any of Mallender's eight receivers with four catches for 59 yards.

Thank you

The Lancer players and coaches would like to thank the fans and parents for their support. A special thank-you to the five-year players: Arie Watkins, Chris Owen, Doug Finch and last, but not least, (Duck) Mallender.

The players would also like to thank coaches Gino Fracas, Mor-

McMahon did not know the reason for this increase but said that President Franklin has established a task force to look into the matter which should have some results by the end of the semester. The Canadian Council of Universities, in its report released September 15, found that university enrollment had gone up all over Ontario. That, said McMahon, was partially due to foreign student enrollment. In Alberta, the foreign student population is holding steady although the University of Lethbridge has reported a drop. Officials there attribute this to the differential tuition fees, immigration laws, and the fact that foreign governments are encouraging their students to study in their own countries. McMahon does not feel this is the case in Ontario. Last year, he said, there were 2,100 visas students in Ontario. This year the figure has risen to 3,000. There are six schools in Toronto alone, according to him that concentrate solely on visa students than they can efficiently handle a possible explosion of the increase. Our largest population of foreign students comes from Hong Kong and Malaysia, said the Assistant Vice-President.

Discussing death, taxes, and now aging is rude

by Wendy Coomber

Dr. Ann Henderson Diemer brought "age" out of the closet and into the dining room as she spoke about "Some Implications of the Changing Mix of Young and Old in Our Society," as the second lecture in Assumption University's Lunccheon Series. "Who is the world wants to talk about growing old," she began. She placed growing old into the same category as death and taxes, subjects to avoid in conversation, and yet unavoidable in life.

The matter is societal, she stated, society is growing old. Medical advancements and the use of contraceptives to prevent child-bearing have increased the chances of more women and children living longer than their counterparts of the past.

Today, Canadian statistics show that by the year 2001 one in ten residents of Canada will be over 65. This age bracket in Ontario alone will take up 12 percent of the population.

Most of these new senior citizens, however, will likely be women. Of men, the doctor said, "They are, contrary to popular opinion, the weaker sex," because male children are more likely to die in childhood, and women generally outlive men by four or five years.

With the rising numbers of senior citizens also comes the problem of government support for those who cannot support themselves. "We have invented retirement and governmental plans," said Dr. Diemer, but what have we done for the recipients themselves?

In the past old age was revered because of its rarity and of the usefulness of that person, she said. "They are, contrary to popular opinion, the weaker sex," because male children are more likely to die in childhood, and women generally outlive men by four or five years.

The scene resembled the boisterous marketplace of old Athens, or the side show in a Barnum and Bailey "Greatest Show on Earth".

A panel of four poets, who also happened to be women, tossed off ten or 12 of their own poems Sunday afternoon in the University Centre's new speaker's pit.

The poets, Dianne Berkely, a teacher at St. Clair College, Kathryn MacDonald, a secretary in the English department, Eva Tihanyi, a sessional instructor in expository English, and Dianne Feser, a teaching assistant in creative writing, spoke on approaching poetry writing from expository English, and Dianne Tibanyi, a sessional instructor in English.

Dr. Diemer finds the government assistance plans for the elderly beneficial in the circumstances in which the senior citizen finds himself cut off by physical boundaries by close relatives who could financially support him. It also helps the person remain independent of his relatives, while the relatives do not have to feel that they must support a relative who is not bringing in money of his own.

Dr. Diemer concluded that living to a greater age is now just another fact in our society and we should be grateful for it. There is nothing wrong with growing older, nothing that a change of societal attitudes wouldn't remedy. And so it is up to us, she said, to do this, to upgrade the quality of life after retirement.

Open House: it's show-time

by Wendy Coomber

The scene resembled the boisterous marketplace of old Athens, or the side show in a Barnum and Bailey "Greatest Show on Earth".

A panel of four poets, who also happened to be women, tossed off ten or 12 of their own poems Sunday afternoon in the University Centre's new speaker's pit.

Inspiration and loss of freedom were a couple of the topics hit upon. However, out of the four speakers, only Ms. Feser spoke for any length on anything other than her poems.

Ms. Feser managed to imbue some life into the, up till then, laconic, lifeless readings. Her main point of concern for the small group of listeners was how to get a poem published. Persistence has a lot to do with it, she said.

She continued, "Creativity has no gender," although what we are basing our feelings on how our feelings are expressed. She also said once a woman decides she wants to become a published poet "the temptation to write like a man, or become trendy is strong and there is the danger in suffering a loss of identity is being a woman poet."

Throughout the readings, opportunities were given to the audience to ask the women questions. The audience was rather unresponsive. Only after it was finished did a few brave souls venture to ask the panel anything.

Brenda Ingratta, the panel's conceiver, found the noise outside the speaker's pit unfortunate because valid points being made by the speakers were missed on parts of the audience who couldn't hear them.

However, she said, the English department hopes to make a panel such as this one a yearly event for Open House.

A panel of four poets, who also happened to be women, tossed off ten or 12 of their own poems Sunday afternoon in the University Centre's new speaker's pit.

The poets, Dianne Berkely, a teacher at St. Clair College, Kathryn MacDonald, a secretary in the English department, Eva Tihanyi, a sessional instructor in expository English, and Dianne Feser, a teaching assistant in creative writing, spoke on approaching poetry writing from expository English, and Dianne Tibanyi, a sessional instructor in English.

Inspiration and loss of freedom were a couple of the topics hit upon. However, out of the four speakers, only Ms. Feser spoke for any length on anything other than her poems.

Ms. Feser managed to imbue some life into the, up till then, laconic, lifeless readings. Her main point of concern for the small group of listeners was how to get a poem published. Persistence has a lot to do with it, she said.

She continued, "Creativity has no gender," although what we are basing our feelings on how our feelings are expressed. She also said once a woman decides she wants to become a published poet "the temptation to write like a man, or become trendy is strong and there is the danger in suffering a loss of identity is being a woman poet."

Throughout the readings, opportunities were given to the audience to ask the women questions. The audience was rather unresponsive. Only after it was finished did a few brave souls venture to ask the panel anything.

Brenda Ingratta, the panel's conceiver, found the noise outside the speaker's pit unfortunate because valid points being made by the speakers were missed on parts of the audience who couldn't hear them.

However, she said, the English department hopes to make a panel such as this one a yearly event for Open House.

Let's not have custard's last slam here, please

Dr. Stephen Stephenson received a custard pie in the face during a similar question-and-answer session. A student's council member from that university was at last week's SAC meeting and said that immature actions ruined the discussion. After the incident, the Waterloo representative, even the students who were not involved in the pie delivery were reticent to ask further questions though the minister was still willing to answer them. SAC members have the right to make valuable points was lost, then, because of the childish behaviour of a handful of people who have not developed the intelligence to put their complaints into rational and effective questions.

We trust this scene will not re-occur here, especially when we think about the questions which must be asked of Dr. Stephenson...

"Why were 1,700 students in this province forced to pay back OSAP loans this summer because of a government computer error? More to the point, why is the government hiring computer programming companies without making the companies liable for such errors?"

... "Some people have advised your ministry to shut down some universities in order to alleviate some of the financial burden on the government. Would this not be a radical改革 of Conservative policy and would it not seriously impede the ability of students to attend schools in their immediate regions?"

... "The Alberta government is considering tying tuition fees directly to the Consumer Price Index. Is the Ontario government considering the same thing, and if so, that not be unfair since OSAP loans and scholarships are so ridiculously low when compared to the same index?"

There are a few of the questions that should be flying through the air towards Dr. Stephenson next Thursday. Instead of pies.

SAC's off-the-record comments could be the solution

What is happening in the Students' Administrative Council's executive? Does the campus really know? Do the members of the executive really know?

The answer to the first question is "Something very dangerous," to the second "Probably not," and to the third "Obviously not."

The information this newspaper has received from the executive it is two types, "on" and "off" the record. The latter type constitutes angry, dejected, and presumptuous comments about the situation, while the former constitutes the overly optimistic "We'll work it out" statements.

"Overly optimistic" when one views them in relation to the content and tone of the "off the record" discussions.

While we cannot discount that content, it is perhaps false to say the tone has led the staff of this newspaper to believe the SAC executive may not be serving the students of this campus as effectively as it could. The executive members deny that, but it remains our opinion.

The communication breaks down and petty suspicions involved in the relationship between SAC President David Simmons and some members of his cabinet are thinly veiled, and apparently, not being quickly or easily solved by internal meetings. Furthermore, it is possible that method is going to prove entirely fruitless.

As the situation stands now, several members of the executive are unhappy in their working relationship with Simmons and Simmons, in turn, is classified with their performance and seems distrustful of them. People involved in a team effort such as the SAC executive work most efficiently when they like each other, or, at least, respect each other's capabilities and areas of responsibility. Such respect does not exist presently within the SAC executive.

At last Thursday's SAC (full council) meeting, Simmons, commenting on this newspaper's recent presentation of the executive situation, said, "The difficult to get five people [the executive] to work together perfectly." Granted, but not in the same capacity. An executive is not only the organizational and dedicated work the executive is capable of without this mind, and spirit-squeezing squabbling.

Does the executive really know the severity of the problem plaguing it? Apparently it does not because little has been done to alleviate it to this point.

Perhaps it would be a good idea for the members to sit down and tell each other the things which have irritated them individually (that is, all the things they have been telling reporters on this paper "off the record"). It might be a much more productive meeting, but even that's better than an inefficient, grumbling and loveless relationship.

Whatever happens, the situation must be resolved, very quickly, by whatever means necessary. Almost half the school and governmental year is over and the students of this campus should not have to endure it more than 1981 or December of 1980..."-

By E.P. Grant
Dear Editor,

There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that the present problem which confronts the University of Windsor Students' Administrative Council is largely a problem of co-orientation. It is a problem which has cut across the opinions of some segments of the student population, as well as The Lance. Co-orientation specifically refers to an adjustment in the positions of persons involved in a task or conflict in which all who are concerned understand the demands of the task or the real causes of the conflict. If The Lance and SAC were properly co-oriented, there would not have been this misperception across both groups, as to the actual cause of the problems confronting SAC. Similarly, if SAC's president was co-oriented with the rest of his team in matters relating to the broad goals of the SAC, the conflict or the misinterpretation should not have emerged in the first place.

The last rebuff from SAC's president which appeared in the last issue of The Lance confirms my contention that the president has been misunderstood by some members of the student population and the respected people of The Lance. Furthermore, another example will reveal the extent of the misunderstanding on the part of SAC of The Lance. At the issue of October 24, Sophie Nilsahl- y ble made a remark which, in my opinion, and incoherent attack on the position of Simmons with respect to the levy of students on the stand of Simmons on the issue of "Gay and Lesbian groups on campus". The matter is that the statement attributed to Simmons was a misrepresentation of Simmons' philosophy. [See "A Lance apology", page 6].

Two months later, The Lance has presented a picture of the entire situation to portray an intense division and animosity among the members of The Lance. Of the examinations of the statements made by the cabinet members does not reveal the environment of disagreement. In this case of them are appalled by this misrepresentation of reality. SAC's present problem, as was pointed out recently by reporters Debbie Staley, is not unique. It is my contention that it is a normal occurrence among similar ambitious student governments both in Canada, the United States and other countries of the developing world.

Simmons seems to have a solid grasp of the goals for his cabinet. However, he does not appear to know whether those goals are feasible and worthwhile, given the severe constraints on his team. On the other hand, it is apparent that the cabinet does not understand just what those goals are. This is where the lack of co-orientation becomes evident. The Lance is not responsible for this lack of co-orientation except that it has not done too much to emphasize the conflict. There is not much evidence for the alleged personality clash as was bandied about by The Lance.

I, therefore, would like to express my appreciation to The Lance for its aid in advertising.

Sincerely,

Louise Armstrong

Student's councils

Trouble far and nationwide

by E.P. Chant

Last week, reporter Debbie Staley wrote about other students' councils in Canada which have been having some problems with their executive members.

She discussed the student government of Ryerson University in Toronto who was in trouble for missing two weeks off, to go to Switzerland last year, so that he could patch up his love-life with his girlfriend there, and a said that he didn't want the Columbia who was in hot water for wrongly telling the council that he was and, for election the O.I. Löföd in his executive office.

Two such juicy tidbits surfaced this week from other university newspapers, both equally as fascinating.

The University of Winnipeg Senator reported that school's president "almost impeached" a member because of his unwanted relationship with the council's Board of Directors.

Apparently the president, Brian Pannell, could have been done away with this fist, during a review of the constitution a council, it was discovered a council president was supposed to have passed at least the annual university. Pannell had only passed two.

Pannell said to the Board of Directors that he was "kick me out", the vice-president who would have replaced him as president, the media, to the job, so the Director arranged the course requirement to allow Pannell to remain in office until the end of his term so that a by-election wouldn't have to be held.

In the other case, a student council's president actually had to resign.

Amidst constant rumblings of political impeachment by The Univeristy of New Brunswick in Fredericton, the council's vice-president, Chris Kozlowski had to resign when it was discovered he was a part-time student, rest of 16.4 percent). At this time, food prices usually decline rather than in-according to that council's constitution.

Motions have also been discussed at that school's council to impeach the president and treasurer over some financial and wages discrepancies. A peculiarly heated meeting about the subject, a councillor said the chairman's decision to "try and put a stop at an end so abruptly that nobody knew what happened."

It seems that wild, disgruntled students' councils are fast becoming the norm, if not a national phenomenon.

OSAP insufficient

by John Chen of The Chevron

Increased costs of living continue to erode the recent increases in the OSAP living allowance and are also working away at students' summer earnings.

The cost of living rose by 0.9 percent in August with the result that the consumer price index reached 107.7, above its value one year previous.

This marked the third successive month that the annual increase in the consumer price index was more than 10 percent.

Food prices contributed the most to the overall increase in the cost of living in August, rising by 1.4 percent (an annual rate of 16.4 percent). At this time, food prices usually decline rather than increase, because the harvest brings fresh fruit and vegetables to market, thereby reducing imports of food.

Since January, the cost of living has increased by 6.6 percent and all income groups have fared worse than 2 percent for food. Since 1992 the cost of living has more than doubled and a basket of certain foods items now costs 2.6 times as much as it did in 1972.

In contrast, the OSAP living allowance was $65 per week in 1978/79 and in 1979/80, by acceptance, students had to put aside $2 to 372 weekly for the current year. This is equivalent to a 10.7 percent increase in the cost of food, whereas for food the hike was over 27.6 percent.
Unfriendly amendment will make grads pay

by E.P. Chant

People were elected to fill vacancies on various boards, one major motion was amended drastically and passed, and a great deal of business was tabled for the future at the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) meeting of Thursday, October 30.

The motion that was drastically amended was written by SAC members David Tsui and Cecilia Deck. It sought to drastically and passed, and a motion, SAC President David Simmons said he was examining, through the university Senate Student Services Committee, the possibility of SAC gaining control of the "games room" in the basement of the University Centre. An arrangement is being looked into, he said, whereby all the money coming out of the use of the room would go into the Centre and "student activities." Presently, all the money goes into a general fund of the university administration.

Several campus clubs were also approved at the meeting. One for Lebanese students, a chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, and the Windsor stamped Student Organization.

The recently recessed in the 1981-82 scholastic year, will require all graduate students sitting on the executive of a SAC-certified club to pay SAC student fees ($32.50 per year).

The three-hour meeting also saw three council members elected to the SAC Board of Directors: Eric Dixon, Werner Keller, and Andy Sanfilippo. These people were also acclaimed to the council's Clubs and Special Events Committee. Planning your career... it's never too early to begin Career planning. It's something few students think about seriously until their final years at university. And even then, many avoid the topic without knowing about what direction they want to take in terms of a career.

During the past five years, the availability of jobs for most university graduates has sharply declined. Now, more than ever, it is generally felt that students need to seriously plan for future careers earlier in order to compete effectively in the job market upon graduation.

Traditionally, the best place to gather information on possible career opportunities is the Student Placement Office, located on the ground floor of Dillon Hall. The Placement Office can help students in preparing an effective resume, locating prospective employers, and, more importantly, advise students on how to get the maximum return from their degree by pointing out possible career opportunities of which the student might not be even aware.

As well as the Campus Placement Office, The Office of Student Affairs operates the Writing Development Centre in Vanier Hall. Here, students can pick up valuable advice on preparing an effective resume and covering letter.

Another important source of information can be tapped by talking to people involved in areas you may be interested in working. Valuable insight can be gained from potential employers on how best to plan your university career, how to get started in that particular field of work, what the demands and requirements of the job will be and, more importantly, what the job outlook is in that particular field.

The important thing in a planning one's career is to gain sufficient information about the various opportunities available so that you can make informed choices. To do this it is important to start early and make full use of the resources available.

Women at Work

Traditional barriers giving way slowly

by Debbie Staley

The transition to the 20th century can clearly be marked by the replacement of the feather duster by a shining ball-point pen.

Perhaps this act does not seem drastic, but it is when one considers that today a woman holds that pen. This change in tools has become representative of women's successful entry into the career world. Though women in previous eras have had professions, there is a clear difference in their methods of achieving the resulting career. Whereas the women of yesterday have been labelled as heroic or rebellious, today's working women have become common. Florence Nightingale has long since been replaced by a throng of equally determined females.

Unlike previous eras, women of today are oriented toward career goals through education and consequently expect achievement of these goals. Perhaps this is the focal point of the situation.

Many people feel women are extremely successful in their careers and can see no reason to continue research on the subject. However, though women are becoming increasingly successful in their careers, there are numerous problems which most women face while climbing the business ladder.

The problems associated with women's careers are like underwater currents; they lurk beneath the surface until they spring up when one least expects it. Usually company executives will deny the presence of sex discrimination by focusing on the few women who "made it" to the top. But the real interest lies in those women who did not, and the reasons behind their failure.

The first obstacle facing the career woman is initial discrimination. This type of discrimination comes from both men and women. When a male superior judges a woman's ability, he takes into account all of his experiences, values and ideas. Since these are reflections of society, and society categorizes (or devalues) women with the home, then the male superior also assumes this position.

The traditional problems are probably the most difficult to solve because they have been indoctrinated since childhood. Children are subjected to defined sex roles and occupations as early as elementary school. Textbooks designate sales and clerical occupations to women while authoritarians have been indoctrinated since childhood.

Similarly, previous ages regarded women as empty-headed secretaries who kept the boss busy. Often an intelligent woman's only means of advancement was by putting up with her boss' sexual advances. Though this type of conduct has not been eliminated, it has been drastically reduced.

According to Statistics Canada, however, women are still given low status and low paying jobs with minimal opportunity for advancement. Similarly, more than three-quarters of all female professionals are nurses or teachers. Less than 4 percent of women are in managerial positions as compared with 13 percent for men. Consequently women are almost entirely absent from the decisions making levels of businesses. Surprisingly enough, these figures are a significant improvement over earlier studies. Traditional barriers to the employment of women in male-dominated jobs are breaking down.

Where there is a woman superior, there is generally a feeling of competitiveness. The female boss rejects a subordinate's opportunity for promotion because she views the female as a threat to her present position. Few women will admit to this trait, but various studies have shown that rivalry exists among female co-workers, especially in areas of advancement.

Another problem associated with initial discrimination is based on a biological factor which results in maternity leave. Often a male interviewer will assume that a married professional woman will become pregnant, thereby leaving him with a series of complications. The interviewer will rationalize the complications, and reach a conclusion which rejects many professional women.

First, he recognizes that the woman's position is important to the company and that it would be difficult to find a temporary replacement. Second, the woman receives payment for this period, which many single men feel to be unjust.

In 1971, the Canadian Labour Code was amended, guaranteeing, to any woman with 12 months service, maternity leave without loss of job or seniority.

At the same time, the amendment stated that differences in wages between male and female employees performing similar work under similar conditions would be prohibited when based on sex factors. Thus, in effect, women would receive equal pay, but studies show that they do not.

The reason for the pay imbalance is directly related to the jobs which most women perform. Though the few women at "the top" will receive excellent and equal pay, those immediately under her will not. Since subordinate positions are most often occupied by women, employers pay them lower than if these positions were occupied by 50 percent male and 50 percent female staff.

However, with the changing education system and the increased number of women in non-traditional roles, the problem is reduced.

A guide to resume writing

Be prepared for the interview

Clothing up your corporate image

by Debbie Staley

Coping with the Interview

Clothing up your corporate image
It is difficult to conceive of anything the average graduate could ever write that would be any more important than the resume and accompanying letter of application. When you write these you are playing for high stakes, a job. If they are well-done, you will probably be invited to interview for a job; if they are badly done, you keep looking further.

WHAT A RESUME IS

A resume is a clear, coherent presentation of your credentials. Although it appears to be straightforward, the resume is not the totally objective document that such a definition implies. In other words, resumes appear to be photographic, but are actually more impressionistic that we think. The resume is photographic in the sense that it is a basic summary of your educational and occupational background, but it is also impressionistic in that it emphasizes the positive side of your character and accomplishments.

Another misconception about resumes is that they must be individualized for each prospective employer to whom they are sent. This is usually unnecessary because you can individualize the accompanying letter of application. If you are applying to several similar organizations for similar positions, you can use copies of the same resume. Many people, in fact, use the same basic resume over and over, merely updating it by adding entries about new accomplishments and making the necessary changes. For this reason, you should invest a great deal of time putting together a resume and making it as effective and flexible as you can. As a result, you will be able to use it in a variety of employment situations.

WHAT GOES INTO THE RESUME

If you were to read thirty books on the subject, you would find significant differences in what each recommends to include in the resume. In this article we will look at the ingredients that most authorities suggest. Some of the components are required, some are recommended for your discretion, and some are not recommended. Consider them all and make your own decisions based on your own circumstances.

PERSONAL DATA

There are two reasons for including personal data. First, many employers feel that personal data helps them visualize the candidate as a person. Second, if someone is going to dislike you because of your personal qualities, he can learn about them in an interview or background check anyway. By including your personal qualities in a resume, you can save yourself trouble later.

If you do decide to include personal data you can choose from among the following entries:

- age:
- religious preference:
- race:
- health: (do not go into detail)
- sex:
- military status:
- marital status:
- memberships: (clubs, community organizations)
- number of children:
- hobbies: (not recommended)

POSITIONS APPLIED FOR

Our suggestion is to state clearly in your accompanying letter of application exactly what position you have in mind, but do not mention it in your resume. However, you should include the section in the resume when you think that someone might misunderstand your intentions. If you were changing professions or if you had substantial experience in two different fields, a job description specifying which field you were interested in applying, chances are good that your educational preparation is your strongest credential. Be sure to take full advantage of it in your resume. However, you should include the section in the resume when you think that someone might misunderstand your intentions. If you were changing professions or if you had substantial experience in two different fields, a job description specifying which field you were interested in now would be helpful.

EDUCATION

This section might be your most important one. If you have little job experience directly relevant to the position for which you are applying, chances are good that your educational preparation is your strongest credential. Be sure to take full advantages. Study your college and high-school background for all its strong points.

Generally, interviews can be pretty intimidating experiences: a one-on-one encounter with someone you have never met before, who in approximately 45 minutes has to get to know as much about you as possible. The best way to survive the interview and fare properly. What follows here are some suggestions on how to prepare for the meeting and what to expect during the interview.

One of the important things in preparing for the interview is determining as best as possible your goals for the future. Unless you have some idea as to your future ambitions, you will have a difficult task convincing the employer you can relate your skills to his needs.

It is also a good thing to have some knowledge of the company to which you are applying. This will help you to create a favorable impression with the interviewer as well as help you determine how you might be able to fit in. Because of the short period involved in the interview, it is often advised that you develop some sort of routine that will enable you to efficiently exchange information with the interviewer. You might want to practice the interview session with a friend playing the part of the interviewer.

A valuable thing to remember is to be honest and not to perform. During the interview you should strive to create a favorable impression with the interviewer. In business, first impressions count and, as a result, your poise, communication skill and personality are judged accordingly.

Other things the interviewer might ask are what you expect from the company, what your interests are and what your summer jobs were, your hobbies and your extra-curricular activities. All of these questions enable the employer to determine what kind of person you are.
preparing your resume. At left is the Chronological Resume format which is the most common format. The ideal for someone who wants to make the employer aware of his or her skills.

Name of company or organization
Address (city and state will usually be enough)
Supervisor (list the name of the one who would say the most positive things about you)
Job description (a title is sufficient); if it needs explaining, one sentence is enough

PROFESSIONAL SKILLS

If you are applying for a position in a field in which you already have some relevant experience, this section will be your most important. The work experience section lists all or most of your previous jobs; your professional skills section focuses on the specific kinds of skills you have acquired within your field of specialization. You should organize and compose it carefully. Think back over your relevant experience, looking particularly for signs of accomplishment or for experience which others in similar jobs might not have had. If you are in data processing, for example, you can list the types of hardware and software you have used. Here are some general suggestions:

- Machines or equipment used
- Types of procedures used or supervised
- Special techniques learned or used
- Innovations made
- Supervisory positions handled
- Unusually rapid promotions
- Awards or other special recognition
- Types of positions held
- Special certification or on-the-job training (e.g. certified polygrapher, registered therapist)

Experience working with any very well-known people in the field.

RELATED SKILLS

You need not include this section if you have little or no previous work experience in your profession. But if you have acquired specific job skills, this section is essential in creating a successful resume. This is an optional section that will be very helpful to some candidates but unnecessary for others. If you have skills or abilities that might be helpful but that do not fit into your educational section or professional skills section, list them here.

- Speaking foreign languages
- Having public speaking experience
- Being experienced in one of the martial arts
- Having computer training (for jobs in other fields)
- Having typing or other stenographical skills
- Holding a Red Cross lifesaving card
- Being a Rotarian
- Having other skills or hobbies that are particularly helpful

COMMUNITY ACTIVITIES

This is another optional section that may be quite helpful or totally irrelevant. Many positions call for a good deal of direct contact with the public, while others require you to know influential people in the community. Additionally, many employers like their employees to be involved in the community. So consider your background and the field you are going into. If you can come up with a few activities that might be helpful, list them. Some typical activities are:

- Service clubs such as Rotary, Kiwanis
- Religious groups
- Boy Scouts, YMCA, etc.
- Charities
- Volunteer groups such as Candy Strippers
- Citizens advisory groups

AVAILABILITY

Tell the prospective employer when you could begin work. Tell him how much notice prior to your termination date you must give your present employer. Some people also include their feelings about relocating. Typical statements are "I do not wish to relocate" or "I am willing to relocate anywhere in the U.S."

REFERENCES

Again, authorities opinion differs sharply. Some people do not even mention references on their resumes. Others state that references are available upon request. Our advice is to include them. It is true that many employers do not take references seriously and that even the weakest job candidate can usually come up with favourable references. But some employers do take references very seriously, and others insist on having them as a matter of protocol. While the only real damage done by including them is to lengthen the resume, not including them might be far more serious. Be certain to ask permission before using anyone’s name. If a person is reluctant to agree, try someone else. Make sure that the people listed will give you strongly positive recommendations. In listing their names include the following information:

PUTTING IT TOGETHER

When you have gathered all of your information and have decided what to include, your next step is to work up a draft. Begin by deciding in what order everything else in the resume will be judged against it.

1. If you list a particular position first, put it first. Everything in the resume will be judged against it.

2. If you include a personal data section, either put it first (after the position desired is included) or near the end. Personal data is obviously different from work and educational experience or professional skills, so keep it separate.

3. References (if you include them) and availability normally go last.

4. Here are two possible arrangements based upon these suggestions. Depending on your background, you should plan to include most of the categories below:

   Personal data
   Educational background
   Work experience
   Professional skills
   Related skills
   References
   Availability

Don’t delay

The information contained in this feature was gathered from several publications provided by the Student Placements office. Two particularly useful publications were the 1981 Career Planning Annual and Canadian Campus.

He's got a funny hat and tries very, very hard!

by Scott McCulloch

To make a film about the family problems of some ordinary people and keep it interesting without becoming sappy and sentimental is difficult, but director Robert Redford, screenwriter Alvin Sargent, and a skilled cast have made it look easy with Ordinary People.

This extremely moving film focuses on the relationships between a young high-school student named Conrad Jarret (Timothy Hutton) and his parents (Donald Sutherland and Mary Tyler Moore), all of whom give brilliant performances. Conrad has tried to commit suicide after a boating accident that claimed the life of his brother while leaving him alive. It's been six months now and he's back at school, but things still aren't right.

His father persuades him to start seeing a psychiatrist (Judd Hirsch). Hirsch's role is that of the stereotypical tough but wryly witty docenter, lawyer or what have you, so well that you can't help but love him. The scenes between Hirsch and Hutton had this reviewer on the edge of his seat, waiting for the answers to Hinch's probing questions.

The rest of the film follows the Jarret family as its members come to learn things, some of them good and most of them painful, about themselves and each other. There's also a fledging romance for Hutton, which manages to stay just this side of a too high saccharine level. If all this sounds boring, it's not. A thoughtful script and superb acting hold the interest all the way.

Sutherland is thoroughly believable as a loving father who is deeply concerned about his son. The man's versatility is amazing. Moore is perfect as a selfish mother who is more interested in having a good time and keeping up appearances than she is in her deeply troubled son, to whom she has never been able to relate. The two can talk on only the most banal level. She abruptly changes the subject whenever a conversation of any depth seems in the offering.

The scene between Moore and Hutton in which we see that the dead son Buck was her favourite, is a masterpiece of subtlety. The look on her face when Hutton starts to talk about Buck makes you think that she might have second thoughts.

He has a large repertoire of songs covering all facets of music, but the groups his performance is keyed on (Billy Joel, Jackson Browne) just can't be reproduced by any synthetic, organic process. In being a one man show, key base lines, harmonies and saxophone solos are lost in the shuffle.

An original song, "Mr. Showmanship," is a good name for his type of performance. In his tribute to Elton John, equipped with glasses and crash helmet, Sharpe invades the audience looking for participation. His best song, also an original, is "I don't wanna lose you to the city." This slow love ballad is adaptable to any audience.

Paul Sharpe has been around the music business for many years. Through time, he has gained some semblance of proficiency on a number of instruments. A one man show can never give the attention each instrument deserves. With his experience, perhaps he can make the transition from the lounge scene—but don't expect to see it this week.

I'm worried about the boys

by James Kennedy

When ZON released their "Astral Projection" album a couple of years ago, I was really impressed with this new Canadian band. With songs like "Put on the Show" and "Talkin' About" I thought this band had a good chance of becoming very popular. Their latest release "I'm Worried About the Boys" shows that they still have their talent together sound.

Worried About the Boys" shows that they still have their talent together sound.

Well . . . the name Gallagher and Lyle hasn't exactly been forgotten. Its crooning lyrics and appealing to many listeners. "I Wanna Stay with You" is also a product of 1978, A little quicker, with a brass background, this song can easily be redo by a showband--provided the band has two capable vocalists.

"Keep the Candle Burning" is a little older and a little different. Its crooning lyrics and saxophone background gives the song a touch of the Rudy Vallee sound.

All these songs are on the first side, providing the listener with a solid selection of good songs.

The Rumrunners: A Prohibition Scrapbook
by C.H. Gervais
Firefly Books 149 pages

Today, it seems so easy. A drink is as close as your neighborhood hotel, while home supplies of beer and liquor taste for someone's homemade brooch or run the risks in dealing with illegal imports of high-priced factory blends. The Total Prohibition of alcoholic beverages was intended to reawaken society that had fallen into moral decline. Instead, it fostered a zany and ruthless period during which crime and easy money proliferated.

The temper of the times is captured in vivid detail by providing a supply & thirsty American populace.

The term "rump running" became a risqué expression for the danger and stylized form of art for the imaginative. High-powered speed boats were used to dodge the efforts of federal officials bent on taxing export trade. Some adventurous dealers tried shipping liquor by way of a submarine, a border-to-border underwater cable link. In winter the more ambitious carved his way to Capone in Chicago aided in the repeal of prohibition and the restoration of law and order.

Gervais does not create heroes in the romantic sense. Nor does he romanticize with tabloid-like narrative, "sensationalism for the sake of sensa-

Gervais also includes anecdotes about the staunch prohibitionists of the time. Pussycat Johnson "narrowly" escaped danger from a hostile mob who were tired of the ban on alcohol in this area. Perhaps the most violent episode in local prohibition history is the Collingwood Massacre, involving the notorious Purple Gang of Detroit. Like the St. Valentine's Day Massacre, this multiple murder shocked the local population as well as the nation and, inadvertently, aided in the repeal of prohibition and the restoration of law and order.

Gervais does not create heroes in the romantic sense. Nor does he romanticize with tabloid-like narrative, "sensationalism for the sake of sensationalism." Instead, what he offers is plain and truthful, generally generously by the whimsical characters of local celebrities still with us. He records history as it was and not as he wanted it to be; perhaps the emotional nature of prohibition could only.

Netherlandic studies

The Windsor chapter of the Canadian Association for the Advancement of Netherlandic Studies (CAANS) began its third annual fall seminar at the University of Windsor, November 6. The seminar will run until Sunday.

All sessions will take place in Madame Vanier Lounge, Vanier Hall, University of Windsor. Friday's highlight will be a presentation of Dutch books to the Leddy Library by the Ambassador of the Netherlands in Ottawa, His Excellency P.W. The Lancer hockey team dropped their first two regular season games last weekend against the powerful Queen’s Golden Gaels, by scores of 10-2 and 8-4. Despite the lopsided scores, coach Bob Corrao felt that the team had gained some valuable experience in facing the Gaels, who finished second in the league last year.

“They (Queen’s) are one of the better teams in the country,” Corrao said. “They were very strong last year and they really put the pressure on us. We’re going to give Windsor fans, and the Gaels two more goals before the period ended.

“We went into the game with a great deal of respect for one another,” said Corrao. “They are by no means chippy. They are the Crusaders, the team that we have to face every year. And we knew that they are one of the biggest, better than ever before.”

A SAC PRESENTATION
Petition started to oust Simmons

by Debbie Staley

The battle-lines are now being drawn and they likely be indistinguishable by this time next week.

On the one side, Students' Administrative Council (SAC) President David Simmons; on the other, a proposed campus referendum, and, in the middle, SAC.

For the past few weeks the SAC executive has been grappling with various problems within the council; but Sten Gordon, Coordinator of Windsor Jewish Student Organization and a representative, has decided to take things into his own hands.

This week, Gordon started a petition to urge a referendum that would remove David Simmons from his position as SAC President. The document states that Simmons has acted in a manner which has been undemocratic and unfair, and thus "has failed to effectively represent the interests of undergraduate students of the University of Windsor".

However, before the petition can be declared valid, it must have a minimum of 500 signatures. Once these have been attained, the petition will be forwarded to SAC, and a referendum date will be called.

According to the by-laws of SAC, "members of the corporation may be removed from office in a referendum of the students of the University of Windsor called for that purpose and passed by a two-thirds of ballots validly cast in such referendum."

In an interview, Gordon stated the petition was issued as a direct result of Simmons' misrepresentation. According to Gordon, Simmons' has either been mining from or unacceptably promoting with regard to many of his duties.

Gordon stated that Simmons questioned the SAC ratification of the Jewish student's club as well as other minorities. He added that this was ridiculous since Simmons himself is a member of a minority.

Gordon also said Simmons created difficulties for the Jewish club, but supported ratification of the Catholic campus club without question.

Gordon felt Simmons' decisions often reflected his personal views, but were projected as being the views of the students. According to Gordon, this has destroyed the credibility of SAC and the school in general.

Gordon, a representative of the second floor of Electa Hall, stated that Simmons "sold out Electa Hall" with regard to the university administration's plans for the sixth floor lounge.

According to these, money was to be raised for the redecoration of the sixth floor in order to house the meetings of the Alumni Society.

However, Simmons felt the lounge should continue to be accessible to all students of the university. As a result, Simmons said he fought for with the President and Board of Governors and received such a guarantee. He then submitted the plans to council and these were approved and documented.

According to Gordon, Simmons proposed the plans for the lounge, he contacted representatives of Electa Hall or inform them of the SAC motion which would endorse them.

In response, Simmons said he attempted to get in touch with a representative from Electa Hall but was unable to do so. He also added that the representative failed to appear at the council meeting. Simmons feels that Gordon is involved with the petition because of the Electa Hall issue or for personal reasons.

However, Gordon said the Electa Hall lounge is not the only issue. According to Gordon, Simmons was absent during the SAC referendum, and he also felt that "as representaive for the national (NUS) and provincial (OPS) students conferences, which was the job of John Rizopoulos, the ex-commissioner of External Affairs.

Whatever the motivations of the petitioners, they are now gathering signatures and, if they acquire the necessary 500 quickly enough, an impeachment referendum may have to be discussed at next Thursday's SAC meeting.

SAC tensions have gone too far for John Rizopoulos

by Ed McMahon

Due to "distracting [ie] tendencies to make decisions" and an "inability to communicate with the [other members of the] Executive," the part of David Simmons, John Rizopoulos, External Affairs Commissioner, and Students' Administrative Council (SAC) has decided to resign, effective November 11, 1980.

In a letter to SAC President, Simmons, Rizopoulos stated that he resigned having to leave the "University of Windsor students with such undemocratic leadership," but that he would "continue to fight for the students' rights in a more democratic way."

Rizopoulos stated in an interview he felt the tension in the SAC office had gone beyond a point where reconciliation was possible.

Simmons, in an interview on Wednesday, said he had no comment as yet on Rizopoulos' resignation and that he has not made any decision as to who will fill Rizopoulos' shoes. Simmons did hint, however, that a statement from him as to the ramifications for SAC and as to a new candidate for office.

According to these, money was to be raised for the redecoration of the sixth floor in order to house the meetings of the Alumni Society.

However, Simmons felt the lounge should continue to be accessible to all students of the university. As a result, Simmons said he fought for with the President and Board of Governors and received such a guarantee. He then submitted the plans to council and these were approved and documented.

According to Gordon, Simmons proposed the plans for the lounge, he contacted representatives of Electa Hall or inform them of the SAC motion which would endorse them.

In response, Simmons said he attempted to get in touch with a representative from Electa Hall but was unable to do so. He also added that the representative failed to appear at the council meeting. Simmons feels that Gordon is involved with the petition because of the Electa Hall issue or for personal reasons.

However, Gordon said the Electa Hall lounge is not the only issue. According to Gordon, Simmons was absent during the SAC referendum, and he also felt that "as representaive for the national (NUS) and provincial (OPS) students conferences, which was the job of John Rizopoulos, the ex-commissioner of University coordination is unbalanced

by B.P. Chart

The lack of co-ordinated planning of undergraduate programs at individual universities may cause the university system as a whole a great deal of harm in the near future, an Ontario government report warned recently.

System Rationalization: A Responsibility and An Opportunity by the Ontario Council on University Affairs (OCUA) was sent to Dr. Jette Stephen- son, Ontario Minister of Colleges and Universities, and university administrators last month.

Its main point is this: "There has been little cooperation in undergraduate program planning and development in the Ontario university system. At present, any new undergraduate program that is implemented by a university automatically becomes eligible for funding… such university is free to plan its undergraduate offerings without consulting either individual institutions or COU (Council of Ontario Universities). It has been assumed that this autonomous approach to undergraduate planning, with the universities responding to provincial educational demands and needs, would result in a satisfactory mix of program offerings. "It has become increasingly clear to Council, however, that this autonomous approach to undergraduate planning is no longer appropriate from a provincial perspective. "UNIVERSITY PROGRAMS OVERLAPPING," PAGE 3.

John Rizopoulos possible replacement may be forthcoming in the near future.

In a letter dated November 11, 1980, Simmons had asked Rizopoulos for his resignation, but Rizopoulos had not yet opened Simmons' letter when he voluntarily handed his resignation in.

The letter from Simmons stated that although he "firmly believe(s) that you [Rizopoulos] are a very capable individual, [Simmons] have found it increasingly difficult to continue working with you in the SAC office. " Simmons went on to say that Rizopoulos had "for reasons not apparent to me…[Simmons], refused to carry out [Simmons'] instructions as he had requested." Simmons also criticized Rizopoulos for having an attitude which would not "make things any easier.

Simmons also said he did not believe anything Rizopoulos would have to contribute would help to solve the problems now existing within the SAC.

He also apologized for having "to resort to such drastic measures to ensure that I assert my leadership" and "it was indeed with a heavy heart that [he wrote the] letter."

In the interview, Simmons made it clear that he was not asking for Rizopoulos' resignation because of a lack of effort on the Commission's part, however he failed to list any specific charges against Rizopoulos, deferring any further comment to a later date.

University programs overlapping initial perspective. Program proliferation, when combined with financial restraint and enrolment decline, will lead to the spreading of resources too thinly and the dilution of strengths.

In order to avoid these problems, some degree of cooperation at the undergraduate level is essential and some degree of coordination may be necessary."

That "coordination," advised the report, should come from the COU, the OCUA, the universities themselves, and the ministry (financial support from the latter).

The report also cited some of the program duplication it considers wasteful. — Waterloo’s Wilfrid Laurier University starting under-graduate computer science programs when the University of Waterloo has one of the best programs in that subject in the country.
— Toronto’s York University starting a Religious Studies program, when the University of Toronto is very strong in Religion anthropology.
— Perhaps too many business programs all over the province — and many schools starting "coop" (work and study) coupled programs which are exactly the same as those at the University of Waterloo.

Concluding that some of the cited examples might constitute "an unnecessary degree of dupli-
emphasizing some general solutions and recommendations.
They were:
1) That each university advise all others of their proposals for new undergraduate programs.
2) That COU and its Long-Range Planning Committee examine and advise the ministry on the changing needs of the system and the universities on a coordinated program development.

University of Windsor President Mervyn Franklin said Tuesday night the report had "a lot of dynamite in it," but he wanted to discuss it further with the university Senate before commencing further. That Senate meeting took place yesterday (Thursday) after The Lanc-ese went to press.

Franklin suggested that Dr.
Paul Cassano, Vice-President-Academic, might have some views on it, but he proved to be unavailable for comment on Wednesday.

On Tuesday, however, Dr.
Franklin did make some mention of the things he would be discussing with Dr. Stephenson when she visited the campus yesterday (again, after The Lance went to press).

Specifically, said Dr. Franklin, Dr. Stephenson would be asked at Thursday’s special Board of Governors meeting about the continued underfunding of Ontario universities.
If that does not stop, he warned, many universities will go the way of four schools right now which are operating at a deficit.

He added that the provincial university presidents have sent a report to the minister of touring about understanding to Premier William Davis and that the report would be released to the public soon.

Holocaust remembered

Forty-two years after the most horrific example of the evil that is prejudice, the Windsor Jewish Students Organization reminded us of the ugliness of the Holocaust on Monday, November 16.

On that day in 1938, pre-World War II Nazi Germany started setting fire to its nation’s synagogues: This action, and the numersolution” to the “Jewish problem” — that solution being the murder

McCullough. The program was running until 6:00 p.m. (that day).

Three easy steps on how to bring down a government

by E.P. Chant

Everything that you ever wanted to know about the impeachment, firing, and/or resignation of a SAC executive or council member is right in the council’s constitution.

First, going in the order that the constitution does, the SAC President, Vice-President-Administrator, Vice-President-Finance, and six council members which sit on the council’s Board of Directors can be removed from that body at a group or invidi-cially in a variety of ways.

If this were done, the affect-de members would cease to be Board Directors, but not council members of council executives.

Any attempted impeachments, however, are not likely to take place at this upper level of the council, but at the general council one.

Second, as to the firing of a presidentially-appointed com-misioner: the president has the power to remove the Vice-Pre-

President-Finance, Commissioners, and the Chief Electoral Officer subject to the right of such persons to appeal to the memers for re-installment by the whole council (by a two-thirds majority vote to re-elect the fired person). Council may also fire a commissioner by the same majority.

Such an appeal could be a very embarrassing thing for a president to go through, especially if the commissioner was refired.

No firings have taken place or been discussed by SAC Presi dent David Simmons during this week’s developments in the SAC council’s situation.

ber or cabinet member resigns,

The curtain rises on the bad drama's final act

The resignation of John Rizopoulos, Student Administrative Council's (SAC) External Affairs Commissioner, sheds new light on the internal difficulties of that body. Although the members of the SAC cabinet have, of late, made several optimistic statements about the possibility of an internal settlement, Rizopoulos' resignation clearly shows that, for some, at least, the battle lines have been drawn and any hopes for a less dramatic settlement have gone up in smoke.

The tone of Executive statements has changed recently as Tuesday, November 11 in an Executive meeting. SAC President David Alexander was forced to Jim Shaban, under the topic New Business, stated that he felt that the dissolution in the office would not get any better in the weeks to come. "That's quite a dramatic change from the 'we will work things out' statements of the last few weeks.

What has happened in the last few days to trigger this sudden reversal in outlook? It's difficult to say what happened with Rizopoulos, since Simmons' letter asking for his resignation is vague and somewhat ambiguous. Did Rizopoulos neglect his duties? If so, in what way? Simmons has yet to provide an answer, and will only do so after The Lance has gone to press on Thursday.

Rizopoulos, on the other hand, has very specific charges, which he will undoubtedly bring out in the debate which may arise over the possibility of a referendum to impeach Simmons. What may come about through the efforts of Stan Gordon, Co-Director of the Windsor Jewish Student's Organization, and a number of floor representatives to the Electa Hall House Council.

At a meeting of the House Council Tuesday night, the wording of the petition to hold the referendum was set, asking students to have David Simmons removed from office for the remainder of his term, on the grounds that he "has failed to effectively represent the interests of the undergraduate students of the University of Windsor and that his 'approach to the other students, faculty and staff has been undemocratic.'

That's quite a charge - to make and to prove. But Simmons may be working at a disadvantage, as it appears he does not realize the specific charges that will be brought if a referendum gets underway. It not only include the issue of the sixth floor of Electa Hall, and the classification issue, but with Rizopoulos now disappeared to see the issue through to some kind of conclusion, all the dissertation in the SAC Executive offices will be thrown in Simmons' face.

Another incident of note is that of who can and who can't put up posters. Yes, posters. This was done up a poster of a political, but that more than one member of the Executive felt was inappropriate for the office of a student council. Rizopoulos proceeded to take the poster down.

What ensued was a screaming match between David and the other members of the Executive who were present. It's the closest they've come to communication in weeks.

Simmons claimed 'executive privilege', saying that according to the SAC Constitution and By-Laws he was the manager of the office, and as such was responsible for its decoration or lack thereof. Shaban and Rizopoulos argued that the office of the council was open and not the place for a poster asking for 'solidarity with the students and people of the Sudan.'

Simmons, it seems, does not realize that he is not going to be fighting just the Electa Hall and club-affiliated complaints, but a huge, smothering pile of those small, seemingly irrelevant incidents which have built up to an absolutely unbearable situation. It seems long past due for a little solidarity with his Executive, and the students, faculty and administration of the University of Windsor.

THE FORTNIGHTER

BY CHRIS WOODROW

Term papers are difficult to research and write at the best of times, but the frustrations and hassles that come with them can be avoided if you're prepared to fail and if you can afford to cough up a considerable amount of money.

In recent months, advertisements for companies specializing in providing research papers have been appearing on campuses around Ontario. Last month in Toronto, flyers appeared advertising the services of The Varsity, advertising a research firm called Essay Services. Essay Services provides research papers for anyone willing to pay the fee. A paper can be custom made to fit a student's specifications, or it can be chosen from a list of over 6,000 titles on file. The essays are obtained from students who graduated, when they have no further use for their papers.

When Essay Services receives a paper, the author receives a commission. If a paper is popular and in great demand, the author receives a commission each time it is sold. They try not to send the same paper to the same institution twice.

A company similar to Essay Services, Pacific Research, advertised around the University of Windsor campus in September. The posters were up for a week, but they mysteriously disappeared.

Posing as a prospective client, I called Essay Services in Toronto for information about price and the procedure one has to follow to purchase a paper. As price was not mentioned in the advertisements, I anticipated the service to be expensive.

After receiving a catalogue, a customer can choose from among the 6,000 titles. If the paper chosen is listed, a fee of $5 per page is charged. Essay Services can also custom make a paper on a topic not on their files: this costs $10 per page, and, if the topic needs additional research, the fee is $20 per page.

Essays obtained in this manner and passed off as the student's own ideas constitute plagiarism. Companies such as Essay Services only exist as long as there is a need, in other words, as long as students use them. Essay Services claim it only provides research, and it cannot be responsible for how the research is used. In a recent article in The Varsity, Philip Welsenthen, an employee of Essay Services, said, "The moral question of whether a student hands in the paper as his or her own is the student's choice." It's added that it is absurd to accuse Essay Services of contributing to plagiarism because the decision ultimately lies with the student.

Indeed, the important point is that the ultimate decision lies with the student. According to this campus Dean of Students Ken Long, "The person or company supplying the paper will not get into trouble, the only person to suffer will be the student." If Dean Long receives a complaint from a professor who thinks a paper has been obtained through a professional company, he can take the case before the Student Affairs Committee which will decide whether it warrants action.

Although plagiarism problems have surfaced on other campuses in Ontario, they are not apparent here. Dr. Bette Stephenson, Ontario Minister of Colleges and Universities, was on campus Thursday as The Lance was about to go to press. A complete report on her visit will be published next week.

Rizopoulos resigns SAC and denounces Simmons

Dear Editor,

As of Wednesday, November 12 I have resigned from my position as External Affairs Commissioner for the Students' Administrative Council. The reasons for my resignation should be quite apparent to everyone considering The Lance has covered the SAC controversy in the last few weeks. The Lance articles were, though just the tip of the iceberg.

The situation in the SAC office was much worse than the picture that The Lance presented, and has gotten worse ever since.

The President of SAC, David Simmons, has had a hard time getting along with all the executive and most of the cabinet.
The staff is not exactly happy with his attitude.

David cannot understand that he happens to be president of a democratic body of students. Decisions in the government of such a body are made collectively - discussing matters before a decision is a very essential part.

David has failed. He has failed to "effectively operate the office".

He has failed to get along with people - students, faculty, administration and staff.

His representation in national or provincial conferences was fair to bad. In many cases his own ideas came through in the provincial student government level while our interests, the interests of the students of the U. of W., were ignored.

If some members of club were upset with Dave's statements during a council meeting, they should have heard him making similar statements during the QUPS (Ontario Federation of Students - E.J.) conference in Toronto last September.

The public is unable to discuss the matter with him as when modoons are introduced to him. When David loses, he walks out and tries to bypass all of us.

During the last two cabinet meetings David has declared himself "the Boss" and threatened that he would "get physical" if I didn't obey his instructions.

My intention is to discuss problems with the cabinet and then, once all opinions are expressed, for the committee to decide what course SAC will take. David has never agreed with this. His word is rule in the office.

Last year David Simmons was elected President with 315 votes. The year after more than 500 votes of hope that eventually will come down to earth from his power trip I have to resign. I know that haven't accomplished all I had planned to do within the student body, particularly considering that I am re-signing my office in the middle of my term, but I will do whatever possible from outside the office to make sure the students know what the 315 votes got them.

The situation in SAC has worsened since my resignation. The only solution left now being to get the support to open an inquiry to openly ask him to resign so that the student council here gets back to its original route of good student representation and numerous services.

Sincerely, John Rizopoulos

A textbook case history

Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to the very late letter published on the October 31 issue of The Lance. The campus guy club is not against Gay life.

To support this statement, I would like to examine various Biblical passages. The so-called "condemn" homosexuality and show how they have been misinterpreted.

1. translation errors since English (or any other language) can differ. In the meaning of any other language in translation, and 2. , taking Biblical verses out of context and inappropriately applying them to modern-day situations.

The story of Sodom and Gomorrah in Gen. 19: 1-28 is often quoted but these cities were destroyed not because of homosexuality but because ten righteous men could not be found (Gen. 18: 32, see also Ezek. 16: 49-50 where the condemned sins are pride and inhospitality). The use of the expression, "that we may know them," is often misinterpreted. If homosexuality was involved, why didn't the writers use the Hebrew word, asaklah, which actually means "homosexuality" instead of yishuq which means "to know?" This latter word does not appear in the Old Testament. If we are to compare its ten definitions on the sexual intercourse and each time it is regarded to be proheterosexual. If one is to base their condemnation on Lev. 18: 22, then why not condemn those who don't follow the rest of the Levitical Laws? The simple truth is that we are no longer bound, by God or any other being-"divine or human, to adhere to these old sacred laws (Gal. 3: 23)." Because the New Testament with the coming of Christ brought us the fulfillment of the old laws through love (Rom. 10: 4, Rom 13: 8-10; Gal. 5: 14).

In the New Testament, the homosexual are Rom. 1: 26-27, 1 Tim. 1: 10, and 1 Cor. 6: 9 in which two Greek words-

Malakoi and arsenokoitai are encountered with various passages more frequently quoted to support the condemnation of homosexual meanings but instead of yishuq which means "homosexuality" anywhere that Greek was used in New Testament to refer to homosexuality and homosexual activity but the Greek words are not used in Greek for homosexual and homosexual activity but the Greek words are not used in this context.

In closing, I think that it is of utmost importance to note that Jesus in all His teachings never once spoke one word about homosexuality. Surely, if homosexuality was condemned by God, the Father of Jesus, and if homosexuality was such "a morally depraved condition", Jesus would have said something about it.

Student Affairs handles legal matters for students

by T.G. Nutton

The University of Wisconsin student, for the most part, is a legal violeter aware that he has the right to charge another student for certain types of misconduct. Be aware of your rights under university policy in respect to judicial procedures as spelled out in the Student Affairs Handbook.

The university's willingness to get involved in a dispute, which could be considered private to the individuals, gives the university access to a power which may bring about a "just" solution more effectively than the civil or criminal courts.

University policy, as stated in the handbook, states university discipline can be initiated if a student misconduct which adversely affects the university community's pursuit of its educational objectives. Most of the definitions of misconduct under which the student would be subject to university discipline are concerned with academic violation, there are two areas of misconduct that the student should be aware of when the university discipline is available.

Paragraph d) of the statement of prescription reads: Malicious abuse of any person on university premises or at university activity, whether it be a student, faculty, or non-university-super vised functions or malicious conduct which threatens, endanger or harasses any person. Paragraph e) defines such misconduct in part as "spiteful from or deliberate damage to university premises or theft of personal belongings or real or personal property of a member of the university community or university premises." Paragraph d) adds: Malicious abuse which harasses any student can be inter-pered to mean virtually any misconduct between two students.

Students should be aware that if they have been cheated or robbed by another student they can bring the matter to the attention of the Judicial Panel of the Committee on Student Affairs. The Committee has the power to order restitution. To bring a charge, the student need simply to write out a complaint and file it with the Dean of Students Ken Long. The Dean will investigate the matter and try to settle it informally. If this is not possible, the matter will be settled by the committee.

The Community Legal Aid Office is open to all students who feel they have a cause of action against another student. Call 351-7170 or come in to the basement of the Law Building, room G105.

CJAM's Assistant Manager opts out for school

by Peter Haggert

On November 5, Bob Mackenzie resigned his position as Assistant Manager-Programming of the campus radio station, CJAM. According to station Manager Frank Gelinas, the heavy workload was the reason for Mackenzie's departure. "The position demands between 50 and 60 hours work every week. I can understand his situation," as assistant manager last year, I was faced with the same dilemma of finding time for both the station and school." Mackenzie is currently enrolled to complete his Masters Degree in English. "People don't realize that running a part-time radio station (16 on-air hours daily) is really a full time job," said Mackenzie. "I had to make my priorities - I'm here to get an education."

Gelinas noted that experience was Mackenzie's biggest asset. He had worked for five radio stations in eight years previous to CJAM. The responsibilities of Assistant Manager-Programming includes overseeing all departments, acting as liaison between staff and management, and being responsible for all programming.

Cigarettes may cause riots

by Jeff Nash

of the Algonquin College Impact

A large number of students in E-block, a residence at Ottawa's Algonquin College, would like to salute the man who fixed the cigarette machine.

On Thursday, Oct. 30, the cigarette machine decided to give out free cigarettes to any one for their favorite brand.

After one minute of students pushing, shoving and elbowing their way toward their name brand, the cigarette machine had donated more than 90 packs of cigarettes to needy students. What a deal. A $100 value absolutely free.

Mile Dash, manager of the cafeteria which owns the cigarette machine, said nothing could be done to those who stole the cigarettes because he does not know who they were. Dash said "They know what they did wrong. It will just have to lay heavy on their consciences."

The mature factor: University maturity
by Sheelagh Smith

The mature factor, in all its complexity, is somewhat undefinable. Socio-empirical analysis, however, can relate maturity to age where the older a person is, the more likely they are to have been exposed to life and its wisdom, and therefore the more likely they are to know a thing or two about it.

According to the University of Windsor's general calendar, a mature or adult student is a person over twenty-one years of age by December 31st of the year of application and who may not have completed secondary school. Mature students at this university can therefore range from twenty-one years of age minimum to ripeness of old age.

all students are not the same

The mature student is, on the whole, a part-time student and since Dr. Hague's study conducted in 1979 showed that the average age of the part-time student was 30.7 years, we can safely assume that generally speaking, a mature student is likely to have more exposure to life than the average student coming straight from high school to university.

Dr. Hague's study also showed that 68 percent of part-time females and 69 percent of part-time males were married and 57 percent of the sample had children. Altogether, 73 percent of the females and 91 percent of the males worked at least 35 hours per week. It would appear that the mature student has greater responsibilities in terms of living life. Most likely the gender characteristic of youth, has vanished and paying taxes and a mortgage and rearing children has taken the wind from the sails of the mature student.

Whereas the average twenty year old student might be rushing home to prepare for that big date, the mature student on the other hand may well be rushing home to prepare supper, do the washing, mowing, cleaning, shopping, bath the kids and attend to the myriad of pressing responsibilities that can erupt into minor crises.

The contrast between the mature student and the student coming from high school to university is stark and it is clear that the mature student with greater responsibilities and pressures is a student with particular needs altogether different to the needs of the younger student.

In order for an educational establishment to meet the needs of the mature student, it must first be recognized that both types cannot be treated the same. Yet it is at this point which constitutes one of the main reasons why there is considerable unrest among mature students.

Statistics show that at Windsor University 13.44 percent of the whole population are mature students. This does not permit use of the adult class as defined by the university. (See Table). Keeping in mind and considering that 21-35 percent of the whole university population is composed of part-time students the average age of which is 30.7 years according to Dr. Hague's study, these figures do point to a substantial number of mature students.

It is quite clear that its mature student body, by any definition, is a force to be reckoned with and the increase in mature student enrollment which has taken place over the years points to a new client group emerging.

Mr. Frank Smith, Registrar at Windsor University is always enthusiastic about roll call and the increase in mature students attending university is particularly exciting for him.

"Let's face it, it's pretty clear that the university is providing a service and if that particular group of students is coming to the fore, it shows that we're responding to all the time to changing patterns, we're doing our job," Smith says.

The truth of the matter is that Windsor University is in the whole, responsive but once inside the door there are many mature students to be found swinging from the chandeliers.

organisation

However, this problem is not just related to Windsor University. Across Canada, the concerns of the mature student are only just surfacing, despite many murmurings and communications over the past few years.

Indeed, the issue of granting the particular student group recognition was first be recognized that both types cannot be treated the same. Yet it is at this point which constitutes one of the main reasons why there is considerable unrest among mature students.

"Let's face it, it's pretty clear that the university is providing a service and if that particular group of students is coming to the fore, it shows that we're responding to all the time to changing patterns, we're doing our job," Smith says.

The truth of the matter is that Windsor University is in the whole, responsive but once inside the door there are many mature students to be found swinging from the chandeliers.

The Canadian Organization of Part-time University Students (O.P.U.S.), a subset of C.O.P.U.S, was founded in 1977 at Windsor University by Josie Iannetta and Terry Blake both part-time students at Windsor University.

Miss Iannetta is the present vice-president of C.O.P.U.S and although she was the president of O.P.U.S she now attends the bi-monthly meetings as a member of the executive. Mike Weldon is the president.

administration not unresponsive

Josie is very familiar with the problems that part-time students experience at Windsor University.

"There's been one unified voice crying in the wilderness for years, I do believe that there are gaps where part-time students are concerned at our university, but it's not that the administration is unresponsive, they haven't had the chance to implement changes yet," she says.

There are a number of particular issues. The services available at night to part-time students are very limited especially in the case of the Registrar's office hours and parking facilities.

Since the Registrar's office is closed after 5 p.m. part-time students cannot avail themselves of that facility at a time when they are at the campus at the best of the semester when office hours are limited.

There is a lack of parking facilities quite parking facilities causing such a

Support for part-time students

Dean of Students Ken Long

The degree was no longer available on a part-time basis. As a result of this efforts on the part of a part-time student to obtain a degree were brought to an abrupt halt. Bearing all this in mind, it is somewhat a relief to know that OPUS plans to open a new office at the end of this week. It will be situated in the University Centre and will be staffed at least three afternoons and at least a night a week. The telephone number is 258-4687.

Support for part-time students is quite evident in the operation of the registrar's office. All departments have been advised to have a representative in attendance at the registrar's office at 8:00 a.m. for a few hours is only the start with queues still being present among students. The new office is scheduled to be completed next week. The students are not required to have counselling before a program is entered in the curriculum. Furthermore, in places where it is possible to take a degree course on a part-time basis, the curriculum has been arranged in such a way that in some instances the courses needed for the completion of a major are available on a part-time basis.

One practical solution to this problem could involve a refresher program to be organized prior to a student entering a program where background technical knowledge is incorporated. One type of program which could enable a mature student to brush up on forgotten knowledge would also serve the purpose of giving either or not a mature student is ready to enter the desired science field in which case the student might have to start from scratch. In any case a refresher program could help avoid unnecessary frustration on the part of a bogged-down mature student and it could also eliminate that lack of support on the part of those faculty members who feel that extra help given to students in on a part with spouse feeding.

Life experience is an asset.

One situation that does pose a very real problem for the mature student is entering a science oriented program having forgotten most of the basic knowledge required for such a program. Most mature students gravitate towards social science and liberal arts programs where their life experience is an asset and where they are not required to have technical background knowledge of a subject. On the other hand, mature students can encounter a major difficulty when entering a science program if their background knowledge is forgotten and as a result of this the student can easily get bogged down and totally discouraged. The mature student is then faced with a situation whereby if faculty members are not sensitive to this particular problem, the student is out at sea. Such students do require help and encouragement and although faculty are generally eager and willing to help, it has been known for some student members to react given such help. In such instances the problem becomes magnified and often polarized.

Part-time students are going to school and this is a part-time student to students often with the odds stacked against them.

Mature students gaining ground

Quite clearly, organizations such as OPUS and COPUS are a critical and essential element in balancing the scales of equality for all students. Among others Long was appointed to the position of Dean of Students and Ms. Carol Baker was appointed Assistant Dean.

Among other issues Long is that mature students do have particular needs and he is anxious to fulfill these needs especially in terms of counselling which he maintains should be geared towards the mature student where the occasion arises. He is also concerned about the drop-out rate. "Oftentimes students drop out because they run into situations that could have been avoided had they been counselled effectively," he says.

Carroll Baker feels that in the case of faculty members being insensitive to the needs of the mature student, the only way Student Affairs can help is to equip the student to deal with that kind of situation but not change the attitudes of faculty, in essence not to coax the mature student down from the chandelier but to help her or him to swing a little more gracefully.

Ken Long sums up the role of Student Affairs in relation to mature students in this way: We'd like the adult students to feel more at home as a group at the university and to bring their character and experience into light. As a response to the changing times, perhaps as a response to that unified voice crying out there in the wilderness, the recent appointment of Dr. Jerry Booth to the position of Director of part-time Studies, could well be a gesture on the part of the university administration to facilitate better understanding of the part-time student's problems.

This trend places new responsibility on all levels of our educational systems and the success of our universities and colleges can only be measured in terms of meeting these new responsibilities head-on. Such responsibility as an example of the form of attitude and action can and must filter down from an administrative level to the professor in the classroom. Building a drawbridge across a chasm cannot be done in a day, it can only be done slowly.

Most important of all, it must be done surely.
Photograph reflects a positive image at SAC's

If you like loud and sassy rock, Photograph is the band for you — get the picture? All puns aside, this band is a prime example of a group who has graced into a pleasing combination of vocals and back-up music. Photograph — formerly The Elevators — hails from Belleville, Ontario, and have been together professionally for five years.

Their charisma comes from the lead singer, who is reminiscent of a cross between Davy Jones and Mick Jagger, complete with a vibrating leg. He carries off a sweet and innocent look, but with a glint in his eye that reminds you he isn’t any kid. The lead singer constitutes most of the visual show and complements this with his excellent vocal ability.

Photograph’s repertoire consists of the usual rock selections from The Who, Bruce Springsteen, and The Rolling Stones. They also perform various numbers from a recently recorded album, on the Capitol label (which, if you’re interested, comes out in January) including snappy numbers such as a song called “Running Stones.” They also perform such as a song called “Running Stones.”

Unfortunately, Photograph was loud, and the percussion just about knocked SAC’s windows out. One patron continued yelling “Turn it down!”

Lacklily, none of the vocals were lost, in fact they were very clear, and the harmonies blended well. Only a few of the softer notes were lost.

The only song I was actually disappointed with was the Clash’s “Feast of Law,” which, for some reason, sounded like straight harmony backed up by the melody.

The light show is the usual display of gels, with nothing too dramatic, flashy or hard on the ears.

On the whole Photograph is an excellent band and a trip to SAC’s this weekend would be well worth your while.

THE STUNT MAN

by Rosemarie Comisso

The Stunt Man is a movie within a movie toying with both reality and fantasy.

Consider the beginning of the film. A man is arrested by the police, but escapes. In flight, he finds himself running through the woods, only to get into a fight with a telephone lineman. He then finds himself racing across a bridge pursued by a Dusenberg. To prevent being run over, he picks up a lead pipe and throws it at the car, forcing it to careen off the bridge into the water below.

All this time a helicopter hovers overhead watching the whole ordeal on film.

Suddenly you say, “That’s easy. Since the film is about stunt men, that scene is just part of the movie they are filming.”

Yes and no. The man running is really an escaped criminal and the man who is lying at the bottom of the river is really dead.

Now a part of the cast, Lucky becomes romantically involved with Nina (Barbara Hersey), an actress in the movie, whose connection with Cross is sometimes questionable. Because of this uncertainty, Lucky and Nina have a tender-tormenting affair which is always on the edge of ending.

The movie is not totally amusing or serious, though. Some wry exchanges of dialogue between the characters provides the necessary comic relief and maintains a harmonious balance as the story unfolds.

The Stunt Man is unusual all right, but not only because of its novel premise and tricky stunts. The movie is proof that escapist can be accomplished without sacrificing the intelligence of its audience.

Rozsnyai provides music via clarinet

by Catherine M. Wilson

Last Friday, November 7, in Moot Court, a most interesting concert of clarinet music was presented. The School of Music's Dr. Imre Rozsnyai (associate professor of music), soloist, was accompanied by Dr. Philip Adamson (assistant professor of music) on piano. All of the pieces were twentieth-century creations of Hungarian origin. A "Sonatina" by Jeno Garl's "Rondo" still bright, "Photograph", "Three Hungarian Folk Songs" by Bela Bartok was quick moving, exciting and showed Dr. Rozsnyai's mastery of clarinet technique. Unaccompanied by the piano, the "Three Bagatelles for Solo Clarinet" by Perence Meis was very animated and once again showed excellent technique. Good articulation kept the mood lively and the colour bright.

Finally, Renzo Kolak's "Four Hungarian Dances" showed Dr. Rozsnyai's comfort with his native music. There was good balance between clarinet and piano and more energy from both performers than in previous pieces. Brilliant technique on both instruments led to a lively atmosphere, quite appropriate for dancing. The next musical events on campus are included in Canada Music Week, November 23-30; The Brunswick String Quartet on November 28, and the University Concert Band on November 30.

SAC'S
Erickson sails into Vanier

by Peter Haggert

"Here's to a good time tonight!"

With these words of optimism, the guitar-slinging troubadour from Fort Worth, Texas, began his Monday night performance in Vanier Hall.

Perhaps the most popular entertainer who visits the Windsor campus with any consistency, Cliff Erickson again impressed and endeared his devoted audience. It's not often you see 275 people anywhere on campus on a Monday night. His cabaret style performance, encompassing both modern tunes and standards ranging from The Mammas and The Papas' "California Dreamin'" to Don MacLean's infamous "American Pie", as a theme for the set, in between songs Erickson showed signs of fatigue during his six hundred and fifty-sixth encore.

Cliff Erickson sailed into Vanier Hall with songs ranging from The Beatles and Elvis Presley. From the bounding strains of "Rocky Racecoon" to the inconstant harmony of "Hey Jude", Erickson captured a diverse mixture of the Beatles best music.

Attention was next fixed on Elvis. Complete with upturned collar and quivered leg, Cliff Erickson visited "Heartbreak Hotel" only to return to "Love Me Tender" to an audience member. But Erickson saved his best for last. Closing his show with "Albertain Bound", it became an indication that all was not quiet on the western front. He returned to the stage, changing audience to play "Mr. Boojangles," "F ired and Rain" and Don MacLean's "Vincent". The entranced performer seemed moved by the continuing applause. Vanier Hall sponsored this successful event. Let's hope that this starts a trend, as it is now proven that with good organization going after good talent, a successful show can be staged on this campus even on a Monday night.

More on Cliff Erickson when he returns to SAC's Pub November 24 through November 29.

Crowd discovers nothing they didn't already know

The Joe Jackson Band: Beat Crazy

by Pat Sellar

The best parts of Joe Jackson's previous records displayed a sharp wit and a penchant for exploiting unusual themes. His "I'm the Man" not only dismissed all of the useless trends on the seventies (from skateboarders to Jaws) but lampooned Jackson's own foolishness as well. "It's Different for Girls" (probably his best song to date) had an unexpected and genuine tenderness in the subtext of the lyrics describing a love-struck boy confronted by a symphonial girl. With Beat Crazy, Jackson still views the world from different angles, but his originality seems forced and his sense of humour has all but vanished.

The problem here is one of coherence, Jackson seemingly can't decide whether he wants to make great statements or a great party record. Almost invariably, the songs with strong lyrical content are weak musically, and the strong tunes are accompanied by throw-away lyrics. Only "Somebody Up There" manages to meld a forceful melody with a simple but touching sentiment. This weakness is carried to its extreme in "Battleground". Lyrically the most intense song on the album, it completely lacks melody. Jackson chants monotonously over the bands' jerky rhythm, probably meant to stand out, the song becomes easily forgettable.

Interestingly, two or three of the tunes here show that Jackson has been listening to his B-52 records. They feature that same B-52 jingle bells. These stand as the best, most exciting cuts on the album, and it's a chance they were the entirety to write.

On Beat Crazy, Joe Jackson seems too hard to write 'untypical' rock songs. The effort may be admirable, but the results are not nearly as satisfying as those Jackson's previous comic stance produced. Some liner notes state, "This album represents a desperate attempt to make music more than just Rock and Roll. Deep in our hearts, we knew it was doomed to failure. The question is, why? Why did we try?" Good question.

Perhaps next time, Joe won't try to make so much sense, and will instead regain his lost sense of humour.

Staudt finished fourth in the women's 5 kilometre (3.1 miles) run, in a time of 18:08, and was chosen as a member of the first all-Canadian cross-country team. Roberts was picked as a Support Lancer and Lancerette teams!

Beaten by Athenas
Spikers start season with loss
by Chris Legebow

Windsor Lancerette volleyball began its 1980-81 season with a match against Waterloo Athenas Tuesday night in St. Denis Hall. Although they played well, it was not consistent enough to beat the Waterloo team and the Lancerettes were down 10-15, 9-15, 15-10 and 7-15.

Coach Jean Brien described the loss as "a let-up in play or a loss of concentration." She firmly believes that "there isn't a single team we will play that we can't beat, but we have to prove that we can be winners."

Windsor's attack seemed to lack the 'killer' instinct it needed in order to win. The cover was not tight enough to pick up the tips and pokes by the Athenas and the attack suffered as the team struggled with their defense.

The Windsor team is not slow, but it was not quick enough on this night to compensate for the sloppy defense and the tall, forceful Waterloo team took advantage of this weakness.

The team finished its exhibition schedule one week ago in a three-team tournament at Schoolcraft College in Michigan. After losing the first match, they plunged into the second with longer rallies and a stronger offense. Lead by the strong, penetrating attack of Kathy Menard, Monique Pomerleau and Rita O'Reilly, Windsor had few problems in overcoming Toledo 11-15, 15-13 and 15-8. The attack was smooth and diverse and stumped the Toledo team effectively.

Windsor failed to maintain this consistency in their final match with Schoolcraft and they lost in three games, 6-15, 17-15 and 6-15. The Lancerettes concentrated on an amazing comeback in the second game which they were clearly losing, 14-3, and went on to win 17-15. But delayed reactions as a result of fatigue lost the final game and the match.

Coach Brien will concentrate practices on tighter defense in preparation for the East vs. West tournament in Ottawa Saturday and Sunday. The Lancerettes return home Tuesday for a match with Wilfrid Laurier University at 7 p.m. in St. Denis Hall. Spectators are welcome.

Oct. 28, He was better on the hills in London but I think I've got more speed on the flat, so I was able to beat him in Guelph."

The men's course was basically flat, but did include one hilly section, which the women's course avoided.

"I wish it had been a little longer," commented Staadt, "but it was glad that the course was quite flat, relatively dry and the weather good. It was the first time in about three weeks that I felt I'd really run well."

The men's race was won by Paul Williams of the University of Toronto in 29:40. The University of Calgary's Peter Butler was second. Sylvia Ruegger of the University of Guelph was first in the women's race, recording a time of 17:15.

The team title for men was won by the University of Alberta. It was the first time in several years that a team from outside Ontario has won.

"The other provinces were much more competitive this year," said Roberts. "Usually Ontario cleans up easily."

The University of Victoria won the women's team title, upsetting the favourite, Western. It was the first time that women have been allowed to compete in cross-country at the national level.

Other University of Windsor runners in action last weekend were Don Mackinnon, Al Baird and Scott McCulloch. Mackinnon and Baird competed in two races on Sunday. They were third and fourth respectively in the Allied Chemical 10 k. run in Amherstburg on Sunday morning, but failed to finish a 10 k. fun run in Jackson Park on Sunday afternoon.

McCulloch, who competed only in the afternoon race, placed seventh overall and third in the under-20 category. Both races were won by local Windsor runner Jaime Kazmier.

The run in Amherstburg was to raise money for cancer research.

Basketball Lancers build on cross-border rivalry

by Steve Rice

Wayne State Tartars and the Windsor Lancers continue to provide some of the most exciting basketball action available in the Windsor-Detroit area.

For the second year in a row, the annual exhibition contest was decided by a single point, the Lancers averting last year’s loss with a 66-65 win on two last-second free throws by John Scott.

Scott, the Tartars’ captain and the game’s high scorer with 20 points, was fouled with eight seconds left in the game and the Lancers leading 65-64. He coolly stepped to the line and sank both free shots for the win.

The Lancers got one more chance on a desperation shot by all-star centre Stan Korosec at the buzzer, but the ball caromed off the front of the rim and out.

Last year’s game, an 83-84 triumph by Windsor in St. Denis Hall, was decided on a 10-foot hook shot by Larry Landry with only seconds remaining in the first overtime.

“Their shot was the reaction of Wayne State coach Vern

Jim Molyneux shots over Tartar defence.

Do it ... for the sake of the team

The amount of deep sleep depends, in part, on how much time the person gets to sleep, and whether one had the accustomed peaceful routine before bed.

Making love is a pleasant form of exercise which can help one to sleep deeply at night. If a person makes love nightly and then suddenly stops, chances are he or she won’t sleep as well. As for engaging in sexual relations being debilitating, most people use up the same amount of body energy during sex as when they are walking briskly up a couple of flights of stairs.

Pregnancy ups use far more energy.

So if one believes that engaging in sexual relations will keep him or her awake, which is very possible, he or she should certainly not participate. Some game warmups are far more energy-consuming and people use up a lot more energy during sex than they do when they're just walking around.
Bette Stephenson's speech to SAC members last week was roundly criticized for its content and delivery. The minister admitted that the university administration had a problem and that a constitutional change would be necessary to make sure the SAC was able to function properly. Stephenson's belief that the student unions should be more independent from the government was questioned by some members of the audience, who suggested that the SAC was too closely aligned with the government's goals.

The following is an excerpt from Dr. Bette Suphen-son's opening statement last Thursday. The Minister of Colleges and Universities was introduced by RAC President David Simmons, who made reference to some recent criticism of the ministry's under-funding of universities and the student aid program.

The minister opened by saying that in fact, be demanding in the years ahead to help them a,e so important to our society because they enrich and enhance our social and cultural life.

Ontario will be asked to play - and will play - a very important position to combine the theoretical background which has been, for too long neglected in Canada, research and development prospects than individuals with less education. They also enjoy relatively high starting salaries and they stress in the majority, greater satisfaction with the jobs they get upon graduation.

"Now, all of you are aware that during the time students are at university, the public, through its taxes,

The survey that has been carried out by the Task Force on Student Assistance, which was established last November, has, in fact, demonstrated that the full-time university students who received the benefits of our Ontario Study Grants program are receiving the most generous assistance in this country. It is unlike other countries, Ontario allows most financially needy students to obtain grant assistance first without requir

Bette bleats

"I'm confident that the universities and the colleges are going to be meeting these challenges head-on and I am aware in fact, that the University of Windsor and St. Clair College have begun to do just that and they're beginning to look at opportunities because, as the population over the age of 25 grows, so will the opportunity to meet these needs for the upgrading occupational skills in a rapidly changing society and economy.

The speed of technological change points very strongly to one fact and that is that we must continue to develop our intellectual strengths if we're really going to meet the future with confidence. University students enjoy a particularly favorable position in this.

"A recent graduate employment survey indicates that university graduates enjoy much better employ-

"I was, therefore, extremely anxious that the national student assistance program be reviewed and have pressed for some time for that kind of review and was, therefore, pleased when the former Secretary of State - that is, the one in the short-lived government between May and December of last year - agreed that, indeed, a task force should be established. My colleagues in other provinces also agreed that we should participate in this and that task force has now almost completed its work.

I might add as well, that in cooperation, as I'm sure most of you know, with the Ontario Federation of Students, we are in the process of the development of a stratification study which I think will be a tremendous assistance to all of us in formulating future student assistance policies and in ensuring that those policies, indeed, meet the requirement of student accessibility.

Ladies and gentlemen, I believe that the industrial core of Ontario is absolutely vital to the future of this country, and I think this university is in a unique position to serve not just this region but, indeed, this province and this country very well in its larger economic and social development which are absolutely essen-

Employment survey implants new hope for grads

by Brian Williamson

The "Employment Survey of 1979 Graduates of Ontario Universities" of over 20,000 graduates within a year of graduation has some encouraging results.

First, the Ministry of Colleges and Universities report notes an overall unemployment rate of only 4.9 percent for graduates was discovered.

Second, an 18.5 percent increase in salaries within the first nine months of employment was reported by students surveyed.

For almost 40 percent of jobs, no degree was required said the survey. 12 percent had moved to other areas for relocation to other areas of Ontario and for "the Western exodus". Yet, he also contends that the "local demand for some jobs (engineering and applied science-related positions) is great!"

Additionally, Musgrave and the 1979 survey seem to agree on the fact that, simply, there are jobs for graduates of Ontario universities. Business and Commerce, Engineering and Applied Science as well as Law and Medicine graduates have, indeed, the highest placement records according to the survey.

According to Musgrave, who cited heavy work loads in his office as the reason for not providing local statistics, "arts students are disadvantaged as they are not trained for an industrially-marketable job".

While this may be true to an extent, the 1979 survey found a 70.6 percent rate of employment of "Fine and Applied Arts graduates", and a finding of 79.4 percent employment of Education, Physical Education and Recreation graduates.

Musgrave's duties include the petitioning of industries to submit jobs to the placement centre. "We are always on the prowl", he said, as is evident from the relatively extensive semestrial list of employment positions available to students at no cost.

"A graduating student must be flexible. There are jobs for Arts students with banks and newspapers, and Political Science students fit nicely into government positions" although Musgrave added, "the government is placing emphasis on Engineering and Applied Science graduates".

Jean-Jacques Blais and the BNA

by Peter Heasove

"I am a member of a national parliament, seized by a great responsibility".

With that, the Honourable Jean-Jacques Blais, federal Minister of Supply and Services, set the tone of his address concerning the new constitutional package offered by the federal government. The occasion was the annual First Year Law Fall Banquet, held last week at the Ciociaro Club on North Talbot Road.

Speaking to about two hundred law students and their guests, Blais confirmed the federal government's commitment to protection of the British North America Act, an endeavor that is not taking shape in the British Parliament.

On the issue of the new constitution's entrenched Bill of Rights, the Minister stated it was the "serious obligation of Canadians" to identify their rights on behalf of their fellow citizens. Blais emphasized that language education rights will be a fundamental issue in the debate over the new constitutional package.

The problem of regional inequality figures prominently in the federal government's proposals. Blais said there were plans to employ a new formula to combat the exigencies nurtured by economic and social inequalities. Negotiation and concerted legislation will act to erase the burden on "have not" provinces, while dealing equitably with the economically self-sufficient provinces.

Blais also expressed the federal government's desire to formulate a new amending process. He said it should be "a collective aim of all to rid ourselves of the albatross of unamendability" which has hung heavily on the history of federal provincial Constitutional Conferences.

Blais said if the provinces fail to come up with a new amending procedure within two years after adopting the new constitution, the federal government will then implement the Victoria Charter of 1971, an amending formula which is thought to best represent the diverse interests of the country.

Head table guests at the banquet included Essex Bar Association President Tony Cusimato, I.A.W. lawyer Jennifer Carus, Senior Provincial Court Judge Gordon Stewart, University of Windsor Chairman of the Board of Governors John McCleary, Provincial Court Judge Harry Momotokis, Citizenship Court Judge Valerie Kazurak, Student Law Society Executives Kevin Sisk and Mary Paszcuzi and, banquet organizers, Jane Milanetti and Hercules Pagi.
Food committee plays "mother" to residences

by Wendy Coomber

Feeling the pains of terminal hunger, recent graduates are calling on Mother to fix us a peanut-butter-strawberry jam delish.

But "Mother" is a long way away for the residence people. They must rely on Danel Johnston, Director of Saga Foods at the university, and Dave Calvert, Director of Residences and Food Services.

These two men represent the Saga Company and the university, respectively, and also form part of the university's Food Committee. This group also includes Ron Gleiser, cafeteria manager, Rick Zago, SAC Commissioner of Ancillary Services; and students from six of the seven residences.

The students receive the complaints of their residents and pass them on the Johnston and McMurray who will try to find some solution to the problem.

"Generally, the Food Committee is concerned with what the students want," explained Martha Collins, representative from Laurier Hall. "She said this year the committee was trying to increase the contact between itself and the residences.

However, Jeff Leal, representative of Elcota Hall, said at the beginning of the year, "People didn't know that the Food Committee actually existed."

Notes of the committee's meetings are now posted on the bulletin boards for everyone to see and the response is much better.

So far, one of the main problems facing students who must eat at the Vanier Hall cafeteria is that of running out of scrip. The University of Windsor is on the Squir Plan. This means that when the residence student pays for his room, he also buys one half or one whole year's supply of scrip. These "notes" take the place of money when paying for meals.

Brenda Wilson, committee representative from Huron Hall, said one of the main concerns in Huron, and in the residences in general, is the food pricing at Vanier. She said, for many students in her residence scrip is not lasting the required length of time, which is half the year for Huron Hall. After the scrip runs out, students are left on their own to find their meals.

Dave McMurray finds the problem recurring most in the last five years of the committee, has been that of menu choice and lineups at the cash register.

Alberta post-secondary scholarships strike oil

EDMONTON (CUP) The Alberta government left critics of its post-secondary education policies awestruck with its announcement of a $10 million heritage scholarship fund.

The scholarship will be financed from the interest on investments in the heritage savings and trust fund. $2.5 million will be awarded in 1980-81 to all students who maintained an 80 percent average in grades 10, 11, and 12.

In addition, $1 million will be available in 1980-81 for athletic and recreational scholarships.

The $150,000 first year scholarships apply to all students who maintained an 80 percent average in grades 10, 11, and 12.

In addition, first year students who do not maintain an 80 percent average through all three grades will be paid separately for grades 10, $500 for grade 11, and $700 for grade 12.

Five hundred $3000 undergraduate awards will be offered to second, third and fourth year students. These awards will be given on the basis of academic standing.

The program will include $5000 scholarships for first year students, $5000 scholarships for second, third and fourth year students, and $10,000 and $15,000 scholarships for graduate students.

The 1980-81 program will be the only one of its kind.

The scholarship and awards program will be unique in the western world," he said.

The program will include $5000 scholarships for first year students, $5000 scholarships for second, third and fourth year students, and $10,000 and $15,000 scholarships for graduate students.

Pagan concepts of God

by Debbie Staley

Twentieth century pagans s- rise

On Sunday, November 30, at 8:00 p.m., Mortimer Adler, the "pagan philosopher," will be appearing at the University Centre. The event is part of the Christian Culture Series.

Adler has suggested a new role for God. As he says, "I am a twentieth century pagan... and I believe a book about God for pagans should be written by a pagan, but one who is deeply concerned with the question of God's existence and with trying to establish the reasonableness of belief in God."

As a result, Adler has published a book, How to Think about God: A Guide for the 20th Century Pagan, which he feels answers this need.

During his appearance, Adler will express his philosophers and suggest "possible ways of bridging the gulf between philosophy and faith."

The lecture will also attempt to correct any misinterpretations of the term "20th century pagan" and attempt to establish a new understanding.

What to do with an empty Blue.
Students find their questions are way out to lunch

Although the recent visit of Dr. Bette Stephenson was well publicized, the turnout to the question-and-answer period on your visit last week was, to put it mildly, dismal.

University of Windsor students had a first-hand opportunity to question the Minister of Colleges and Universities on virtually any topic pertaining to university life and quite frankly, the turnout was disappointingly low.

Those brave enough to withstand thequestioning eyes of their lunch-gobbling peers in the Centre cafeteria last Thursday were, on the whole, unprepared to go head to head with the lady who controls the purse strings of Ontario's universities.

And those even foolhardier to step up to the microphone were bombarded with a barrage of statistics the likes of which have not been seen since the Republic newspaper oddsmakers hit Detroit last July.

Perhaps foolishly is not the proper word to use. Those few brave souls who dared to meet the Minister on her home grounds (boggling the mind with vast quantities of numbers) found out just how superb Stephenson's performance was. She managed to talk for just over one hour and a half, and absolutely nothing.

A larger problem for those who were and are concerned, however, was battling the lunchtime crowd. It was at least 300 strong. So the Minister was able to address the magnitude of the problem to the students.

It surely was more than a little difficult for those who have some grave concerns about education in Ontario to fight their collective way past the innumerable food-fighters, card players, coffee-machine-kickers and apathy-ridden who filled the cafeteria that day.

Surely the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) could have found a better place to stage the event.

Even St. Denis Hall, with all its imperfect acoustics and vast (probably empty) spaces would have been preferable, although an empty lecture hall would have done the job quite nicely. With a little bit of planning and foresight SAC would have known that the cafeteria area would not have been the appropriate place to play host to the Minister of Colleges and Universities.

All matters of staging aside, perhaps a better reason for those who turned out could have been the fact that most students on this campus probably do not know what the Minister is responsible for.

There was a little bit of advance, "what to ask the Minister" pamphlets could have been circulated along with a few relevant statistics to back them up. Many who asked Dr. Stephenson a question were unprepared for the onslaught of numbers and verbal hedges which were thrown around.

Although it seems at this time fair to take a few cracks at the organizers of the event, the best program was that of non-attendance and indifference. A problem not easily solved.

It seems that the University of Windsor has become renowned across the province for its ability to find not an easy answer to overcome but is one of which we should be particularly proud.

And yet, the SAC representation in the form of a memorandum and the student representatives of the National and Provincial levels. How they are supposed to be able to do without the support of the very students they represent is a mystery.

In the end, SAC did not fail with the Minister. They lived up to their obligations. They said they would bring her here and they did. The only reason the visit was not a success was perhaps lack of pressure which seems to infect the University of Windsor student populace.

But what do we really need money for anyway?

"We've got some good news and some bad news" said two government reports which were released recently.

The bad news came in the form of a report by the Ontario Council on University Affairs (OCUA), an advisory board to the provincial Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

System Rationalization: A Responsibility and an Opportunity (cursory title) shocked its finger at the higher-education institutions of this province and said, in effect, "Your under-graduate programs have been growing without school-to-school coordination and any semblance of planning in any form and that's dumb." There were a lot of stinging words there too, but basically that's the report.

And a dang reasonable report it is too.

Granted, enrollment at this university has been growing for the past couple of years, defying all the past predictions about hard-times, but even the most heavily-driven administrator in the province is not going to get this one to continue.

A major enrolment drop is going to be here before the next school year, the report says.

Even realizing this, many universities (even those already in severe financial trouble) are planning ahead with new under-graduate programs which may very well be, as the OCUA report suggests, unnecessary duplications of excellent programs already existing at other schools.

Yet, administrators are whining about the ramifications of this report, just as they whine about not receiving enough money in the form of operating grants from the government. Well, ladies and gentlemen, it doesn't work both ways: if you want money, you cannot even stand around swooping for it, which is precisely what the OCUA report is saying with a great deal of merit.

Money doesn't grow on trees, you know. Boy, there's a coinnble phrase (pun intended).

Out of the "good news" chutie, we find the same minis­try's Employment Survey of 1979 Graduates of Ontario Univer­sities. This little cheerer-upper shows that having a univer­sity degree really does help one to get a job and a job with satisfaction about starting salary, opportunities for advancement and personal­ity for personal­ity.

Now that's exciting. Here you were, crying in your beer about how rotten your classes were going to make your future.

An age old question for students is "Do THEY run society for our benefit or for their own?" Following are some of the recent questions I have heard bandied about the past few months on this subject.

2. Why do you think they want to keep you unprepared for the on­slaught of numbers and verbal hedges which were thrown around?
3. Why do you think society is advanced because of our medical facilities? The only reason we have developed the medical area is because THEY make a lot of money on medicine. Researchers don't study cancer or any other diseases as much anymore.

Dear Mr. Simmons: The Lance, as an arm of the public press enjoying certain liberties, nonetheless are still under the ars of the newspaper's editorial policy, which in this case, I am sure you understand. It is hoped that your council's influence could positively bring that policy to a more responsible and conscientious one.

Lance promoting “legalised murder”?

Dear Editor:

I am writing to complain about ads for East Gyn, a Detroit abortion clinic, appearing in recent issues of The Lance. I do not think that The Lance is acting in the best interests of the students of this university in aiding, promoting or supporting pro-choice views by printing such ads. Abortion is already virtually legal in Ontario, and the laws are not likely to be repealed. The mere availability of abortion does, enough, I believe, promote the idea that one needn’t take responsibility for one’s actions; I believe it will not be furthering this murderous form of birth control by printing ads for such clinics. It is cruel to advertise as a means of birth control, and I hope you’ll keep up the good work.

Abortion ads offend

Dear Editor:

I am writing to complain about ads for East Gyn, a Detroit abortion clinic, appearing in recent issues of The Lance. I do not think that The Lance is acting in the best interests of the students of this university in aiding, promoting or supporting pro-choice views by printing such ads. Abortion is already virtually legal in Ontario, and the laws are not likely to be repealed. The mere availability of abortion does, enough, I believe, promote the idea that one needn’t take responsibility for one’s actions; I believe it will not be furthering this murderous form of birth control by printing ads for such clinics. It is cruel to advertise as a means of birth control, and I hope you’ll keep up the good work.

Religious rebuttal

Dear Editor:

I do not want to antagonize anyone, but there are people who wish to believe it, I offer the following argument:

God has always used the man and woman relationship as an illustration of his love for his people, for example, Ephesians 5:22-23. The Greek word for "wife" used in this and every other New Testament instance is Gune, meaning "a wife". The word is a very important symbol throughout the Old and New Testaments.

The sex relationship is nothing more than a loving relationship, it is a small-scale model of creation. What it really means is that in God's image, we are a small-scale model of God. Since we are models of God and a special creation (Gen. 26, 1 Cor. 4:1, 1 Pet. 2:12), does it not follow that our actions are an example to all heaven?

Where do premarital sex, homosexuality, etc. fit into this picture?

If man had believed the truth of creation as set forth in Romans 1:20, there would not be the problem seen in verses 25, 27. In conclusion, we need to follow the counsel of 1 Cor. 6:13 "know ye not that we shall judge worlds in the presence of Christ, how much more things that pertain to this life?"

Simmons remains calm in the face of adversity

Dear Editor:

As the students' representative, it is imperative that I inform them about the state of the Students' Administrative Council in light of the numerous unfounded charges that have been leveled against them.

History is replete with examples of good leaders and names which come instantly to mind are those of Churchill, DeGaulle and John Kennedy. I am not in any way trying to liken myself into any of these individuals. The point I am trying to make is that while their styles have all been different, they all showed one thing in common: they were true, in the truest sense of the word, their ability to remain calm in the face of opposition and the exaggeration of their achievements.

It is rather unfortunate that my attempts to be assertive in my leadership have been characterized as dictatorial. One week ago, I was accused of not delegating authority and responsibilities that I should do. I do not for one moment believe that there is one individual who has a monopoly on knowledge and believe that truth can only be arrived at through a diversity of opinions.

In my attempts to de-escalate this crisis, I asked for the resignation of John Rizopoulos. This is not to imply or suggest that he is the sole cause of the problem. We have had several attempts in his resignation before he received my letter, but there is absolutely no doubt that he knew that I had asked for his resignation. John also accused me of "demonizing" him and I am using this as a basis for my imputation. Again, Mr. Editor, I did not threaten John. Furthermore, I have no intentions whatsoever of using force. The only weapon I intend to use to de-escalate this whole crisis is reason. I have never used any other and I know I never shall.

I recognize the extent of democracy and do hope democracy will prevail at all times. However, the movement to impose upon us the belief that there is no true expression of democracy. The architects of the impeachment movement, John and Stan Gordon, have no basis whatsoever for the charges they dare make. What are their grounds for impeachment?

Have I not served the students in the best of my ability? Oh yes! Have I not successfully agonized on their behalf? Again, the answer is Yes! Have I been found guilty of wrongdoing? Not even John and Stan Gordon would provide conclusive proof.

The final part of this letter is directed to you, Mr. Editor. I am convinced that it is the right of the press to inform and to do so objectively and accurately.

It is poor policy to make unsupportable assertions and to seek refuge in vague language. If you are so convinced that John and Stan have "very specific charg" why didn't you print them. If you claim to be fair (I am sure you don't) in reporting the issues, then, did you not check with me or the S.A.C. By-Law to determine who is the recogni- tive S.A.C., representing all of the various affiliated bodies (NUS, OFS). Unfortunately, you never seem to follow such a course.

It will not be long before the voice of the student will be heard and it is, I think, entirely unfair that your slanted re-

Dear Mr. Simmons: The Lance, as an arm of the public press enjoying certain liberties. These liberties, nonetheless, are still under the ars of the newspaper's editorial policy, which in this case, I am sure you understand. It is hoped that your council's influence could positively bring that policy to a more responsible and conscientious one.

University underfunding ramps across Ontario

Dear Editor:

Last Thursday, November 13, we were fortunate to have had the Honourable Bette Stephenson, Minister of Colleges and Universities on our campus talking to us about the government’s role in supporting universities. Those of you who listened to her no doubt left with the impression that students' concerns in respect to government underfunding will be attended to in the future.

For most of us, post-secondary education is a right and not a privilege. Unfortunately, we still have great difficulty in convincing Queen’s Park about that fact.

Despite the fact that we do recognize that education is a right, I am afraid that not many of us are properly aware of how quickly that right is becoming a privilege.

I want to impress upon you and emphasize to you, that our university, the University of Windsor, and universities across Ontario are entering a severe and critical period of their existence. Every day we attend university, we are made aware of the increasing constraints facing our institution of learning. We see it in the labs through the lack of proper laboratories, equipment and we also see it in the classrooms through the curtailment of valuable programs.

(FROM WINDSOR)

Our program has been cut back considerably and it is difficult to see the budget at the universities ("...to the universities.")

The government's own Advisory Council on University Affairs says that continued underfunding by Queen's Park will affect the quality of all sectors of university operations in the academic year and mean an "aggressive reduction of research efforts."

Those of us at the University of Windsor are fortunate to have such in-depth knowledge of the problems universities face and we have an opportunity to take necessary action to correct program duplication throughout the province.

The voice of experience

Dear Editor:

Would like to take this opportunity for students who are there, especially female students, to learn from my experience.

Just this past Sunday, while working at the Leddy Library, my purse was stolen. I was stranded on the third floor of the Leddy Library with the only two constraints to deal with budget and labour. With a limited budget and not sure how to cut drastically, the Library has attempted to maintain services.

However, the report says that "we need to make cuts and stop some projects over the years that have had a bad cumulative effect on basic operations."

Despite all these cutbacks, I am deeply worried that the significance of those cutbacks have not been felt by all students. Last Tuesday, November 18th, the Chairman of the OCUA, Dr. W.C. Winegard, in our address to the Board of Gover- nors at the university, said that the academic year "1981-82 will be a critical year" for universities in Ontario. He went on to say that already many universities should be in debt that they will be unable to recover.

Dr. Winegard, however, did not spare the universities. He said that universities will have to examine their "financially burdensome use of terms of "use of their resources and programs offered."

In a brief statement by the OCUA earlier this year, "System Rationalization", the emphasis is placed on the availability of students to take necessary action to correct program duplication throughout the province.

So where are the university's greenbacks grown?

by Joan Bosley with the McMaster Silhouette and the Queen's Journal

Have you ever wondered how and where the university invests its money?

Well, it is invested by one man and the money is put in Canadian banks and trust companies which have offices in Windsor.

Joseph E. Schiller, Director of Finance, is the man solely responsible for generating the maximum possible earnings on every dollar received by the university. He follows the policy formulated by the Board of Governors and reports to this body monthly on the financial status of the university.

The university's investments are made on a short-term basis, which is anywhere from one day to six months. The reason for the short terms, said Mr. Schiller, is because, we don't have much money."

President Mervyn Franklin said that the university has a small endowment, this is why there are no long-term investments such as bonds.

Mr. Schiller said, "All investments are termed to come back at payday," or when needed on it."

day's investment can clear the university is up. He said he is sure about investments he makes, therefore he has never had to withdraw money before the period was up.

Scholarships are the only university funds invested for long terms, said Schiller. The money for scholarships is donated by individuals and companies and they determine the amount. Mr. Schiller said his office "tries to keep the principle intact," and pay the scholarships with the interest generated.

The University of Windsor, because of its small endowment, has to depend on short-term investments instead of investing on a long-term basis in Canadian and foreign companies. However, said Schiller, the banks and trust companies where they lend their money may invest in foreign companies.

Because of this lack of direct control, the Board of Governors has no policy regulating the morality of university investments, as does the Board of Hamilton's McMaster University. McMaster's Board of Governors recently adopted such a policy because a lot of the investment money came from public donations and donating people and firms wanted to be able to express views on where the money was going, instead of it being left up to the judgment of those within the university.

The McMaster Finance Committee (the University of Windsor does not have one because Mr. Schiller is solely responsible for investments), can divert the invested funds only if it feels the investment is not morally acceptable, and as long as it does not jeopardize the university's financial health.

Queen's Student Action Committee (QSAC) recently protested outside a Board of Trustees meeting, demanding it take a stand against Noranda Mines investment in Chile. Queen's, a shareholder in Noranda.

A spokesman for QSAC Gary Bentzon, said the board should be more concerned with social responsibility. Queen's students voted against the Noranda investment "because of Chile's repressive dictatorship."

While after the protest, the Alma Mater Society (AMS) Policy Advisory Committee, in a brief to the Committee of Social Responsibility, said the committee should become more involved in censoring questionable investments.

The brief also suggested the Committee of Social Responsibility hold bi-monthly meetings and have two open meetings yearly. It also requested changes in Board policy, and suggests an advisory body be formed to look at the "possibility of reexamining the Board of Trustees." Regarding investing investments considered "immoral", the report suggests using divestment only when all other channels have failed.

Noranda wrote a letter to The Queen's Journal to defend its proposed investment in Chilean copper mines. It said, the copper industry in Chile was below producing capacity and Noranda was invited in 1974 by the World Bank to review the potential of the industry.

Noranda said its search for potential may cross boundaries where the government and economy of Chile may differ from those of Canada, but this cannot be a barrier to development. Noranda has gathered opinions from Chilean clergy, who feel foreign investment is necessary to improve the economy.

As a company interested in profit-making, Noranda concentrates on this, and not on interfering in the political affairs of a country as was suggested by some of the Queen's community, said the letter.

The following are the university's Board of Governors' investment regulations:

Resolution passed at the Board of Governors Meeting on October 14, 1975.

RESOLVED that the resolution adopting the Investment Policy of the University of Windsor passed by the Board of Governors on the 11th day of March 1975 be rescinded and that the following be substituted therefor.

RESOLVED that it be the Investment Policy of the University of Windsor to maximize yield while providing for security of capital and ready access to funds through the following plan:

a) To invest current funds for a term of no longer than six months in securities from the following list: Trust Companies having offices in Windsor, Chartered Banks, Federal Treasury Bills, Notes of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, provided that the amount of such investment be limited to the sum of $1,500,000 with any institution in the said category with the exception of Chartered Banks.

b) To invest trust funds in aggregate amounts not more than 36% for a term of not longer than one year, 33% for a term of not longer than five years, 33% for a term of not longer than ten years, in securities from the list of current funds, subject to the restrictions upon amounts of investment therein applied, supplemented by the following list: Government of Canada, Province of Ontario, Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, Securities authorized for Trustees, Securities authorized for Life Insurance Companies.

Resolution passed at the First Annual Meeting of the Board of Governors of the University of September 11, 1980.

RESOLVED that the University's Investment Policy be amended to provide for inclusion of Brokers Loans as approved forms of investment provided they are fully secured by Treasury Bills.

Pilot flies into SAC'S

by Lance Entertainment Staff

When you drop into SAC's this weekend remember: Pilot is a band that will take a nose dive or soar on your personal music charts. In other words, you'll either love 'em or hate 'em. This four man band comes from the London area and have been together for less than one year. And considering this they're a pretty tight group of musicians.

They handled their instruments as well as they wore their long hair, although I have to say some of the songs could have been performed better. Their selections came from the top 40 FM list, and included numbers by Styx, Supertramp, Yes and Genesis. They also did a few of their own original pieces, which turned out to be your middle-of-the-road rock.

Pilot seemed to rely heavily on songs with a lot of keyboard, but this wasn't always to their advantage, as the keyboardist was the less adept musician of the group. Their sound system and lighting effects are top notch.

So if you like raunchy rock, see you at the landing strip... oops, I mean the pub.

THE CINEMA CRITIC

Gloria has all the ingredients of a 1942 B-movie: an ex-gangster moll and an orphaned boy who are on the lam from the mob. To overcompensate for this outdated theme, writer/director, John Cassavetes, exhausts all other avenues or creativity available to him.

He has hired his talented wife, Gena Rowlands, to play the lead: written snappy dialogue for the little boy: thrown in extensive recent footage of New York city: and underscored the film with upbeat jazz by Bill Conti. However, aside from the taut performance by Rowlands, these futile attempts serve as nothing more than padding for a plot that wears thin, right from the start.

Gloria (Rowlands) inherits her little friend, Phil (John Adamus) when she knocks on her neighbour's apartment door to borrow some coffee. It seems that daddy, an accountant for the mob and has made the mistake of blabbing to the police about the illegal operations which puts his life in jeopardy.

Phil finds sanctuary in Gloria's apartment just in time, as the fatal shots killing his family are heard moments later. Knowing the mob will be looking for them both, Gloria grabs a suitcase, gun, and Phil and begins a long and dangerous flight to safety.

When Gloria does come face-to-face with her criminal friends, she usually holds them at gunpoint until she can escape, sometimes popping off a few rounds of her six-shooter. Amidst all this action, Phil and Gloria have a love/hate relationship. Their conversations are as predictable as the contrived set of circumstances they are involved in.

It is this predictability which contributes to the downfall of the film. In the end, Gloria remains just another movie about a gruff and surly adult who succumbs to the love and adoration of a small child.
Dingler exhibit in University Centre Gallery

by Patrick Sedlar

Last Friday night, approximately 150 people gathered for the opening of Canadian artist Dan Dingler's one-man show in the University Centre Gallery. Dingler, a graduate of the Layton School of Art and the Cracow Academy of Art, has been teaching lithography, drawing and painting at the University of Windsor's Visual Arts Department for the past six years. In this, his first one-man show, he presents polychrome works in media including: panel, spray paint, litho, photo litho, and collage in various combinations; sometimes all at once. Recent drawings even employ vinyl photo-mural wallpaper as their background.

Upon viewing the works, one quickly notices two recurring elements running throughout; in all but one or two cases, Dingler depicts the human figure and more importantly, huge, floating tube-like structures that weave throughout the pieces. The question immediately arises: exactly what do these forms represent and what purpose do they serve? Are they markers, simple tube forms (as one side suggests), or are they in fact (as more than one examiner has suspected) giant phallic symbols?

The artist claims "they are and they aren't phallic symbols;" that is, the viewers can make of them whatever they like. Dingler himself is merely using the shapes as the means to his "controlling the viewer." Most people, he says, think that art should be pretty, relaxing and fairly mundane. Dingler wants his art to be exciting, disturbing and thought-provoking. His use of the cylindrical shape is a way of not allowing us to get "too comfortable" with it; it involves the viewer with what Dingler calls the "paradox of shapes" and relates to the psychological revulsion to tubular forms. Dingler feels that in this way he is controlling the viewer, making him uncomfortable and making him face it. "I like to scare (the viewer) stark naked," he goes, "throw him out into the snow, and watch him squirm." "Amram" is one of the many works on exhibit in the University Centre Gallery.

Tuesday evening patrons at Cleary Auditorium were treated to a concert performed by one of Canada's leading contemporary pianists/composers, André Gagnon.

Gagnon, along with his nine piece touring orchestra is on the last leg of an eight month Canadian tour on which he has touched all provinces.

His English is only fair, but that's not what the people came to hear. For twelve years this Québecois pianist has gained worldwide popularity.

Amidst his evening performance were old favorites such as "Neige" and "Wow," as well as works such as "Six Variations," "Deux Jours a l'Atelier," "Cleric," and "Christmas Suite." Gagnon has written "Deux Jours a l'Atelier" especially for the University Centre Gallery.

"Amram" is one of the many works on exhibit in the University Centre Gallery.

No, André Gagnon is not suffering from 'meltdown'. It's just a terrible picture.

His third visit to Windsor, Gagnon's performance was not just a repetition of past endeavors. "Each tour we put on a like starting all over again," Gagnon explained.

Barde brings tradition to campus

by Neil Buhol

Normally said Moot Court was lived upon considerably Saturday night with the appearance of Barde.

This world class Celtic group put on one of the best performances I have seen on this campus.

What is Celtic music? If you be French, English, Welsh, Scottish or Irish it is the music of your ancestors. It is intricately played music, using a "virtuoso" players of instruments ranging from a conch shell to a mandolin. To quote from a Barde album liner, when you hear it, "you feel well up inside you, memories from very far back in time and, despite yourself, your feet and hands begin to keep the rhythm."

The opening performer, Carl Metzler (a St. Clair College instructor) guitarist and hammer dulcimer player, provided the perfect warmup for the unusual act. He got a warm response from the audience with his intricate dulcimer playing and laid back funky guitar.

The four members of Barde set the mood of the evening with "La Suite du Cap Breton", conjuring visions of one doing a half step jig and whistling through the highlands of Scotland.

"Jack McGann" written by the band's founder, expressed the present member equal talents. This fine performer also ran through a Jean Ceaugnan piece with hardly a blink. Probably his best rendition was "Julia Delaney" where he seemed to be bowing and plucking the strings at the same time; throughout the song the pace quickened.

The two vocalist, Richard Chapman and Pierre Gueirn kept one of the most popular songs "Lile Noire" was reserved for the encore.

Barde's Windsor performance was the last of a tour which has taken them through high schools from Akzon Ohio to Boston Massachusetts. If Saturday's show is any indication, look for a lot of high school Celtic music fans in the near future.

Barde is now set to work on their third album, and don't plan any major tours till next February.

International food shortogue

by Scott McCollough

Ambassador Auditorium was jammed last Saturday night as the International Student Organization held their International Food and Dance Night. Unfortunately, this meant that many of those seated at the back of the room went a little hungry. Nothing remained of many of the native dishes by the time the last guests reached the buffet table.

Although advertisements said no tickets would be sold at the door, people were apparently able to pick up and pay for tickets which they had earlier reserved. Somehow this resulted in what was obviously too many tickets being sold for the amount of food and space available. Groups of eleven and twelve were sitting at tables meant for eight. Many were late arriving, as was the dinner.

President Franklin took some of the blame for the shortage of food, saying "Dr. Leddy and I had two full plates each - and that's the truth."

Many of the dishes offered:
Malaysian Beef curry (the spicy sort), a Pakistani rice dish called Biryani, African peanut stew with roast beef, Indian Samosas (a sort of triangular bread filled with spices, vegetables and meat), Arab rice in rolled grape leaves with yogurt, and most-o-chaiar, and Iranian concoction of yogurt, raisins, cucumber and garlic (my own favourite).

Most of the food was delicious, though the rice dishes were nearly all cold. An Iranian rice dish with tomato flavouring was a notable exception to this.

Following the dinner, there was a lucky draw for a first prize of a round trip to Montreal and second and third prizes of $100 and $50 (respectively). Several bottles of champagne were also gifted certificates.

Invited to list their social events in "Make A Note!" Events to be published. The Entertainment Editor has all rights to refusal or editing.

PIPPIN: Producing perfect plays

by Peter Huggins

Every sport has its amateur leagues, a training ground for players to develop their talents to a point where they may turn professional. It is even arguable that amateurism gives you more for your money: they provide that extra 110 percent to show their audience they are serious. This system can be applied to the theatre as well. High School and University productions are only steps away from the big time.

Assumption High School has provided the city with a showcase of their amateur talents for thirteen years now. Produce theatre musicals under immeasurable hours to sharpen their individual performances. This system can be applied to the theatre as well. How they choose their music?

by Bill Buchan

Your dial is set at 640 AM, and you are reclining in your favourite chair being mesmerized by the musical overtones of CJOM (assuming, of course, that your favourite chair is on campus). "We choose upbeat music rather than boring pub music," explains Cecil Blaine, Musical Director of the campus radio station. "Basic pop isn’t what everyone wants to hear." As far as station content goes, Blaine claims full responsibility for the music heard here. "If I choose all the music," Blaine revealed, "except for special programming such as Jazz in the evening." Of course, Canadian content is one of the big guns in CJOM’s arsenal.

"There are a lot of good Canadian groups," Blaine points out. "We play some Canadian groups that no other local station plays, such as Max Webster, and Zero One." The CRTC’s demands, of course, satisfy the CJOM’s demands, saying that, on some days, Canadian content will run as high as 45 percent. The remainder gets, it is up to the students to make most of their own props and costumes. "Most of the costume players must be at least 30 percent Canadian oriented. Blaine claims that their format satisfies the CRTC’s demands, saying that, on some days, Canadian content will run as high as 45 percent. The remainder is important to the station.

Promotional albums sent to CJOM by record manufacturers are also a problem for the station, the only exception being FM country-oriented material. CKWW's audience appeal age group, says Collins, is 25 years of age and older, therefore they are inclined not to play a lot of rock music. Since CKWW does not subscribe to the BBM ratings system, Collins could not determine the size of the station’s listening audience.

Collins declares that the station is "forced" to play at least 30 percent Canadian material, which Collins points out that the station meets. Sometimes, CKWW may requests to play a new American release, and CKWW finds itself in the same predicament as did CJOM.

"When I worked in Windsor," Collins recalls, "there weren’t many radio stations at all. But here, there are so many radio stations that we find ourselves competing with the States." We compete by giving Windsor material. We talk to Windsor, not to the States. If Windsor wants (local) news, they have to turn to us.

In last week’s Lance it was advertised that the Social Science Meeting would be at 8:00pm. The correct time is December 1 at 4:00pm.

Crusaders drubbed

The Crusaders basketball team was soundly drubbed 106-55 by Macomb County Community College Monarchs Wednesday night in St. Denis Hall.

Fred Upshaw contributed 14 points in the losing cause with Jeff Drys and John Friedrick-son each adding seven.

Brian Vasser led the Monarchs with 18.

The Crusaders were sloppy and disorganized from the start, shooting poorly and being out-rebounded even though they gave away little height to the Macomb team. They never led in the game.

"We got off to a bad start and from there we were always one step behind," said a slightly dissatisfied Vince Landry, the Crusaders coach. "We matched up well with them, but we weren't even in it. The legs weren't there."

Landry explained that the team had not practised during his absence with the Lancers on the U.S. tour and noted that it may have been a factor in the team's poor play.

The score at halftime was 53-22 for Macomb.

Despite playing a much better game than Tuesday's, the Crusaders suffered a similar defeat one week ago at Highland Park Community College, 108-54.

John Friedrickson was high scorer in that game with 12.

The Crusaders' only win of the season came last Wednesday when they defeated cross-town rival St. Clair College 74-68.

Lancerettes on hot streak

by Sue Heycay

The Lancerette basketball team played an exhibition game with St. Clair College of Windsor Wednesday night, coming out on top of a 77-41 score. The Lancerettes got off to a slow start, leading by only seven at the half. The second half was a different story, however, as Windsor completely outdistanced the Saints. They caught the Saints looking with the fast break a number of times.

Lancerette pressure also forced several turnovers which immediately turned into points.

Roberta Smith - 32 point week-end.

Everyone on the roster had a hand in the scoring. Theresa McGee led the way with 19 rebounds each in the win. Roberta contributed 10 rebounds with 12. Both players played the final eight minutes with four fouls. Theresa pulled down 10 rebounds in the win.

The next league game is today in Ottawa against the Carleton Ravensettes. Windsor will face the University of Ottawa Saturday.

The league home opener is Wednesday, Nov. 26 against McMaster.

Volleyball team getting on track

by Chris Legebow

The Lancerette volleyball team won three of five matches at the East versus West sectional tournament in Ottawa last weekend.

The lead changed hands throughout the first half with the Lancerettes holding a slim one-point edge at the break, 15-13. The second half was filled with fouls and both teams were in the bonus situation with 10. Everyone contributed to the scoring.

Kerry McNair led the rebounding with 10. The Lancerettes had their work cut out for them against Queen’s, who moved down from Tier 1 this year. Queen’s was defeated by the University of Ottawa the previous night and were hungry for their first win of the season.

Tough battle

The lead changed hands throughout the first half with the Lancerettes holding a slim one-point edge at the break, 15-13. The second half was filled with fouls and both teams were in the bonus situation with 10 minutes gone. The Lancerettes stretched the lead to 10 at one point but constant pressure by the Golden Gaels kept them in contention to the final buzzer.

Teamwork was the key in this game with everyone playing together and hustling on offense and defense. High scorers for the game were Theresa McGee with 22 points and Roberta Smith with 12. Both players played the final eight minutes with four fouls.

Although the scores would seem not to indicate it, the match featured Windsor’s best play of the year. Everything was clicking on the floor, but most of all, they maintained their positive attitude and never gave up. After the game the Ottawa coach congratulated coach Jean Brien for the fine effort her team had made, stating that ‘only Windsor played against us such determination and hustle.’

Brien remains optimistic in her view of the team and commented that, not only are the veterans playing well, but the rookies have improved a great deal as well.

Windsor meets Guelph Saturday in Guelph with the next home game coming Nov. 25 against Laurier.

Central Michigan University Chippewas had too much power and too much accurate shooting as they rolled up a 91-54 victory over the Lancers in an exhibition basketball contest played at CMU Wednesday night.

In 10 previous meetings, the Chippewas held an 8-2 win, the Lancers’ last win coming in 1946. Last year, the Chippewas won by a score of 79-69.

Stan Korosec led Windsor scorers with 12 points while young Mark Landry added 10.

James Newman netted 21 for CMU with Mike Robinson contributing 19.

With seven men on the roster over 6’5” and the shortest listed at 6’7”, CMU had a definite height advantage and that made it extremely difficult to work the ball inside on the offensive end.

But the Chippewas also had an easily apparent referee advantage. The team oftener carried his weight to the hoop while obvious infractions went unnoticed at the other end of the court.

Beat themselves

In truth, though, the Lancers did not lose the game there. The team was resting on its laurels as coach Nick Grabowski noted, “they beat themselves.”

Windsor was outhustled and, worse, overconfident.

Maybe we were overconfident,” said Grabowski. “I wish we could have played harder and had more intensity. We lacked the instinct necessary for success.

“Maybe we were overconfident,” Grabowski noted that the one positive aspect of the game was that it gave the freshmen some playing time.

One other bright spot was the work of Brian ‘Ellas” Hogan, whose defense was harder than anyone on the team.

CMU 91 Lancers 54
Scoring - Korosec 12, Landry 10, Melnykew 9, Hogan 8, Havel 4, Kennedy 2, Wallman 2, Harris 2, Buttry 2, Hermanutz 2, Richie 1.

Southern tour

Although the Lancer basketball team lost all three games of their swing through the southern United States one week ago, coach Grabowski felt that the trip was a very positive one.

“I’m extremely pleased,” said Grabowski at the team’s Friday practice session returning home Monday. “I know that sounds strange to say you’re happy after three losses, but this is the best we’ve ever done on a trip like this here,” said Grabowski.

“We have a lot more respect for you than when you came in here. You showed us how the game should be played and that’s with intensity.”

Rebounding and defense will be the key to the Lancer game this year, according to Grabowski, a prediction that the Lancers outrebounded both Texas and Rice.

CMU hands Lancers fifth straight exhibition loss

Was not a pleasant weekend for coach Bob Corran and the University of Windsor hockey team.

Committee set up to examine SAC’s internal strife

by E.P. Chant

A committee was established to examine the internal strife in the Executive office at last Thursday’s (November 29) SAC’s Administrative Council meeting.

Also discussed at the meeting were SAC sponsorship of a “refugee” student (see separate story, page 8), the SAC budget for this year, and the recent “poster incidents” in the SAC office.

The three-man (no Executive members) committee which was set up includes Jay Smith, Kevin Sisk, and Ken Roberts. It has been charged to examine the “present internal strife in the SAC Executive” (by interviewing each member of the Executive) and report its findings — with any recommendations for a solution to the problems — at the next full-council meeting (probably next Thursday, December 6).

Following the establishment of this committee, a motion by Eric Dace that the council pledge its support for SAC President David Simmons was tabled. As Jay Smith put it, SAC could not be expected to affirm its support for Simmons when it had just passed motion to set up a committee to examine problems in his cabinet.

Part of the reported problem was also the subject of a motion, the “motion of no confidence” (November 29). A few weeks ago, Simmons put a poster of a particular political bent on the SAC office, a poster which several members of the Executive thought was inappropriate for that area. One member removed it and a loud argument ensued. The matter had proven to be unacceptable in the Executive level. Jay Smith said he felt the whole incident was “petty” and that all the posters should be put up and belief in their contents should be left to the discretion of the individual viewing them. Simmons added his agreement to this, calling the motion a form of censorship.

Moshe Cohen, however, commented that the general office represented SAC and that the motion should be passed. The vote narrowly confirmed his view, the motion passing ten to nine, with two abstentions.

Overheard after the vote was Simmons asking Chairman Bob Chaney, “Who decides what’s commercial and what’s political?” Chaney: “You do.” Simmons: “This is ridiculous.” Moving on to money matters, the budget, prepared by Mitchell, was approved after a strikingly quick review. With total revenues of $237,000 (including the extra money coming in January from the additional student fees)

Task Force report on student assistance: nothing new

by Syd Rikind

The Ministry of Colleges and Universities’ long-awaited brief to the Federal-Provincial Task Force on Student Assistance contains no new initiatives or concrete solutions to current assistance programmes' difficulties. The Varsity has learned.

A copy of the as yet unreleased report, mistakenly mailed to the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) office, ignores most basic hardships facing students on aid programmes and fails to propose ways to make education accessible to all, regardless of status, according to OFS spokesman Peter Birt. Shortly after the brief was leaked, an internal OFS memorandum was circulated terming the document “shallow” and “disappointing.”

The Ministry of Colleges and Universities, the ministry responsible for it, had deferred a review of OSAP until after the Task Force had reported its findings. According to the OFS, the only positive recommendation contained in the brief is that “provincial plans would place no limitations on the portability of provincial assistance outside the province of residence within Canada.” As the current plan stands, an Ontario-based student cannot receive a loan from the province in which s/he resides if attending college or university in another province.

The brief stresses more cooperation between federal and provincial student aid plans, citing “consensus” among the participating levels of government in which “post-secondary courses” and “post-secondary courses” should “ensure equal opportunity for, and increased participation from, low income families and disadvantaged groups.” However, Birt pointed out this objective is not elaborated upon. It is only hatched at in a program alternative known as “Grant First Supplement with Loan.” Already in operation in Ontario, the plan calls for students to share accommodation, and possibly books, to avoid borrowing, as the grant issued would cover only the very basic needs of students. Such a programme, claims the OFS, would ignore the shared responsibility concept, in which a government aid supplements, not replaces, a student’s available resources. The rest, it is expected, is to come from the student’s family, or other sources. This plan is also intended to “minimize criticism from student groups.”

The brief also recommends the redefinitions of terms such as “full-time students” and “post-secondary courses,” and changing the appellations “dependent” and “independent” students.

SAC decides it can afford to sponsor a refugee

by E.P. Chant

Though they discussed the monetary aspects of the proposal for a half-hour at their last meeting, the members of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) finally decided that money was no object — or obstacle — and passed a motion to sponsor a refugee student at this university.

The student, from an underdeveloped country, will be provided through the World University Service of Canada (WUSC). WUSC is the national chapter of an international organization which seeks to promote global understanding and international exchange programs and, at the same time, provide individuals with the opportunity to study abroad.

made possible by this October's referendum results, and disbursements at $181,600, SAC is left with a surplus of funds to the tune of $55,400.

Two other expenses, however, will reduce that surplus: the cost which was entailed operating the Student Administrative Council (SAC) and passed a motion to sponsor a refugee student at this university. Picture identification cards are out for this year

by Wendy Coomber

A motion which would have the budget of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) set aside for the purchase of student identification cards was turned down at the last SAC meeting.

George McMahon, Assistant Vice-President, Student Affairs, said the idea to include the student's picture with the ID card was brought up at a committee of Student Services.

McMahon explained that, at most universities, there is a showcase in which poetry, prose, art work and photography from the works submitted each year. Generally, Generation is geared to generating genius in these growing areas. First-time contributors are especially welcome to submit their creative works. Drop them off, anytime, in Room 2121 Windsor Hall North, Department of English. All submissions will be reviewed by a five-person editorial panel: Rosemary A. Besl, Dr. John Dinkelman, Bonnie Frase, Blaine Gervais and Tony Couture. Submissions will be returned if a S.A.A. is printed.

Generation magazine can be regarded as a kind of barometer, reflecting changes in artistic approaches to the reconciliation of form and content in the cultural arts, from year to year. It may be seen as a gauge for growing experimentation in literary and artistic expression.

Remember: less than two weeks remain before the December 10, 1980, deadline for submissions. Your support in this venture is sought now. Consult the Generation '81 flyer posted around campus for further details. Copies of recent issues of Generation magazine are available in the University Bookstore.

Final plea for help

by Rosemary A. Beslshuk

This may tend the way of countless editorials on sparsity. Well, I know the topic is tabbed, but don't stop reading this yet. You are precisely the person I want to address.

Nearly everyone has a talent. Those who deny it simply haven't discovered their particular talent yet. A talent is a special aptitude or gift in a certain field or occupation. It is a valued thing, especially if it delights or instructs.

Ideally, one's talent should be brought to the public's attention. If you have a talent for writing poetry or prose, or a talent for illustrating, there is a showcase in which you can display your particular talent, it's called Generation '81.
The principle of democracy is the right of choice, but also, and more important, it is the burden of choice — the responsibility of standing up and being counted.”

- H. Crislian O'Keary

OF$ should be penalized for powerplay

“Would you prefer to support this fanatic or this one?”

The conundrum we are faced with here runs throughout the paper story in this newspaper, entitled “Task Force report on student assistance: nothing new” which The Lance picked up from one of its brethren, the University of Toronto Varsity student newspaper.

The Varsity reported that the Ontario government’s submission to the federal-provincial Task Force on Student Assistance was virtually useless — at least insofar as the value judgment of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) goes. It is not known whether the U of T newspaper received a photocopy of the report from OFS, or that student organizations were able to send out the provincial brief to all its students’ council components for quick examination and comment, should OFS have the power to unilaterally condemn a government report in the name of all the students of Ontario?

This newspaper says “No”, OFS should not have such power — that it handled the comment across the province? This, of course, raises the question of OFS power in such respects, and seeks response to these “opinion leaders.” Nobody reads it, said they said, and it probably won’t be for long. The dog, cat or little old lady who could yell loudest and who could scatter the most litter will be the one that prevails.

What sadistic child should be without one?

It is well known that the U of T newspaper received a photocopy of the report from OFS, or that student organizations were able to send out the provincial brief to all its students’ councils across the province?” And, self-servingly (we ask), making it completely available to the student newspapers.

“Silent Night, Holy Night,

Toy's on sale,

And the price is just right...”

Yes, ladies and gents, that warm, festive charitable season is upon us again. When brotherhood runs rampant and the common denominator of all peoples is widely agreed on by advertisers trying to convince the children of the world that if they don’t receive this or that their parents never really cared for them at all. Case in point: the overly advertised (and priced) “retrack” set with the “added danger of the crash car”. Instead of the simple oval track, we all knew if they didn’t receive this or that their parents never really cared for them at all.

It takes a hell of a lot to get me mad, but there’s a group of students on this campus who manage to succeed every time. They’re the so-called “student writers” who, every year, produce a yearbook run by the students who are trying to make the university a better place to go to school, and, finally, to those who are sorrowfully lacking any concern for university problems and the other mild mannered students paying to use the same facilities which they get a kick out of destroying.

I’m unable to dream up an adequate excuse to explain why some students at this university have no motivation to do anything but sit around and criticize those people who aren’t sympathetic, disinterested and uncooperative.

This week I was saddened by this proud boast of apathetic campus barbarians on a visit to the library, which seems to be their headquarters. I was lucky enough to find a semi-quiet and functionally clean spot only to find myself bombarded with comments from one of the sinister groups of this noble band of warriors. They appeared to be members of the officer corps because they were all trying to amuse themselves, and everyone else within hearing distance, by seeing who could shout loudest and who could scatter the most litter on the roundabout.

I was close enough to hear their personal views and philosophies on a number of topics, among them: the teaching habits of professors, the consensus appeared to be that faculty members are professors, SAC, CJAM and Food Services don’t mind, and everyone else within hearing distance, by seeing who could shout loudest and who could scatter the most litter on the roundabout.

Concerning the teaching habits of professors, the consensus appeared to be that faculty members are professors, SAC, CJAM and Food Services don’t mind. Concerning the teaching habits of professors, the consensus appeared to be that faculty members are professors, SAC, CJAM and Food Services don’t mind.

The Lance is a waste of time and money, according to these “opinion leaders.” Nobody reads it, they said, and it probably won’t be for long. The dog, cat or little old lady who could yell loudest and who could scatter the most litter will be the one that prevails.

The very negative statements the OFS spokes- man made about the federal-provincial Task Force report do not necessarily constitute the consensus of the students’ councils of this province. How can they be when the councils have not seen the report and done their own analyses?

It must be remembered that the power of any organization does not come from the fact that it is, in title, an organization. Rather, the power of an organization comes from the fact that it is an amplified voice of many pitches. In blunter words, the behavoiur of the Ontario Federation of Students with regards to the comments about the provincial ministry’s report constitutes an arrogant encroachment upon the vocal rights of the individual councils which comprise the federation as a whole.

It is possible that the provincial ministry’s brief is as horrendously bad as the OFS spokes­ man contends. Operative word in that sentence: possible. That possibility will become a certainty when all the components of the federation have a chance to comment on the matter.

Until that time, it can only be said that OFS jumped the gun and should be smacked for its failure to act.

Councils across the province, including our SAC, should urge the censure of the OFS spokesman and the immediate delivery of copies of the report to their doorsteps.

If the member councils do not do so, they are condoning an irresponsible pseudo-representation of the feelings of this province’s students and a direct usurpation of individual council powers.
Dear Editor:

I would think that since CJAM is a student run, student funded organization, that we would not be supported by other student funded organizations. This isn’t the case.

The organization to which I refer is SAC’s Pub. Last Friday, November 21st, we featured Rev. Michael Brand, the host for the band "Pilot" which was playing in the pub at the time, as a guest DJ, from noon to 2:00 p.m. on CJAM. SAC’s, in its infinite wisdom, decided they preferred not to play the student run and funded radio station on that particular day, even though they were informed that Marc would be on the air.

For about a month now, it has been station policy that no CJAM staff member will ask for the station to be turned on in the pub because it was thought that we were the only ones asking for it. Since then, I have had many people come to me asking why the pub refuses to turn CJAM on even when they ask for it! The fact that the students have agreed to fund us is a statement that they want to hear CJAM. Why, then, is SAC’s going against an obvious mandate from the students? In the past two months, we have had to compete with the TV in the pub, the jukebox and now it’s the big four Detroit FM rock stations. What next?

I have only one question to ask: why, after the students have stated, by their vote, that they want to hear CJAM, is the pub so reluctant to give us their support? I would really like some answers for the students at this university as well as the staff here at CJAM.

Ad provides an option

Dear Editor:

I am appalled at the number of people on this campus who continue in the dated belief that women are passive, irresponsible, and easily lead.

Why? Presumably abortion is morally wrong, I guess. Reverend Michael Brand was giving us a lecture on the evils of abortion. But, essentially, I am afraid he missed the point.

Abortion is wrong. I understand, but why should women (or men) go for abortions? Before we discuss the effect (abortion), we should know why these unfortunate gentlemen who speak out against abortion could do a better job if they could speak out on topics such as what causes abortion, and most important, how to prevent having to go for an abortion.

Abortion from a humane perspective is not always bad. Japan reduced her birth rate from more than three per cent per annum before World War II to less than two per cent in less than ten years after WWII. They could do this mainly because their government legalized abortion. China, which has more than a billion people, is a serious country which has not only legalized abortion, but actively promotes it to a vast extent. It is not that the Chinese want abortion, per se, but the fact is that the choices are between bread and death.

Food Night gobbled up

Dear Editor:

The executive of the international Students’ Organization wishes firstly to thank all the nine clubs that participated in the recent International Food Night. Their contribution to the evening was monumental and in fact the idea of the event was their doing. The selection of succulent gourmet foods was the calibre of a Gordon Bleu chef.

We also thank the performers in the cultural part of the evening. We are fortunate to have such talented people in the clubs who shared with us in the cultural "break-persw" — Kastner.

Bhstachayya representing the India-Canada Association performed beautifully. The Caribbean singers lured us with their seductive song. These two presentations were a sample to showcase the many talents of international students; much more will be offered in International Night on February 7 at the cultural evening.

Lastly we thank the people who attended — it was a fantastic turnout! If you missed it — better luck next year!

The Executive of ISO.

Dear Editor:

About East Gym abortion clinic advertising in The Lance. Whether intentionally or not, The Lance, through its advertising policy, has chosen to condone, and even promote, profit-oriented means which treat the real and perceived misfortunes of others. Unlike organizations such as Birthright, the volunteers and staff of which distribute information that may assist people in resolving the problems involved in resolving the problems of abortion, in the case of unwanted pregnancy, in no sense an evil to play God with other people's lives, shall we?

I have yet to meet anyone who is "pro-abortion"; certainly it is by far the smallest percentage that would base such an important decision on such flimsy material, women have minds. The deliberation involved in resolving the problems faced due to unwanted pregnancy are much more extensive than most of these letter-writers seem to believe, and the simple possession of information as to how to obtain an abortion, in the case of unwanted pregnancy, in no sense an evil to distribute information that may be helpful to one faced with a crisis. Personally, I am not at all flattered by the attitudes of the many whose letters were published in last week's Mail Call. On Wednesday, November 26, Dr. Mark MacGuigan, Minister of External Affairs, spoke to a group of 250 people about Canada's proposed constitution — specifically the Bill of Rights.

During the presentation, MacGuigan hit into this controversial subject by relating the history of attempts to establish the bill itself. According to MacGuigan, the prospect of initiating the Bill of Rights has been longstanding, and Canada has finally reached an era which is ready for change.

MacGuigan added that the inclusion of the Bill of Rights in the constitution would wash away much of the confusion surrounding provincial interest. Though he was vague regarding the details of the new constitution, MacGuigan said the inclusion of the Bill of Rights and the patriation of the constitution as a whole, will be an "enormous act of nation building."

From his viewpoint, the new constitution would wash away much of the confusion surrounding provincial interest. Though he was vague regarding the details of the new constitution, MacGuigan said the inclusion of the Bill of Rights and the patriation of the constitution as a whole, will be an "enormous act of nation building.

During the presentation, MacGuigan launched into this constitutional clauses are currently under a parliament committee review.

To compensate for his vagueness, MacGuigan suggested that a "more in depth" discussion of specific clauses could be held during a period of questions and answers.

In the questioning period, MacGuigan was asked to explain why there was a three-year waiting period after the application of non-discrimination rights. MacGuigan replied (as does the constitution) that three years were needed "in order to permit parliament and the provincial legislatures to make consequential amendments to other legislation."

Another member of the audience asked MacGuigan why Canada had such a "modest list of protections", especially regarding the protection on grounds of sexual orientation. MacGuigan replied there was insufficient public consensus on the subject. He added that although there have been many Ontario changes, this type of question cannot have a place in the constitution until there is a majority of public agreement. A few nationalists in the crowd asked why Canadians could not obtain the constitution without the British parliament. In other words, why can't Canada re-run the Declaration of Independence? MacGuigan explained the absence of action is a direct result of the Canadian tradition of being "law-abiding".

According to the minister, by excluding the British parliament, Canada would detract from her independence or cause a "gap in legal order".

MacGuigan was also questioned on issues relating to the provincial governments. In general his comments illustrated that the provinces did not want to bar gain, but concentrated solely on their individual interests.

Finally, MacGuigan responded to the absence of the "concessions" made to the NDP within the constitution. The Minister of External Affairs stated there were no specific arrangements on the nature of the "concessions", but these would be up for debate.

In a final note, MacGuigan told his audience that once the text of the constitution was finalized it would be forwarded to Britain.

Main library should be given an overhaul soon

by Laurel Brandt

Near the top of the agenda for the December Senate meeting is a report by Albert V. Mate, University Librarian, about conditions and proposed changes in the library. Included in the report are six proposals dealing with:

1. developing an automated on-line system for acquisitions, cataloguing and circulation;
2. increasing the staff from 92 to 100;
3. bringing the library budget under the library administration's control, or fixing the monograph and serials budgets three months before the budget year begins, and not allowing them to increase by more than two percent after three months;
4. using both the main and west buildings for library purposes, and controlling the collection's physical size;
5. re-arranging the collection into a more sensible order, and improving arrangement of public reading and staff work areas;
6. re-organizing library department.

The library has not kept up with advancements in automatic technology, said Mate. The equipment for the automated circulation system is obsolete, and the present ordering system is manually based.

Other Ontario university libraries with better systems can process materials more quickly and serve users better with less staff. The staff of the Leddy Library is 92, which Mr. Mate thinks is too small. He feels a staff of 100, with some departmental re-organization, would provide greater efficiency.

He also wants to re-arrange the collection, using both buildings completely, as originally envisaged by the planners. In this way, the confusion between the third floors of the main and west buildings could be eliminated.

In Mr. Mate's view, the biggest hindrance to achieving these goals is money. In order to balance the budget, the staff has been cut 29 percent since 1972. Tight staffing has led to a dearth of middle and long-range planning because of the need in day-to-day operations.

Yet while the staff has shrunken, inflation has pushed salaries up 81 percent since 1972. Inflation has also increased the prices of serials and monographs, while the acquisitions budget has increased only 26 percent.

The present budgeting system has monograph acquisitions in the hands of the various faculty deans, and the serials acquisitions the responsibility of the library staff.

This system has caused the problems which culminated in the 1979-80 fiscal year when the library had to cancel many orders, and re-order them when funds were found late in the year.

Mr. Mate feels the library administration, under a faculty or Senate review committee, should control the budget. This is the system most common in Ontario university libraries. The report was not all negative. A task force has recommended the library acquire a GRAC circulation system, which is used at many other libraries in the province. A new task force has been formed to look into the other elements of a fully automated on-line system.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Salad fanatic Scott McCulloch hopped around town recently (like a bunny) in quest of the perfect combination of plant leaves and complimentary toppings. The following review is what he found and you might own at the salad bars of some of Windsor’s restaurants.

We say right (find) because salad bars have almost daily ups and downs because of produce availability and quality, especially now that our country is, in large part, depending on airlifted veggie shipments from south of the border.

This, then, is one man’s trek and report...

A few years ago, nobody had heard of a salad bar. Now it seems that every other restaurant you eat in has got one.

Here then, is an evaluation of a number of salad bars in different restaurants in Windsor. Unless stated otherwise, assume they all include croutons and bacon bits, and the “big four” dressings – French, Thousand Island, oil and vinegar, and Blue cheese.

Rating system: *poor *fair *good *excellent

Steak N’ Burger – Devilleshire Mall, 969-4414

The bacon bit container was empty when I visited the University Mall location, and was never refilled.

The rusty condition of the lettuce made it obvious that it had not been replenished for some time either, at least not with lettuce that could be called fresh.

As is the case with most salad bars, the Steak N’ Burger tomato wedges are too big. They’re also rather green around the seeds. The cucumbers are much too big and they’re not the homemade variety found in some restaurants. They look as if they were cut at random in husks and crooked strips from a large block of ice.

The carrot slices don’t appear to have been properly peeled and the green peppers are both too big and too rusty.

Red and yellow peppers, which are becoming a popular item at salad bars, are included, 1, personally, find them too hot.

Acceptable pickled beets, bean salad, kidney beans, raw beet shavings, chick peas, cream corn and spinach round out the bill.

$1.99 on its own, 99¢ with a meal. Included with most entrees. Rating: *1/4

Rib O’ Beef – Devilleshire Mall, 966-3269

There’s little difference between Rib O’ Beef and Steak N’ Burger, both of which are operated by Winco, whoever they are. Prices are higher at the former and Rib O’ Beef pickled beets have ridges on them. There’s also long pickles, bean sprouts, onions and partially peeled cucumber slices, but no creamed corn.

$2.50 as a meal, $2.75 with soup, $2.50 as a meal, $2.75 with soup, $2.45 as a meal, $1.99 on its own, $1.50 with soup, included with any entrees. Rating: *1/2

Ponderosa – 1760 Huron Church Road, 252-0331 (visited here)

2516 Ouellette, 966-4506

6675 Tecumseh East, 948-5561

The lettuce is much crisper and fresher here than at Rib O’ Beef or Steak N’ Burger, but the tomato wedges are still much too large, though they’re so mushy they tend not to stay in one piece anyway.

The cucumbers and carrots are sliced to a nice thinness here, but the carrots aren’t properly peeled first. The radishes look even dirtier. The green peppers are a bit long, but more manageable than when in rings. Ridged pickled beets are here too, but rather than being in round slices, are in little strips resembling French fries.

The regular onions are sliced in a way that makes them easy to eat and there long green onions are available as well, along with some peculiar looking celery slices.

There’s no real coleslaw or cabbage salad, though one tub of cut-up cabbage looks like it’s just waiting to be made into a salad.

All the other standard items are included (chick peas, etc.) and are fine. There’s also pineapple cheese and one item found at no other salad bar in Windsor – vinegar.

The bed of ice are what look like a lot of cabbage leaves. The management should have quit while it was ahead. Instead, a decorative basket of soups and other vegetables, also containing brown-tinged tomatoes, radishes and green peppers is there too. $2.39 on its own. Included with all entrees except those on kid’s menu (69¢ if a kid wants it with his meal). Rating: *1/2

Veto’s – 1870 Huron Church Road, 253-1194 (visited here)

3070 Dougall Road, 966-3382

3383 Tecumseh East, 945-2244

The Vetere salad bar has nothing spectacular, but its repertoire of the usual items is, for the most part, well prepared. The tomatoes are too mushy, though a good size, and the carrots are so thinly sliced you can’t tell whether they’ve been peeled or not. Mushrooms, which are often, but not always found at salad bars, are finely chopped. The green peppers are in fat chunks. Oddly enough, there are no regular onions, but there are Spanish ones.

There’s also Parmesan cheese and everything rests in a bed of – guess what? Ice. $2.45 as a meal, $1.49 with a meal. Not included with any entrees. Rating: **

WULV’S – 1750 Huron Church Road, 228-2326

A pleasant surprise, I expected little more than lettuce, tomatoes, spinach, bacon bits, and dressings. All of these are here, along with radishes, beets, onions (a bit long), green peppers, carrots (usually sliced but not well peeled – why doesn’t anybody peel their carrots?), cottage cheese (a real surprise) and even a fruit salad (the green grapes were a little funny looking, though).

The tomatoes are only slightly too big, and the radishes have a nice crunchy flavour. (well, it’s not nice if you don’t like cheese, I guess). Unfortunately, you’re expected to dish them up with one of those two-armed serving devices.

The chicken is refreshingly different. It’s not too soggy coleslaw; who would like to make like Bugs Bunny, except in a big glass bowl

The olives have pits and the olive oil is fresh, though the apple sauce is a bit thick.

The greens are the last item, expected to dish them up with the commercial variety to cumber someone.

The usual bed of ice.

Buns or bread aren’t for sale, though you will bring a basket of them with your meal. $3.25 as a meal, included with the $4.95 lunch buffet.

Dom’s – 3217 Sandwich, 259-4161

A salad bar with no tomato wedges.

The lettuce here is a good, well mixed blend of the usual, with a few russet spooky. The pickled beets are nice.

The radishes, green onion, celery, pickled cucumbers and apples are available separately.

Sliced pickles, cheese sticks, celery sticks, green beans and the blue cheese are available.

As with a meal, included in a meal at Hacienda is a roll and two and a half breadsticks (that's right two and a half) brought to your table. A basket of crackers and a tray of cheese, black olives and sliced pickles are brought to your table. You won't regret it.

$3.95 as a meal. $1.45 with any meal. Included with all dinners, including one lone roll and two and a half breadsticks.

Hacienda — 2105 Ouellette, 245-2543

The biggest, most complete and best salad bar in Windsor. Two counters are needed for all the items. One has a huge bowl of lettuce and a similar sized one of salad with a container of watermelon to one side. There may be a couple of other items on that side, but most are found in the tubs sunk in the counter on the opposite wall.

Almost everything mentioned in this feature so far is here, with the exception of raisins and some of salads made up of different salad bar items, such as Hacienda's tomato, cucumber, olive and onion salad. Even the little items are here! There are a couple of those combinations salad bars here too, as well as a number of fruit salads, sliced fruit in juice, orange slices, pineapple wedges and rings, and marinated plums.

The green pepper would be easier to eat if it wasn't in those big rings, and the crostini, are of the big homemade variety. They are flavourful. The dressings are labelled here too and include garlic and "Green Goddess".

$3.95 as a meal. Included with all dinners and the necessities frequent refill.

$2.49 as a meal, $1.29 with a meal. Not included with all meals, but on Wednesdays you can get spaghetti and salad bar for half price — $2.29. Rating: ••

The Exchange — 423 Ouellette, 258-8030

Ah! A touch of class! While the bar itself is brightly lit, it's found in a dark corner. Tubs are sunk in a counter that is immaculately kept. I never saw any radishes floating in the dressing, or crostini strewn about when I was there.

Like at Aldo's, it's hard to find tomatoes in the crisp, fresh, tossed salad bowl, but those found are a good size. The lettuce is generally a pretty good size too. Tomato wedges in a separate tub are extremely runchy looking, but who cares? Delicious cherry tomatoes are available!

Swilly, there are no carrot slices or stalks (there are some curls in the lettuce), no mushrooms, green peppers or spinach. (I don't care about this last item, but a friend of mine thinks it's indispensable. No, it's not Popeye.)

All the other traditional items are offered, along with some rarities. Crabapples, sesame seeds, large raisins (unfortunately containing pits, though the olives do not), and corn in what look like little cobs, but can be eaten whole. Great! Sliced mushrooms are available too, but are less tangy than the usual creamed variety. Don't forget to sample the cottage cheese and the excellent potato and macaroni salads.

In addition to the big four dressings, there's a superb garlic dressing and a unique (for me anyway), purple one called "Sweet Ranch Dressing". It's tremendous. The fact that the dressing tubs are labelled is tremendous in itself. I once mistook blue cheese for Italian and didn't discover it until I'd covered my salad with it. Yikes!!! Apologies to all blue cheese lovers. I like all other kinds of cheese including parmesan, which is also found at the Exchange.

Order the salad bar by itself and you get your choice of French roll and butter or corn bread with butter and honey. Be adventurous and go for the corn bread. You won't regret it.

Milano's — 1520 Tecumseh East, 254-1525

It's even classier and more atmospheric than the Exchange, downward elegant in fact, but there's an awfully limited selection. And get this — another salad bar with no tomatoes!

What's here is good. The lettuce size is the best in town. Potato salad, cottage cheese, colelaw, chick peas, cucumber, (some too thick, others just right), celery, onions, and a tray of olives, radishes, and pickles are present, but that's about it, except for the four dressings, bacon bits and crostini. The latter are the large homemade type, smaller than at Aldo's or the Hacienda, but less flavourful as well.

Oh, there is a very nice pate too, and crackers and bread are brought to your table.

The salads sit in huge ornate lettuce lined bowls on a table with a burgundy coloured tablecloth and candles.

Borden's Place for Steaks — 461 Wyandotte East, 254-8131

Even fewer items than Milano's! There are tomatoes (too big), but no crostini! Dark and light bread are available, though; maybe you're expected to make your own crostini (actually it's quite fresh).

Good sized lettuce, macaroni salad, coleslaw, cottage cheese, beets, chick peas, two thick cucumbers, the usual dressings plus creamy Italian, and bacon bits (of course), are the only other items. It all sits on the old you-know-what.

Ambassador Restaurant— 1590 Huron Church Road, 258-5921

Believe it or not, fewer items still. Quality is not as high, though. The tossed salad of lettuce, radishes, and very little tomato, is about the runniest and rustiest I've ever seen.

The only other items present are pickled beets, black olives, macaroni salad, potato salad, ambrosia (a semi-sweet dish of cottage cheese, marshmallow and fruit, in this case pineapple and cherries. Ambassador's is a bit runny) and the big four dressings. No crostini, no bacon bits, no parmesan cheese.

Everything sits not on a bed of ice, but in a pool of water too. The bowls float around when you try to dish food out of them. Maybe if you arrive earlier in the day there is less water and more ice. Why don't they put in more ice? Can't they pay the water bill?

I was there alone and one lone roll and two and a half breadsticks (that's right two and a half) were brought to my table in a basket. The roll was very good size. The lettuce is generally a pretty good size

Honour and dignity before anything else

Members of Parliament may not have all the answers for our country, but they do have one thing going for them: a quick sense of humour and all the wittiest lines.

Many social science students are familiar with Hansard, the official record of the House of Commons in Ottawa. The House uses a few slangy demure and staid terms used behind the doors of Parliament which the everyday person would never hear... until now.

The following is a selection of the more humourous and entertaining quotations from some of our distinguished Members of Parliament during the past year.

Preceding the recent announcement of closure (ending of debate) over the constitution, John Crosbie declared, "Two hundred and thirty-one members of the House, give or take a few, have not had a chance to speak in this debate. It took God six days to make this world. It takes the Prime Minister only 24 hours to debate the remake of Canada."

Hon. Marc Lalonde:... it is a lack of knowledge on my part that I regret.

Mr. Neilson: So what's new.

Mr. Nystrom:... in fact, on this issue and other issues, that party has taken more positions than the very famous Xaviera Hollander.

On December 13, 1979 there was a vote of non-confidence for the Conservatives and they were consequently defeated by the Liberals the following year. This excerpt came in April 1980 between a Liberal and a Conservative.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen:... the honourable member has a real fascination for mice; I would describe him as the mouse which roared on the night of Dec. 13, and whose roar turned into a whimper on the night of Dec. 13.

Mr. Crosbie: There is nothing less intimidating than a fang less mouse... the old bite has gone.

Mr. Crosbie: (referring to Allan MacEachen) He has been in the House for donkey's years, and he is as slippery as a cod tongue in a barrel of cod livers.

Mr. Kempling: Someone goes into business, mortgaging his house, his cottage, his car, his wife... everything.

Hon. Member: His mother-in-law?

Mr. Kempling: His mother-in-law...

Mr. Baker: How much would he get for his mother-in-law?

Mr. King: I too have a background in agriculture. Mr. Pepin: It doesn't show.

Mr. King: I have an emotional as well as a practical attachment to the land. I was raised on a fruit farm.

Mr. Chenier: Is that why you called me "my dear"?

Mr. Young: During the election campaign, Ed Broadbent introduced a new deal for pensioners.

Some Hon. Members: Ed who?

An Hon. Member: He just has a big mouth that is all.

Mr. Nielen: The only time he opens his mouth is to change feet.

Mr. Crobie: You can only deduct interest on your own main home, the home in which you live with your spouse or whoever you live with.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

An Hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Crobie: Now we hear the moralists from the NDP perking up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Crobie: They are paying attention now because they think there is something really exciting coming.

An Hon. Member: Speak up, Dunbo, in the back seat over there.

Mr. Crobie: (presumably referring to Mr. Trudeau): Yes, where's old disco daddy? Our leader may like disco but he is usually on the job. He is no sugar daddy or disco daddy.

An Hon. Member. You have been doing it for 16 years.

Mr. Nystrom: Why did you do it, John?

Mr. Evans: I am now, remember.

Mr. Nystrom: We have a virgin speaking.

Mr. Evans: That is true, but sometimes words of wisdom come from the mouths of virgins.

December 3/5 the Assump­

Caravan products are hand­

What you might find offered are baskets, wall hangings, toys, jewelry boxes, drums, leather objects, and batik and alpaca products.

WUSC, the World University Service of Canada is partly responsible for this event, along with the World University Centre, 1010 Howard Avenue.

The World University Service of Canada involves faculty and students on many campuses across the country in such programs as its student refugee sponsorships and its interna­tional seminars. In fact, our own Students' Administrative Council passed a motion at their last meeting to sponsor a re­

The Third World Resource Centre of Windsor is a non­ profit organization providing the community with a variety of educational materials, including audio-visuals, as well as educational programs on international and national development.

World hunger, disarmament, human rights, foreign aid, and unemployment are among the issues that are addressed in its resources and in its programs.

An annual high school human rights forum is also offered to students in Windsor and Essex public and separate secondary schools.

THE CINEMA CRITIC

MIDDLE AGE CRAZY

by Rosemary Conimso

The comedy “10” seems to have started a new movie genre about male monopause. Middle Age Crazy follows this recent trend. Bobby Lee Burnett (Bruce Dem), is a rich and successful contractor who, after reaching 40, is now caught in a change of life dilemma. His next four years were spent playing the clubs in Port Huron. Now, he has switched sides of the border and performs almost exclusively to Canadian audiences.

“The Canadian audiences are more receptive to a solo performer,” notes Gerry Napoleon Erickson’s friend since high school. “The American crowd would much rather hear a loud rock band.”

With a repertoire of over three hundred songs “and at least two hundred others I have forgotten,” Cliff Erickson can adapt his music to any crowd he is playing for. “I even have grandparents come to the show.”

The spirit surrounding Erickson’s concerts sometimes presents Erickson with a problem. “I sometimes fight to control the crowd. If it looks like things could get out of hand, I slow the pace right down.”

You can expect to hear any song from the guitarist of Cliff E. Erickson. Of course he can’t play songs which obviously depend on a multitude of instruments, but anything reasonable, he’ll attempt. On Tuesday evening, some Chemical Engineering students complained about the lack of flute Springsteen material. Sure enough, Erickson has promised that next time he visits the campus Springsteen will be among his repertoire.

Erickson does have higher aspirations for his music. He is in the process of releasing a single, “You Are My Friend,” which he hopes to make available at Universities in the new year.

“Heard looking for that recording contract” laments Erickson. “It would be nice to be noticed.”

With both piano and guitar ability. Cliff Erickson rates himself a good musician. I agree, but I really don’t think it would matter to his performance. Playing long sets with short breaks, the audience appreciates the sincerity of his act.

Erickson says he would jump at the chance to tour with a big name performer...so if you’re out there Harry C. this may be your chance to find a suitable opening act.

Punk off? That fact was fiction by Martin Deek

Last Friday night for a concert, imaginatively titled "Punk Off," was put on under the auspices of the Management Club. These boys seem to have learned their marketing lessons well. The music and spectacle were about the farthest thing from punk imaginable.

Detroit's Attic Theatre

by John Liddle

Something - I'm not quite sure exactly what - is alive and kicking in contemporary theatre. I'm referring specifically to the punk opera, "A Evening At The Paradise," which is currently playing at midnight on Fridays and Saturdays at Detroit's Attic Theatre.

To make a comparison to National Lampoon's "Lem­mings" would be an insult, not only to the actors but to anyone who knows better. "A Evening at the Paradise" is a strikingly original production. How can I describe a play that combines the intimacy of the theatre with the energy of a fast band? It can't help but to draw you in.

The play's subtitle, "A New Wave Love Story" aptly describes the plot. It's a love triangle. Three exceedingly different characters, no doubt the kind that you'd find in any new wave bar, all strive for the hand of gorgeous "Mo" the owner of the Paradise. They are: Jack, an aspiring punk off singer; Porterhouse, a snotty, fably rich "od," and a common bouncer.

One band, The Enemies, lived up to the advertising. The band features a seemingly-hacked lead singer, a buoyant bassist, a simple old-fashioned steady drummer and two guitarists: one a Johnny Thunders imita­tor and the other a rather sedate fellow. They played fast, loud and raw - just great, to my ears. The only problem seems to that their covers outnumber their originals. Speaking of covers, The Enemies performed "Secret Agent Man," "Poodle Party" (by the Dickies), "C' mon Everybody," a passable rendition of "I Felt Like I Needed Love" (Johnny Thunders, not Tom Petty's) songs.

The plot is not insignificant either. The "Father," a fast talking alcoholic, says he's referring specifically to the kind that you'd find in any contemporary piece of drama. He to Hecuba, He to Hecuba, He to Hecuba, He to Hecuba.

The music is dynamic, adding immediately to the show's "aura." Who ever heard of new wave without music? And in the non-script confines of the script it becomes a natural combination. All six characters sing. The songs are all fast energetic originals, usually ending a scene.

The first song, delivered by Jack, asks facetiously "Am I Too Punk For You?" It captures the audience's attention, setting a comic tone for the play. The opening scene, indeed the entire play, is extremely kinetic. It moves, and when it moves, you move. The choreography is in no less than superb. "A Night at the Paradise" isn't the sort of play that lends itself to any heavy, meditative socio-psychological interpretations. It is a skillful, subtle, satire after stripping away all of the tom-doolery, the statteck, and near farcical actions.

However, there's no time for any intellectual heavy-handedness here, it's strict entertain­ment. If you leave and your sides aren't aching from laughing so much then you just don't understand what humour is. Author, producer and direc­tor, Johnathan Round, who also plays the enigmatic "Father" has scripted an extremely contemporary piece of drama. "The American Dream" undergoes a metemepiphonism; it becomes, as it should, "American Wave Dream." Get your own punk bar, and go from there. This, considering the plight of these so nones were written with feeling, yet they'd delivered with all the feeling of frozen fish!

Another point: the Fact came equipped with roadie/bouncers who informed anyone who dared that "The band would appreciate it if you didn't throw things at them." These toughies even went so far as to physically threaten any who dared to act in such a displeasing manner. All I can say is: "If you can't stand the heat (or the paper cups), get out of the kitchen!"

Once The Fact gracefully split, we were subjected to a different kind of horror - Via Satellite, a band from Detroit. Now, it would be OK to go to see them supporting some other band at a bar some night but headlighting a "Punk" concert??? Windsor promoters seem to have an unhealthy taste for Detroit bands with "new wave" names. "If I had her hair," "That thing and new wave cover bands in general is that they did do a couple token punk songs - "Best on the Beat" and "Anarchy in the UK." Chances are these poseurs don't have the slightest idea what Anarchy means, or what it could mean.

What offends me most about The Punks and new wave covers in general is that these songs were written with feeling, yet they'd delivered with all the feeling of frozen fish!

JOHN COUGAR
NOTHIN' MATTERS AND WHAT IF IT DID
by John Doyle

I had hoped street rock was back.
John Cougar's first album showed unique talent and a sur-13pise approach. All I could do for a debut, featuring such hits as "I Need a Lover" and "The Great Merchant."

Alas, I cannot say the same about Cougar's latest effort. It appears that somewhere along the line he lost that magic combination of driving rock and rough "Say what he thinks". The result is a record that could only be called fair.

"Cold Town" and "Cheap Shot" are these being "Hot Night In A 60's Cove¬rs - Beatles, Stones", but the magic continues with "S.hoot to Thrill", which is the winner. All I can do now is thinking of Bon Scott when they wrote this song?

"You're only young, but you're gonna die". The tribute to Scott continues with "Till the Living is Done". No admission.

Bon Scott, lead singer of A/C/DC died last year of alcohol poisoning. "Have a Drink on Me", and "Shake a Leg". The second side begins with "Hell's Bells". Were they fitting in nicely. There are no slow ballads on the album, and as AC/DC I don't imagine there will be.

The tribute to Scott continues with "Shoot to Thrill". "You're guilty, you're evil, I'm getting loose from the noose", and "Punk Off" it was billed as. The between-set music was likewise atrocious. Such "punk" hits as the Rocky Horror show track and AC/DC were featured. The only lapse in judgment was when they played a Sex Pistols and a Buzzcocks tune.

The evening certainly wasn't the "Punk Off" it was billed to be.

Meanwhile, Commerce 'A' licked the 69'ers to claim a share of first place and hand the 69'ers their first loss of the season.

In B League action, the Seamen came up with their first point of the season in a 4-4 tie with Geography. The Mac Hall Stars and the Huron Red Wings also picked up their first points in a 1-1 tie.

Lancerettes split
by Chris Legebow
The Lancerette volleyball team defeated Guelph Gryphons in Guelph last weekend, 7-15, 15-6, 15-3 and 15-2. The play was smooth and well-controlled and the attack was hard and well-placed. Windsor had full control of the play and was confident in their style.

Tuesday night, Windsor defeated Laurier on home ground, 15-10, 15-11, 15-8. Led by the consistent attack of Monique Pomerleau, Cherene Morgan and several of the rookies, Windsor handled the Waterloo team with few problems.

Coach Jean Brien felt it was the determination and extra push of the rookies that put Windsor at the advantage. Windsor's record is now 5-3 in regular play.

The Lancerettes will play their last match before the winter break away to Western Saturday.

South Shore Books cordially invites you to a reading and autographing party.

Hanging upside down in not always the warmest of water, practicing figures, is not the most pleasant task in the world. Basketball Women only mortal

The basketball Lancerettes, after changing into the season with three straight wins, have now twice been proved mortal.

Windsor dropped its second game in a row Wednesday night, falling to the McMaster Marauders, 58-46. Their record now stands at 3-2 and two league games remain before the Christmas break.

The Marauders now sit atop Tier II with a perfect 4-0 record. Roberts Smith and Pam Johnson shared scoring honors with 12 points each. Roberts added 15 rebounds in the losing effort.

The Lancerettes had a shaky start and were unable to use their defense. Moving. By the intermission they were down by 15.

Windsor played a much more aggressive second half and made several comeback charges, but the closest they could come was within six points of McMaster.

The team will travel to Kitchener-Waterloo Saturday to meet the Laurier Golden Hawks.

Weekend Notes

The basketball Lancerettes split a pair of games in Ottawa last weekend, beating Carleton 76-51 Friday and losing to the University of Ottawa 76-54 Saturday.

The Lancerettes struggled in the victory over the Rams as they held only a slim four-point lead, 32-28, at halftime before taking control in the second stanza.

Kirk Kelly and Roberts Smith led the scoring race with 12 points each while Pam Johnson topped the rebounding department with nine.

"This loss means we'll have to work extra hard to come back and prove ourselves," said coach Sue Swain. "The trip to Ottawa was a long one and it's necessary for the athletes to learn to play well even under these adverse conditions.

On Saturday, Windsor was not quite as fortunate against the Gee-Gees. The Lancerettes trailed by only 10 at the half and with three minutes remaining it was down to eight, but the Gee-Gees outscored Windsor, scoring numerous uncontested baskets to run away with the game.

The loss was a great disappointment as Ottawa was unofficially ranked behind McMaster and Windsor.

As a team we are still learning what is possible through mental concentration and positive thinking. The talent is there, we need only develop the confidence to use it," said coach Smith.

Roberts Smith was high scorer with 18 points with Theresa McGee adding 15.

It was a different story Tuesday as the Lancers entered a game with a Titan team they probably could have beaten on a good day. The U. of D. was missing two starting forwards from injury, but Windsor was flat from the game the night before and the tough pre-season schedule.

The Lancers stuck close for the first 15 minutes of the game with Korosec cleaning the defensive boards and the team capitalizing on most of their free throw attempts (11 of 19 in first half) against the rough Titan defense. But Detroit was just too quick for the sluggish Windsor team and by halftime they had rolled to a 49-31 lead.

The trend continued after the break as the Lancers could hit only 35 percent of their field goals and 65 percent of their free shots.

"Free shots are a sore spot with me," confirmed Grabsowski. "We have to work on that. But we did a lot of good things out there. We were rebounding well and we took more shots.

"If we only had Davis out of the game, we were right in it."

by Steve Rice

The basketball Lancers head into this weekend's tournament at Shaw College of Detroit with their first big "W" of the season.

Windsor stands 0-7 in exhibition play following back-to-back losses to the University of Michigan, a 103-48 humiliating Monday, and the University of Detroit, a disappointing 94-72 loss Tuesday.

Stan Korosec led the scoring for Windsor against Michigan with 11 points. Marty Bodnar led the Wolves with 16 as all but one Michigan player got on the sheet.

In Tuesday's game, Korosec again led the way with 26 points and 15 rebounds. Jerry Davis of the Titans hit 17 of 22 shots from the floor for 35 points.

The offensive attack was uncommonly slow and deliberate for a Lancer team. Windsor was commonly slow and deliberate for 35 points.

The score at halftime was 45-20 for Michigan.

"We weren't bad in the first half," remarked coach Nick Grabsowski. "It was the second half that bothered the heck out of me. We were getting the open shot, but we weren't taking it. I think it's the first time we didn't go inside all year."

"Of course I was hoping to not let them hit 100, but they did it for the third year in a row. But then, the last two years it's been a lot more than that so our defense has improved."

True enough, the defense did do its best to hold the Titans. Windsor didn't go inside all year.

"This loss means we'll have to work extra hard to come back and prove ourselves," said coach Sue Swain. "The trip to Ottawa was a long one and it's necessary for the athletes to learn to play well even under these adverse conditions.

The hockey Lancers finally gave statistical proof last weekend that they are a better team than last year.

Windsor took wins from Ryerson Sunday, 9-5, and Brock Saturday, 3-2, to up their season record to 5-5. That's already two more wins than the team probably could have beaten on a good day. The U. of D. was missing two starting forwards from injury, but Windsor was flat from the game the night before and the tough pre-season schedule.

Cassano announces “internal audit”

by Wendy Coomber

The university was undergoing a departmental physical examination for the next two weeks under the scrutiny of Dr. Paul Cassano, Vice-President-Academic, and the Senate’s Academic Planning Committee.

Dr. John Sullivan, interim Dean of Arts and member of the Planning Committee, said one of the main reasons behind this “introspective audit” is “you (the university) have to know who you are, what your strengths and weaknesses are.” He said there had been various initiatives toward university planning in the past on this level but nothing had ever come of them. However, there were small studies conducted quite often inside different areas of the academic programs.

For instance, the Academic Committee on Academic Planning, a subgroup of the Canadian Council of Universities, conducts an appraisal of each graduate program in order to judge the program’s merits.

Inside the university, the Faculty of Social Science is carrying out its own internal study this fall, according to Dean Phillips, because the faculty has a two-year calendar. The faculty personnel has the space time for such a study this year where, in other years, they are usually occupied with course changes and other related work. This report will be forwarded to the faculty executive committee.

While Dean Conrad Gravenor of Science and Mathematics lauded the audit as “something that perhaps is overdue,” and as being valuable for departments to know where they are, Dean Cameron McNltts of Engineering also agreed generally with this but added another reason for the audit. Windsor didn’t do an awful. good job at the June hearings (of the Ontario Council on University Affairs - OCUA) last year.”

McNltts thought perhaps, Dr. Cassano would like to present a better image of our university at this year’s hearings. He also added that it was important for the university to take a serious look at what it was doing academically.

“The chief purpose is to foster a new perspective on ourselves from a depth and breadth not otherwise possible from our current data base” said Cassano’s “audit” memorandum to the faculty and department heads.

On this it read, “One of government’s last recent signals is that the pressure for ‘system rationalization’, heretofore aimed at graduate programs, will continue to build until all undergraduate programs are similarly affected.”

System rationalization, according to OCUA, is the cooperation at the undergraduate level between Ontario universities to cut down on program duplication.

Dean Sullivan felt the audit would provide a basis for “rational planning for the future.” He concluded by saying, because of the various constraints faced upon the university, it didn’t plan in its future carefully now it might waste what it already has.

The following is the verbatim Report of the Student Administrative Council (SAC) Committee investigating the Internal Difficulties and Disagreements of the SAC Executive (see editorial, page 4).

Committee Members: Kevin Sisk, Jay Smith, Ken Roberts, Chairman

The purpose of this Committee was to investigate the internal difficulties and disagreements of the Students’ Administrative Council Executive. The Committee was responsible for talking to each member of that Executive in order to determine the cause and extent of these difficulties. The Committee was to submit a written report which would include any resolutions which the Committee wished to suggest concerning this matter.

The procedure that the Committee utilized was to first examine the SAC By-Laws concerning the roles, duties and responsibilities of the Executive members. The Committee then interviewed each member of the Cabinet individually, and the SAC office secretaries collectively. This was to ensure confidentiality and impartiality in the interviewing, in that no member was informed of the report of any other member. Each interview was similarly structured to make certain that all members were given equal and ample opportunity to respond to corresponding issues. An Executive group meeting was then conducted to openly discuss common concerns and observations.

IT WAS THE FINDING OF THIS COMMITTEE that internal strife between SAC Executives has not been a reflection of the ability of its members to provide expected services to the students of the University of Windsor. It was found that all of the Executive have succeeded in fulfilling their duties, there being no evidence to indicate any areas that would constitute inability to render planned roles, obligations or responsibilities. It was found that all of the Executive Members have contributed to the success of the Corporation.

There exists definite evidence to indicate that poor communication within the Executive has led to tension, especially concerning the perceived intent of individual and collective undertakings. The roles and expectations of the Executive has not been clearly understood amongst themselves.

There has been an inability to attune the External Affairs position to the satisfaction of the President of the Corporation or the External Affairs Commissioner. Resultingly, an overlap of services has occurred, which has led to irreconcilable differences regarding the functions of that office.

The involvement of the other Commissions in the Internal strife was peripheral. The Commissions were able to fulfill their roles without undue complaints or damaging involvements. This was attributed largely to the existence of clearly written and defined job descriptions.

It has been determined that the Vice-President-Finance has occasionally demonstrated a lack of concern with the President of SAC in a specific manner. While the job was being done, the procedures utilized were not completely appropriate.

The Vice-President-Administration has vital experience and knowledge necessary to effectively support the Presidential position. There has been an occasion, a failure to demonstrate respect for the President. The President, despite diligent effort and good intentions, has experienced difficulties due to misperceptions of the scope and delegation of his authority.

This is a result of having on occasion the inability to interpret, consider and apply the contributions of others in corporate decision-making.

It is the belief of this Committee that these serious communication problems have not affected services to students, but has led to internal tension at the SAC Executive level. The Committee has shown the need to repute the overall productivity of SAC. Even more can be accomplished in SAC if this is resolved.

Stemming from the findings of this Committee, the following RECOMMENDATIONS TO RESOLVE THE ISSUES are presented.

1. That the President take measures to reconcile his authoritative stance concerning the stated and implied roles of the Executive.

2. That the CAB resolve their problems as part of the university’s contribution to the overall productivity of SAC.

3. That the SAC Committee finds lack of communication

Students here always the last to know

by E.P. Chant and

Canadian University Press

Students at various campuses know their tuition is going to be $500 higher next year and their universities' budgets have been slashed, but neither of these matters has been finalized here according to university president Dr. Mervyn Franklin.

Students at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute found out recently they can expect a 12.9 percent tuition hike next year.

Students there will have to pay $16 more (for a total of $75) a year, said finance director P.G. Harry, to compensate for an anticipated inadequate increase in the provincial government's grant to the institution if the grant is not increased, it is not expected to cover Ryerson's budget needs.

Harry was told about the grant increase by a Ministry of Colleges and Universities representative at a meeting of university finance officers. They were told to "anticipate an increase of between 2.5 percent and nine percent."

No formal government announcement on the grants has been made. Ryerson students' council president John Long thinks it is "undesirable" for the ministry to tell the finance officers before the statement was made.

Ryerson's departments can expect to have reduced budgets next year as well.

At the University of Calgary, the university administration informally announced a tuition increase for next year of between ten and 12 percent, according to some members of the students' council executive.

"Dr. Wagner (the university's president) said quite plainly, not in confidence, that we could expect ten to 12 percent increases," recounted council president Therese Goullet.

Tuition fees are currently $650 annually for full-time undergraduates, and $765 annually for engineering students. A 12 percent increase would raise those figures to $678 and $847 respectively. Fees this year have already been raised ten percent from last year's level of $550 for regular undergraduates.

Wagner denied using the ten to 12 percent figure, but admitted discussing the possibility of an increase with the council executive.

He did suggest tuition fees should perhaps be set at roughly ten percent of the total cost of a student's education, which he said is currently $8,000 annually. A tuition increase to this $800 mark would mean a 12 percent jump over current levels.

In the budget area, the University of Toronto's Governing Council (similar to the university's Board of Governors) has approved a three million dollar cut in the university's base budget for next year. According to the university's budget committee, the "reductions are seen to be necessary, principally because of the inadequacies in the university's operating grant from the government."

Governing Council member Professor James Conacher was one of several councillors who released approved the budget. Conacher said, "Too much emphasis is being put on cuts, which may create the impression at Queen's Park and in the press that there is still fat on the old carcass and that we do not really need the increased revenue we ask for."

He felt that more emphasis be put on increasing income from other sources.

Anahim representative on the council, Jordan Sullivan, was one of only two council members to vote against the budget.

Sullivan does not "believe it comes to grip with the problem. Eighty percent of the budget is for staff, and 80 percent of that is tenure. We've cut all the fat out of the university's budget. For the past five years we've faced budget cuts."

Sullivan also asked that the public be made aware that the university is "suffering grievously."

In a telephone interview on Monday, President Franklin said the issue of a tuition increase for next year had not been examined here yet and that the coming year's budget had not been finalized for publication.

Even when these matters have been settled by the Board of Governors, the news will be delayed in its release because of the board's "closed meetings" policy (closed to the public, students, and reporters).

How to know God if you ever get to meet Him

by Wendy Coomber

GOD'S leadinG advocate was here last Sunday.

Dr. Mortimer Adler, one of the Christian Culture speakers, lectured to his audience about "knowing" the existence of God, and how to think about it, referring along the way to the theories of Aquinas, Aristotle, Anselm, and Pascal.

The lecture was not entirely made for the layperson. However, Dr. Adler did throw out some interesting thoughts to his listeners.

It is claimed that his was a philosophical theology developed from reason. There was no scientific thinking involved. He later said in his lecture, "No scientist knows what we have been called "existence". means... (the concept is entirely foreign to the whole scientific mentality.)"

Being a Thomist, a follower of the Doctrines of Thomas Aquinas, for ten years, Dr. Adler asserted that he is now a Thomist too. Yet much of his lecture contained the theories of the Roman Catholic Aquinas.

The Saint's theory, that God annihilates nothing, was used often in the Dr. Adler's lecture to show that, since God does not destroy existence, then he must create it.

"God and God alone can cause the existence of anything," said Dr. Adler. Therefore, the opposite of annihilating is existence, which according to the lecturer, means not doing something out of nothing.

He then tried to show how God is related to the word "capital " and to "capital G", which he said is currently $8,000 annually. A tuition increase to this $800 mark would mean a 12 percent jump over current levels.

In the budget area, the University of Toronto's Governing Council (similar to the university's Board of Governors) has approved a three million dollar cut in the university's base budget for next year. According to the university's budget committee, the "reductions are seen to be necessary, principally because of the inadequacies in the university's operating grant from the government."

Food Services foresees $90,000 deficit

by Wendy Coomber

Sage's food prices will go up again — "much more than they have in the past" — was the word from Darryl Johnston, Director of Sage Foods, at the Food Committee meeting last Friday.

The Food Services budget released at that meeting foresees its deficit this year as being over $90,000, a little higher than last year, while entering the new fiscal year with less of a deficit than last year.

An additional $50,000 has been allocated for food this year, but still the students on the Food Committee bringing up the fact that they are paying as much as much in the cafeteria for their meals as they do in some restaurants. There, they say, they receive a better service and other benefits which accompany restaurant dining, not found in Vaster.

Johnston explained that ancillary operations, the category into which food services fall, do not receive money, or grants, from the government.
The Fortnighter
by John Hill

No, I'm not going to write a Christmas editorial, but want to tell you about one Romco commercial I saw, then on with my editorial.

This ad was for the new Ronco Electric Toothbrush with a rotating circular head instead of the regular up and down brush. Not only will this brush keep your teeth clean but you can buy one for your dog too. Cut, side in, scene of beautiful dog brushing its own teeth. Cut ... only $19.95 at your local Cunningham's Drug store. Cut, that's a take, roll it.

So remember, if you happen to get idea gifts for your neighbour's dog this Christmas, you can always buy him an electric toothbrush.

But that's not the theme of this week's article. This week I want to deal with my version of Utopia.

During my travels this summer I had the good fortune of visiting a Quaker community, on the north shore of the Kootenay Lake in British Columbia. Fifty years ago, when the 20 Quaker families arrived, the region was, uninhabited virgin forest with a couple of scrapey one-lane bush roads and some small farms. The Quakers fought out the land, with a lot of hard work and persistence they cleared and homesteaded the land.

The little community has come a long way since then. They have built a school which produces normal, polite, human and social consciousness than their counterparts in the city.

The day I visited the Quakers, or "The Friends" as they refer to themselves, I saw a project that four families had undertaken. They had fenced in two acres of land and were grafting apple buds onto 2,000 seedlings. Before victory dances, Indian warriors used to make cherry wine out of pottery goblets the neighbours were so healthy and happy.

The surrounding country is beautiful. Frye Creek, less than a mile away, crashes down the valley in multi-colored hues of turquoise and aquamarine cascading over rounding forest. The path winds along a twisted tortured route, where the trail has slipped away down into the creek. Where the trail has slipped away down into the creek.

Weil, perhaps the "serious communication problems" haven't affected services to students, but if the internal tension caused by the problems has hampered the "overall productivity" of SAC, service to students has been adversely affected. If "more can be accomplished in SAC for students", is not an entirely "one because the Students are losing something somewhere.

The contradictions about the effect on the situation revealed that "it is the belief of this committee that these serious communication problems have not affected services to students, but has led to internal tension at the SAC Executive level. That tension has led to a reduction of the overall productivity of SAC. Even more can be accomplished in SAC if this is resolved."

Punk reviewer's attacks don't give the story

Dear Editor:

In a recent issue of The Lance (November 21) (review and I use the word loosely) was featured concerning a university subsidized club's social event.

The author (and I use this word loosely) last week, attempted a review of the Marketing Club's PUNK-OFF held at the Ambassador Auditorium on November 21. What started out as a review, in fact turned out to be blatant character assassination aimed at one of the groups which was featured that night. The article displayed about as much objectivity and maturity as that of a three year old child.

In short, Martin didn't tell the whole story.

A young woman began the evening by tearing a poster which belonged to the band. Guess who Martin was with that evening? The young woman and her friend, the writer, were also the source of the infamous flying paper cups. Instead of reporting how this manner should not and was not tolerated, I mean, if you paid your two dollars you have the exclusive right to throw things at people, you're flippin' crazy. People who behave in such a manner should be reprimanded.

And you think you can't stand the heat (or the terrible bouncing roadies) get out of the kitchen!

Another point which should be made concerns the fact that at this time last year there was an anti-choice state that it was a total punk band or that it is ever existed to achieve that purpose. Remember, it was the Marketing Club who named the event PUNK-OFF. Martin also attacked the band's academic proficiency by stating that the band probably didn't know the meaning of the word "anarchy." It seems to me that Martin would do well to find the latest edition of Pink & Wagner's Dictionary and look up the meaning of reasonable journalism. He also attacked the very nature of the band by the use of words like "wimpy." In his review, Martin completely neglected to report on the coupled merits of the song sung as well as delivery or even stage presence for that matter. Are they not full parts of a responsible review?

And if Martin is such an authority on the subject, why isn't he out making millions?

The whole article reminds me of a joke I once heard about a priest who was searching for an organist and a piccolo player. The punch line could be adapted to this situation and would read something like this: "I'm not the one who called this journalist a jackass, I'm just to know who called this jackass a journalist?" By the way, Martin, wasn't that all you're flippin' about "Beat on the Brat?"

Abortion more consequential than beer

Dear Editor:

I write in response to the East GYN Center ad for abortion and some of the resultant letters to the Editor of The Lance.

To run an ad for abortions is to begin a dialogue at a level as other items advertised alongside it. Women, abortion is of much greater consequence to you, personally, as well as to our society, than drinking beer or buying clothes!

Any privilege brings responsibility with it. To not accept the responsibility with the privilege is to say you are not ready for the privilege. To be willing to have sex but not fulfill binding commitments to your partner aid any resultant pregnancy is to be not ready for the privilege.

Abortion, then, is a cover-up solution for one who has taken the privilege of sex but not the sexual is slammed to zero. The privilege is to say you are not ready with it. To not accept pregnancy is to be not ready for the privilege.

Abortion, then, is a cover-up solution for one who has taken the privilege of sex but not the responsibility. And the cost of the cover-up solution is to the individual and society. Some are as follows.

1. The worth of the individual is slammed to zero. The fetus is judged of no value and, thus, human life becomes an issue of convenience. We become merely numbers in a gigantic machine, controlled by some larger numbers. Sound familiar?

Engineers are people too

Dear Editor:

Engineers are often stereotyped as being inhuman and uncaring. My experience proves otherwise.

Last week I told a class of third-year Engineering students about the problems faced by survivors of the Italian earthquake, and appealed to them for contributions. The students responded by contributing over sixty dollars to an emergency relief fund.

No one can accuse such future engineers of failing to realize their involvement with mankind.

Don't be a rat - Send The Lance A Christmas Story

Dear Editor:

I completely fed up with the negative comments from possible yellow journalism you are inflicting on our student newspaper, The Lance.

You are the most ruthless and power-hungry newspaper I have ever seen since William Randolph Hearst.

It is done that you, Mr. Editor, that it is the student voters who determine the President of SAC, and not the President of SAC.

For weeks you have monopolized both the front and editorials pages, and you now seem to print innuendo against SAC President Dave Simmons. You have even gone so far as to suggest that Simmons was a sexual bigot by attributing a quote to him which he never made.

Alan Halberstadt, writing in The Windsor Star, November 24, has a more realistic policy "petty... innuendo coverage!" As a former reporter for The Lance, I should know that is. It is ironic that a petition is now circulating to impeach Simmons when it is you, Mr. Editor, who deserves to be impeached.

Abortion is not a humane option

Dear Editor:

Two letters appeared in the November 24 edition of The Lance that have caused us much concern. They were entitled "Abortion can be humane" and "Ad (East GYN) provides an option." We feel compelled to write this letter to The Lance, as well as to the entire student body, to voice the opinion that abortion is not a viable option in any way humane. We must first remember The Lance for not printing the East GYN abortion clinic adver tisement last week.

The arguments put forth in each of these letters fall far short of the standards we must set for ourselves as human beings. The preservation of human life must be held paramount to all other aspects of human existence. Population control is a great economic advantage, or mere convenience is not reasons for the extermination of human life. We fail to understand how a society that supports such organizations as "Save the Seals" and "Save the Whales" could possibly support the existence of pro-abortion laws and organizations. Has the respect for a "child" loosely. It is quite easy to do). We simply wish to plead to those women (drop them) who are contemplating an abortion for whatever reason, to reconsider. Young couples everywhere are forced to wait months, even years, for the opportunity to adopt a child while, on any given day, in any one of countless hospitals around the world, children are losing their lives.

We feel it is our moral obligation to speak out for those

Dear Editor:

No More!

With consent of The Lance's Editorial Board, the Editor can now call the running debate on abortion and race a wrap. An effort has been made to publish this issue before the band ever made its appearance. It appears the only issue that caused a great deal of sides disagreement with the other.

Zuber Moot ponders Constitution Act

by Peter Haulstow

By reaching the floor of Parliament for final debate, the new Constitution Act was given serious consideration in a landmark judicial decision here in Windsor last week.

One wonders how this could have happened since the Constitution Act has not, as yet, been proclaimed law! Anything is possible in the Supreme Court of Windsor, home of the annual Zuber Moot Finals.

"Moot" is an academic competition in which law students stage mock judicial proceedings and argue hypothetical questions of law. The format of the proceeding is that of an appeal before the Supreme Court.

Students competing in this event must present both written and oral arguments which are judged on the basis of their clarity, detail, and persuasiveness.

The finalists in the competition were chosen from among teams participating in preliminary contests in September. Alex Smith (Law II), Kevin Whites (Law II), Karen McEwan (Law II) and Susan McCabe (Law II) argued before a highly esteemed bench which included Ontario Supreme Court of Appeal Chief Justice Bert McKinnon, Senior Court Justice Judge Carl Zalev and Ontario Supreme Court of Appeal Justice Zuber, a former professor at this university's Faculty of Law, from whom this competition has derived its name.

The case, Freeman vs. Attorney General for Ontario, was an appeal from the conviction of Frank Freeman, who allegedly made "spiteful and provocative statements against the Premier of Ontario" in a public place, contrary to the provincial legislation entitled The General Advancement of Government Act. The "chapter" was intended to enforce a summery conviction and penalty against individuals who make similar statements in a public place so as to "discredit a base disposition toward the leading personalities of the province."

At the same time, the federal government had passed the Constitution Act which includes the overriding Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the right to free speech being one of those enumerated rights recognized by a democratic society.

Arguing against the provincial legislation and in support of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Alex Smith and Kevin Whites attempted to show the court that it was not within the competence of the province to pass the impugned legislation because of the paramountcy of the federal act.

They also argued that the penalty attached to the provincial conviction under its provincial act was contrary to the federal power over criminal law and procedure and, therefore, should be deemed invalid. Karen McEwan and Susan McCabe representing the Attorney-General of Ontario, argued that the act was within the province's constitutional right to enact legislation over matters of a local and private nature and that the penalty prescribed in the legislation was pursuant to these provincial ends.

The court decided in favour of the appellants by quashing the conviction. Delivering the decision on behalf of an unanimous bench, Justice Zuber said that the act was not consistent in framing legislation such as The General Advancement of Government Act because it would effectively constitute free censorship.

OTTAWA (CUP) - At Carleton University in Ottawa, it's called a dangerous form of censorship, but at the University of Ontario it's referred to as "getting rid of old traditions."

Playboy, Playgirl, Penthouse and similar publications will no longer be sold at the University of Ontario student federation-run store. The federation voted 13-12 in favor of the motion, proposed by councillor Linda Cardinal at a council meeting.

The Carleton University student union however, will continue to sell skin magazines on campus.

After four hours of debate November 13, the student council voted 9 to 7 in favor of the continued sale of the magazines, but condemned the contents.

Representative Jim Saunderson said the ban was a dangerous form of censorship in an institution devoted to the exchange of ideas.

Finance commissioner Chris McElligott supported the ban saying "I'm not afraid of being idealistic." He said council had to get rid of the magazines to establish credibility for its anti-sextism campaign.

Deb Powell, another arts representative defended the banning of the magazines saying "This is only the first step but it is very important that we take that step."

At the University of Ottawa, councillor Linda Cardinal said student federation had to decide if it supported the selling of the skin magazines and further stated, "It's not a question of censorship but of getting rid of old traditions."

Student federation president Pierre Chabot defended the ban in the name of social change. "We must take a stand, clean out our houses before we can clean out society."

Academic Affairs commissioner Pierre LaFrance said, "We're not deciding if people should read them or not, but whether the federation should present them in their stores."

Science representative Scott Meyer would like to see the federation establish guidelines to decide which publications should be sold.

Two administration representatives said they had surveyed 365 students in their faculty and found 65 percent were against banning the publications.

Search for new V.P. finally started

by E.P. Chant

After more than three months without one, the University of Windsor has started a search for a new administrative vice-president to handle financial matters.

Following a Board of Governors meeting this past September, President Mervyn Franklin announced "The University of Windsor and Doctor John R. Allan have agreed to terms by which Doctor Allan's appointment as Vice-President, Administration, has been discontinued, effective August 31, 1980."

In his dual capacity as Vice-President, Administration, and Treasurer, Dr. Allan touched many bases in his position. Being responsible for money meant being responsible or partially responsible for many areas: working to increase enrollment, planning construction, determining tuition, setting departmental budgets, helping to set salaries and, at the same time, prevent crippling strikes.

No specific reasons for his departure were ever given to the public by the university administration or Dr. Allan. President, Administration, to "Vice-President, Finance and Services".

At the Senate meeting of November 13, two members of that body were elected to serve on the joint Senate-Board of Governors search committee. They are Dean Ron Ianni of Law and Dean Cameron MacInnis of Engineering.

Usual search committee procedures involve placing ads in national newspapers and education-related magazines which include a job description and requirements being looked for. Responding individuals - from this university, other universities, or the private sector - are then interviewed by the committee, sometimes several times, until one is selected and approved by the governing bodies.

University Players perform for Danish Prince

by Peter Hrstovec

Theatre. Patterned on everyday, but worn of finer threads. Richly painted faces and flowing robes of silk. Kingly crowns and sceptred speech. The majesty of trouble-free kingdoms, citadels of magic within the unopposed view of the mind's glittering eye.

This is the world of four vagabond actors in mid-sixteenth century Denmark. On the road and on the run, they are the reluctant puppets of a somber prince Hamlet in Shakespeare's celebrated tragedy, dangling on the ends of intrigue's tangle strings. It is their brief but significant duty to recreate the murder of Hamlet's father by the unscrupulous Claudius who has seized the throne and married the mother of the melancholy prince.

But these messengers of guilt and remonstration take on a new light in Michael Stewart's He to Hecuba at Essex Hall Theatre. Here, their individual characters are salvaged from near obscurity, given life and liberty in a unique examination of the Renaissance Theatre. These actors are as jovial as they are argumentative, as backstabbing as they are supportive of one another. And their spirited hearts ease them through their haggard looks, the actors realize that they carry in their wooden trunks and their tender hearts The Theatre. Spickett directed a once-lauded actress, superb performance. And young Jens (Mark BJ, as the swashbuckling lowlifes. The shenanigans continue tonight and Saturday at the Essex Hall Theatre at 8 p.m., as the young servant boy- turned-actor, John McKerral, as Judge Lander, afficionado of both jurisprudence and the stage, is genuine in his protestations of love for Valentina Ponti.

Dori Elliott, as innkeeper Frv. Gerdes, leads the rest of the cast in a laboursome collective effort to capture the charms and amusements of the foppish low-life.

Director George L. Neilson is to be complimented on his excellent staging, especially the innovative fight scenes that bring this wonderful comedy to a rollicking, high-spirited conclusion.

Playwright Michael Stewart draws a picture of the theatre as a mixture of fact and fiction, the confluence of reality and illusion. In the end, when the last spot of grease paint is removed from their haggard faces, the actors realize that they must take to the road again. But the dreams they harbour in their weary minds and the song that escapes from their spirited hearts eases them into their endless journey, comforting them in their pursuit of pure and simple happiness. A message for us all!

The shenanigans continue tonight and Saturday at the Essex Hall Theatre at 8 p.m.

The University Players' Christmas Show will be The Emperor's Nightingale, held in the Essex Hall Theatre on December 11-14. For more information phone 255-4565.
Same old thing...time to start studying

by Brian Williamson

Finally - the end of the semester - time to celebrate in the pub. We've lived through administration. We've lived different. Being yet another middle of the road quasi Rock 'n' Roll (isn't it dead, yet?) band, it is a reinforcement of SAC's reputation for providing average Right? Close, but no Cupie Buck.

You know the old adage, 'the more you drink, the better we sound'? Being lost of money this weekend.

Given that this is indeed the last week of classes and that the overwhelming spirit of the students will be, as the 8-52s put it, "Paaaran-ty!", I don't imagine there will be too many extremely disappointed pubgoers.

Of course, I don't expect any one to cherish autograph of this band, either. (Nice polyester shirts, though.) They match their rendition of Van Halen's version of the mighty original Kinks masterpiece, 'You really got me' (Identified as a Van Halen song. Please...) Other recent hits performed by this group include "Mis-understanding" by Genesis and "Soul Man" recently made popular by the Blues Brothers. At least they have talented musicians. As a friend who will remain nameless put it, "Some of the nicest sounding entertainment.

Rock Island? Oh, yeah, that's in the canal zone of Niagara Falls where those people, there, they got chromosome damage?

THE CINEMA CRITIC

by Rosemarie Comiso

Slick, superficial, and transactional are three adjectives which best describe the musical beds' syndrome in Loving Couples.

The movie conveniently takes place in the hedonistic capital of the world - sunny California, where everyone is beautiful and sex is the state's favorite pastime.

Within this exotic setting are characters who are as sophisticated as their surroundings: two rich and successful doctors, a popular TV weather-girl and an irresistible real estate agent whose combination often included sexual favors from his female clients. How these characters manage to get together depends less on coincidence and a lot on Divine Providence.

This mate-swapping game begins when Greg Flunkert (Stephen Collins) ends up in a car accident and inherits Evelyn Lucas (Shirley MacLaine) as his doctor and lover. It seems that Evelyn's husband, Dr. Walter Kirby (James Coburn), has been neglecting and ignoring her too much lately and the prospect of having an attractive lover like Greg is too hard for her to resist.

Complications set in when Greg's live-in-girl-friend, Stephanie Beck (Susan Sarandon), approaches Walter to help her split up the affair that her boyfriend and his wife are having. However, instead of putting a stop to their partners' love tryst, Stephanie and Walter become romantically involved.

The situation is far from idiotic. Even though Walter moves in with Stephanie and Greg sets up house-keeping with Evelyn, the ensuing scenes get more tedious and less humorous as the film drags on.

The only comic relief we get is provided by the all-too brief appearance of Sally Kelleher. Her portrayal as Mrs. Liggett, a woman with an insatiable sexual appetite, who seduces Greg and pursues him unsuccessfully throughout the movie, is nothing short of hilarious!

The movie has such a high level of absurdity, Loving Couples resorts to serious moralizing at the end, completely destroying the light-hearted tone it established at the beginning. Were it not for this flaw, the movie could have been a very clever comedy.

A fascinating and varied performance by the University Concert Band, under the direction of professor James Tamburini, graced Ambassador Auditorium last Sunday.

Opening with Kenneth Campbell’s “Capital City Suite,” a fun piece, the band contrasted the quick movements with “Legislation,” “Confusion,” and the soft-flowing “River by Night,” written to depict the mood of peace and serenity.

The second half opened with the favourite giant work of George Gershwin, “Rhapsody in Blue,” with Dr. Gregory Butler as piano soloist. It was originally composed for jazz and solo piano, but this arrangement for solo piano and concert band calls for, and received excellent coordination between soloist and ensemble.

With this piece, Gershwin has reached a cross-section of all music lovers from jazz to symphony.

The last number on the program, “La Fiesta Mexicana,” was composed by Owen Reed, professor of music and chairman of Theory and Composition at Michigan State University. The Mexican “Fiesta” is a study of contrasts: it is both serious and comical, festive and solemn, devout and pagan, boisterous and tender.

The three movements provide different pictures. The “ Prelude and Aztec Dance” announces the opening of the Fiestas with church bells, as people begin to gather. The “ Mass” presents the mood of a religious celebration of worship and contemplation. The “ Carnival” describes the entertainment of “Fiesta”, the market, the bullfight, the town band and the “ cantinas” with their bands of “Mariachis”.

The concert band was called back to perform an encore, “Buyler’s Holiday” in which Professor Tamburini’s own trumpet section demonstrated an excellent technique.

The next concert in the ensemble series will be presented this Sunday, November 7 in Assumption Church at 8:15 p.m. by the University Singers and other choral groups.

David Bowie, what the Heads are trying to pass off as some ideological, intelligentsia-oriented “ new” music is little more than a rehash of what Bowie has been doing for the last four years.

Since their last album, “ Fear of Music,” the Heads have added a primitive, rhythmic percussion element to their music, fusing it with the keyboard work of Brian Eno. This synthesis of musical genres has been evident in Bowie’s work for quite some time. Eno’s keyboard work, and Byrne’s lyrics are comparable to many of Bowie’s cuts on “Low” and “ Lodge.”

In the light, one sees that the Talking Heads’ latest isn’t as innovative as one might expect.

The album presents such an overwhelming mosaic of musical influences that at times, it can get somewhat cramped. The Fripp-like guitar is still around; it lacks refinement surfaces on “Remain in Light.” When it works, its tertse, its innovating, but when it doesn’t, it drags, because the onus falls on Byrne’s lyrics, and they’re not the cheeriest.

Byrne’s introspective poetry is worth taking a look at. In “ Born Under Punches” he says:

“All I want is to breathe / Won’t you breathe with me / Find a little space / As we move in-between / And keep one step ahead of you.”

In “ Houses in Motion,” Byrne further defines his individual, his spirituality, and his blank disconnection:

“I turn myself around / I’m moving backwards and forwards / I’m moving twice as much / As I was before / I’ll keep digging to the centre of the Earth / I’ll be down there, moving in the room.”

Most of his lyrics are like this, introducing meaning, bordering on the surreal. Are the Talking Heads the “blues” for the modernist? I don’t think so. They’re certainly, at this stage, existential enough, but remember, Bowie fell to earth too. What Byrne is dealing with is the dread of coping. The paradoxical music reflects his pessimism, his uncertainty. I much prefer Byrne’s inquisitive lyrics of “... Buildings and Food,” they are a simpler, analytical satire of society; “Remain in Light” is too self-gnoding.

The Talking Heads are one band that has continually changed their musical style from album to album. At times, they have synthesized new elements or notions within their music and lyrics to offer a singular, albeit transient, piece of art. The Heads present more than music for robots befuddled by society; they are a group of musicians who expand their musical horizons continually, without regards for popular acceptance.

Remain in Light is wholly different from their previous work, and it shall certainly be wholly different from their future work.
After the fourth week of hockey action, the Commerce and Engineering societies and the engineering society have begun to show their records. In A division play, both Commerce and Engineering are a part of a four-way tie for first place, while in B division, the two societies lead their respective divisions with undefeated records. The Western Exiles and Law Tortfeasors are the only teams without a point to date, but with both leagues apparently very balanced this year, that will certainly change before long.

The campus has seen a number of hockey games this year, with Commerce and Engineering leading the way. In B division play, the Exiles and Law Tortfeasors have been the only teams without a point to date, but with both leagues apparently very balanced this year, that will certainly change before long.

Volleyball

Recreational and competitive volleyball action continued last week. On the competitive side, the Senators, Jacques Jocks and the Bombers were winners. In the competitive league, the Law School team won their games, as did the Jocks and the Tecumseh 1 Team.

Stangs end Lancers’ short-lived winning streak

Sports Staff

Both the men’s and women’s swim teams competed on the weekend, the men on Friday and Saturday. The men had Matt McManus meet on Saturday. The top performer among the men was Rob Micheli who won the 200 metre breaststroke in a time of two minutes and 33.1 seconds. Micheli also finished fourth in the 100 metre event in a time of 1:11.4.

Other members of the team all attained lifetime bests in their events. They are Ron Ford (50 and 100 free, 100 breast), Mark Masse (50, 100 and 200 free) and Bob Pucci (50 and 100 free, 100 back).

The next meet for the Lancers will be Dec. 6 at Wayne State.

On the feminine side, Gillian Stevens was the top performer with firsts in both the 100 and 200 metre fly (1:11.1 and 2:43.2 respectively) and a fifth in the 200 breast with a time of 3:08.9.

That game will be played in St. Denis starting a 2 p.m. the first two games easily, but by the third game Windsor had pocketed the winner.

In the final game, the Lancerettes were hitting better and the rallies were long and well-played, but it was not enough as the Western girls were well on top of their game.

Overall, the play was at a higher standard than it has been in past games, but the persistent UW O team never left up in their hard-hitting attack.

The Lancerettes will play again against Waterloo, in the Twin Cities, on Jan. 13.

The basketball Lancers took on Windsor last night and nine at the 10th Annual Shaw Classic in Detroit last weekend. Windsor lost the opener Friday 78-58 to Lincoln University of Missouri, then bowed 60-66 in the consolation final against the host Shaw College.

The four-team tournament consisted of Windsor, Shaw, Lincoln and Wayne State of Detroit.

Lincoln was led by all-American guard John Woodan who netted 24 points, playing with a pulled hamstring, contributed the same number in the losing cause.

At times during the game the Lancers appeared sluggish and disorganized, but a superb defensive effort and a positive attitude kept the margin of victory smaller than it might have been.

The Shaw game see-sawed through all but the final three minutes when the Saints took control with a full-court man-to-man press which effectively strained the Lancers.

Phil Hermansutz led Windsor with 22 points while Jim Hodyr added 13 and Stan Karonce 12. F.A. Merchant was high for the Saints with 28 points.

Coach Nick Grabowski commented after a game with Michigan Nov. 24, that his team’s sixth loss without a victory, that he felt the Lancers would win at least one game before they begin regular season action Jan. 14 against Guilph.

Windsor has three more chances to do just that, the next coming Saturday in a rematch with the Shaw Saints.

The Basketball Lancerette volleyball team was defeated 5-13, 17-15 and 15-1 in a best-of-five games series against Western in London Saturday.

The Mustangs started off strongly against Windsor and had the first two games easily, but by the third game Windsor had pulled together sufficiently to overcome the London team.

In the final game, the Lancerettes were hitting better and the rallies were long and well-played, but it was not enough as the Western girls were well on top of their game.

The basketball Lancerettes ended their regular schedule Saturday on a winning note by posting a 73-41 triumph over Wilfrid Laurier Golden Hawks.

Although the game lacked a lot of sparkle and lustre, the Lancerettes managed to work well together as a team in bringing their record to 4-3. Rookie centre Theresa McGee topped all scorers with 17 points while star Tracy McNam chiped in with 13.

First year sensation Roberts Smith added 12 rebounds to the win.

Save Krausja was high scorer for Laurier with nine.

Injuries are a key factor for the team at present with only eight players completely healthy. Jolyne Conlon and Kerri Towers are presently sidelined with back injuries, Donna Facci is finished for the season due to a serious knee injury, and Mary Fanning is currently suffering from possible tendonitis.

Under the circumstances, the holiday break will provide welcome relief to the ailing troops.

"It's important that we get all our players healed and back into action after Christmas," said coach Sue Swain. "Having key players sitting out not only hurts the team on the floor, but can be devastating morale-wise, as well."
Council supports Execs

by E.P. Chant

The last Students' Administrative Council (SAC) meeting of the year, on Thursday, December 4, might very well have marked the end of the first-semester-long SAC Executive infighting.

The recommendations of the three-man committee on the "internal strife" of the Executive were passed as "the official SAC policy" in the situation (as Chairman Bob Charney described the approved report) after a short discussion with the committee members.

The recommendations were:
1) That the President [David Simmons] take measures to reconcile his authoritative stance concerning the legal and implied roles of all the Cabinet, in that the Corporate leadership is a collaborative, team effort and not a single proprietorship. It must be recognized that no sole authority exists, and a consideration of the Cabinet must take place.
2) That channels of communication be clearly established to ensure that executive members have a clear understanding of, and input into, the decision-making process.
3) That the Executive publically pledge their support of these recommendations, and of a co-operative effort toward achieving the best possible service to the students of the University of Windsor.

The major point that came out of the discussion on the report was that the "internal strife" could have been prevented—and will be in the future—by making revisions to the SAC By-Laws, via more detailed job descriptions for the Executive members.

Kevin Sisk, one of the committee members, explained "the by-laws, etc. are too flexibility and shouldn't", but former External Affairs Commissioner John Rimbous did not have a clear job description and that led to troubles.

The Executive members seem to need to have their specific rights and responsibilities in writing.

Ken Roberts, the chairman of the "internal strife" committee, also sits on SAC's By-Laws Review Committee and it appears that committee will examine the facets of the "internal strife" report on the new year.

Following the acceptance of the committee's recommendations, a motion by Eric Dizon which would have had the council pledge its support of Simmons was amended (by Werner Keller) and passed so that such support was pledged to the whole Executive.

An addition to the SAC By-Laws was made at the meeting in the form of a preamble which stated, basically, that SAC adheres to the Ontario Human Rights Code and so, will not "use discrimination, interference, restriction or coercion with respect to any student, student activity or club or society by reason of race, creed, color, ancestry, sex, political, social or religious affiliation or belief."

An "unfriendly" amendment was made to the preamble motion by Cecilia Deck which would have had "sex discrimination" (heterosexual or homosexual) included amongst "race, creed, color, ancestry, sex, political, social or religious affiliation or belief."

That amendment failed, as it appeared council did not want to see "WHAT CONSTITUTION?", page 3.

Spill could cause professor his licence

LONDON (CUP) - A University of Western Ontario medical researcher may lose his research licence following an accident two months ago in which a number of students were exposed to low-level radiation.

The accident took place in a biochemistry department lab in Western's medical science building October 5, Department Chairman Brian Sanwal said the accident occurred when a student spilled a few drops of a solution containing a radioactive isotope.

Sanwal said the student discovered the contamination during a post-experiment gringer counter check of the work area several hours after the accident. By that time, a number of other students had passed through the contaminated work area.

Subsequent efforts to clean up the spill with paper towels and cleanser proved ineffective and university officials were called, said Western safety officer Dwight Barratt. The exposed floor area was covered with half-inch-thick Plexiglas shielding and marked to prevent people from entering the work area.

Geiger counter readings indicated a local radiation field of 20 millionths of a rad, 80 times the maximum permissible level established by the federal Atomic Energy Control Board (AECB), said Barratt. However, later examination indicated the student had been contaminated to an extent of less than six millirems, probably because equipment in the area shielded them, he said.

The AECB's maximum allowable level of radiation exposure is 500 millirems per year, or about 10 per week. Atomic industry workers are permitted 10 times that amount. A typical x-ray exposes a patient to about 20 millirems of radiation.

"This was a serious incident," said Barratt. "It would indicate that something went wrong in the normal operation of that lab. Because of that, the (university's) radiation safety committee will be reviewing Dr. Sanwal's licence." In addition to his post as chairperson of the department, Sanwal is the PhD students' research supervisor.

Western is licensed to handle radioactive materials by the AECB, which regulates the use of all radioactive substances in Canada. The university in turn hands out licences to individual professors, whose students can conduct research within the licence's provisions. About 90 campus licences are currently issued.

"We will be very firm with any one person in order to allow the 90 other people to continue using radioactive isotopes," said Barratt.

The stream of consciousness begins with one drip by Bill Bohman

The university was honoured recently by a lecture given by W. O. Mitchell, a distinguished Canadian author of creative works such as the classical "Who Has Seen The Wind?" The witty author read some of his works to an audience estimated at about 175 people.

Mitchell, who is the university's writer-in-residence, has to set such a possible controversal precedent. Sexual orientation is not covered in the Ontario Human Rights Code, although there are cases before the courts dealing with that shortcoming. As council member Modes Cohen argued, "If our great country doesn't recognize it, we shouldn't either."

The preamble passed, in its original form, 15 to five.

Also approved, after lengthy discussion, was the constitution of the new Social Science Society. The motion to ratify this document was made by Vice-President-Administration Jim Shaban and seconded by Randy Zadra.

In the discussion that followed, Shaban questioned the society's constitutional setup for its election procedures (an odd occurrence, a motion-maker speaking against the consent of his motion) because, originally, it was not thought necessary and, later, the SAC secretary did not have time.

After a short recess to examine the constitution, it was ratified, with the Social Science representatives agreeing to remove two of the debated sections. Patty Taylor, the acting President of the Social Science Committee, then took her seat on council.

Financial matters closed the meeting, with Simmons inviting council members to talk to Vice-President-Finance Brad Mitchell about any ideas they had for new and improved services the increased student fees next semester could be used to develop.

Generation, the campus literary magazine, was then given its yearly synopsis, just slightly over $1,700 for printing and binding and such.

The meeting closed with a discussion of the financial loss of September's Orientation. The $8,113.43 loss was attributed to having too many events going at once and poor coordination between the Orientation committee and residences and societies, which were also holding events.

Registration

Over 4,500 students tramped through Ambassador Auditorium last week to avoid the hassles of the long lines and hurried registration they thought would ensue in January.

The irony is only half this number will be showing their way toward the registration tables next month. Registrar Frank Smith said there will only be about 2,000 full-time students left to register after Christmas.

Merry X-mas and may you choke on a snowflake

The Christmas season is upon us again, and along with all the joyous feelings that come with it, there are also some nagging questions around who seem to delight inmessing things up for the rest of us.

It only takes one or two of these types to thoroughly mess up your whole day. A careless or thoughtless word or two seems to siphon off all the whole spirit away. It's this type of person who, no matter how many well-wishers one runs into, can knock down the whole brotherhood of liberal thinking and its associations with Christmas.

Last week The Lance was distributed across campus by paper-persons (people?) who asked for donations to the Goodfellows.

Now everyone knows that the Goodfellows are a worthy organization, providing food baskets and other necessary services to those less fortunate during the Christmas season and throughout the year.

And although people from The Lance and SAC managed to raise just over $200 for the Goodfellows, this fact was nonetheless dimmed by a bit of a few uncaring souls.

One student, when asked for a donation, replied, "What do you mean, pay for the paper?"

Aside from about six feet of some real crumby cranky Canadian snow, what this campus needs most desperately is a huge dose of liberal thinking.

Strange that a person at a university supposedly devoted to the great social institution of liberal thought - has to be pleading for this, but it has come to that point.

First we had the abortion debate, which has been taking place on the page opposite this one for the past month in the form of "Letters to the Editor."

Some of the letters dealt with the ads for EAST GYN, an abortion clinic, that this newspaper ran in the first term, some dealt specifically with the moral issue of abortion, but there were also a few that dealt with both the ads and the issue.

Now, about the ads.

The staff of the newspaper decided three weeks ago to stop running them (the staff, under current student media by-laws, has complete control of all newspaper content). The reason; it might appear, with the inclusion of the ad, that the staff supported abortion even though that might not necessarily be the case.

I was against the ad's removal (as Editor, however, I am bound to abide by staff decisions) for the simple reason that it constituted censorship. Advertisements in a newspaper serve only to provide information, they do not represent staff philosophy - and anybody who thinks advertisements represent philosophy is making a swan dive into the depths of illogic.

The week after the EAST GYN ad was discontinued, Birthright, an anti-abortion/pro-life organization, requested an ad in the newspaper and I turned it down (later approved by staff).

Partly to my satisfaction, but mostly to my chagrin, the staff of the paper agreed that running one side's ad and not the other would serve to ruin the paper's reputation, but instead of deciding to turn around and run both ads to present a totally open and objective front, the staff decided to run neither.

Now, as for the letters dealing with the issue of abortion:

It was brought up by share number alone, that the majority of the letter-writing people on this campus would very much like to see somebody or some body (such as government legislation) take their personal moral viewpoint and do something - morality, I guess individual, free thought has bitten the dust at the ox University of Wind Sore.

Get me straight - I, personally, do not favour abortion, but I would never try to force my own morality with regards to the matter on personal, and philosophically "iffy" on anyone else because I don't think, as some people do, that I have God's divine light or his woman, how about a pleasant smelling bottle of some cheap fragrance?

If there is one person on your Christmas list that you absolutely loathe, how about a suitable game to keep him from Christmas to let you know, and a curt dismissal with a nod of his seemingly empty head.

For all the joys that the Christmas season is supposed to bring, it is indeed unfortunate that there are a few local scrooges who are apparently trying to prove that doing something to help others, and who would rather remain so than give up one cup of coffee or a few seconds away from their card game to listen.

To all of them, then - Merry Christmas, and a long, long idle January from Santa.

And to all the rest of you, from the staff of The Lance, the very best during this Christmas season and always.

Free thought is at a premium- conservatism everywhere

With the Christmas break fast approaching, I thought it appropriate to offer some Yuletide observations, in what we in the trade call a veritable plethora or a jumble of unconnected ideas.

For those of you buried in your books, there are only 11 shopping days 'til Christmas. If you're like me, you're probably thinking about Christmas shopping, so, in an attempt to alleviate some of the pain, I'm going to list some "never fail" gift ideas for that difficult person on your list.

For that grandmother who unfortunately visits only once a year and always, always overstays her welcome, Christmas brings a welcome opportunity to let her know how much you really care. The gift should be something that will remind her of you, something that won't let her forget her last Christmas visit. Keep it simple, and what's more simple than a book of crossword puzzles? Every time the old bat gets stumped over a clue and becomes frustrated she'll think of you and hopefully vow to never visit again.

For that special pest in your life who goes to great pains in November to let you know they have a Christmas gift for you, and every time in return, I have the perfect gift suggestion. Enough of being caught without a gift to give this year, that special someone deserves something that will discourage the enthusiasm for gift giving in future years. A good suggestion is a customized T-shirt with an appropriate derogatory comment emblazoned across the back.

The trend this Christmas is toward electronic games. If there is one person on your Christmas list that you absolutely loathe, how about a suitable game to let them know the year for your gift? It's best to choose the type that always wins, this way that special person will hopefully die of exhaustion.

Enough of gift suggestions - if all else fails, resort to the old "never fail" method, a bottle of some suitable alcoholic stimulant for the man of the house, and for her woman, how about a pleasant smelling bottle of some cheap fragrance?

Before I get huge full of letters complaining that I have no Christmas spirit, I would like you to think about the following question. In case, so send your letters to Tom Snyder of The Tomorrow Show.

It is a well known fact, says Tom, that you set out at Christmas with one idea of appropriate amounts of money on a person as they spend on you. In the end however, according to this theory, because you recoup the amounts you have spent in gifts you receive, Tom says that rather than spend the money, you don't, don't. and avoid all the hassle of Christmas giving and still come out where you started.

One thing that irritates me most about Christmas is the commercialism associated with it. As soon as Thanksgiving is over, all the stores put up their Christmas displays, and all the ads start predating the season. Now, they're bringing up the rear of the conservative bandwagon.

English graduate program under examination

by Wendy Coomber

The university's English graduate program has been subjected to a close official scrutiny this past week, but no one seems too worried.

Dr. David Bevington of the University of Chicago was engaged by the Advisory Committee on Academic Planning (ACAP), a standing committee of the Ontario Council on Graduate Studies (OCGS) to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of the graduate English program.

"I have no concerns at all about our English department," said Dr. Paul Cantone, Vice President, Academic. He went on to say the department is one of the finest and strongest in the country.

According to Dr. Edward Ducharme, head of the English department, the main point of this assessment will be to help the department identify its strengths and weaknesses.

"Initially what they're (ACAP) trying to do is establish, through a number of appraisal techniques, what strengths and weaknesses there are in graduate programs," he said in an interview.

Ducharme said the feeling is that a bad report by Dr. Bevington will result in the provincial government discontinuing our English graduate program is very premature. His report will go back to ACAP, with portals by OCGS and the Council of Ontario Universities (OCU), who will make comments on it to ACAP.

Their consideration of this report will be relative to the reports made on the other Ontario graduate programs being done this year.

Ducharme hopes that when Bevington's report has been finalized and the department receives his findings, the provost will allow the department to fix any weaknesses before other action is taken.

He said this university's Academic Planning Committee's internal audit was helpful in that Bevington asked to see it to aid his own judgement. It showed, these people, said Ducharme, that while they are examining us we are examining ourselves. The general consultant also interviewed Dr. Bevington, his colleague in the English department, and Dr. Cassano to gain more perspective on the department.

Dr. Bevington is one of two general consultants being sent here by ACAP. The report will arrive sometime in January. After they have made their reports, two more planning consultants will look at these reports, plus the report sent to ACAP by the English department which was required by OCGS to begin the examination. With these, they will make their own decisions about the merits of the program as it is and recommendations for its future development.

Anytime you engage in self evaluation one of the consequences may be to understand yourself, better said Ducharme.

Students only raw material

(WINNIPEG) A top-level bank official has told universities they must act in a more corporate-oriented manner to face extinction.

Jack Macdonald, vice president and general manager of the Royal Bank of Canada, told a University of Manitoba audience that universities must act like corporations and must produce what the market demands if they are to survive.

"Earning a BA only means you have mastered the first two letters of the alphabet backwards," he said.

Macdonald said if universities fail to respond to private sector needs, then the companies will train their own employees.

University education is only one aspect of the "lifelong process" of education, he said. While skilled people are the finished product for universities, they are still the raw material of the business world, Macdonald said.

Permits

"It stands to reason," he said, "that car pooling and public transportation are the most economical way to go, and the students will help to improve both."
It's like a market. One big consumer marketplace.

I was sitting on the steps leading to the basement of Eaton's in the subway station. A stampede of Christmas creatures was being herded before me. They moved from the energy of their own greedy hunger of the season.

I thought, this is disgusting. They've lost their very souls. No one is human anymore — it's one box to the next. I envied all the people on the steps, and the entire scene, floats and all. The people with their arms overloaded with bags and boxes, spilling over onto their shoulders and squished between their stomachs, with the aluminium Christmas wrappings and hardy-applied Christmas ribbons flapping as they walked — they really looked like those mechanical floats that pass, slowly and lifelessly, at the Rose Bowl Parade. The people's smiles flashed on and off rhythmically too, as if they were re-charged each few seconds as they stared into some store window or caught the eye of a vague acquaintance. And there were even the Parade Queens — those lovely sales girls, garbed to perfection in their Christmas costumes, with lacquered hair and gleaming Christmas jewels, smiling flawlessly, floating over to help the plebian customers in their regal benignancy.

I thought to myself, I'd rather be watching the football game.

The people's smiles flashed as if in it — it's too synthetic. If people really cared; I thought, this is disgusting. I'll never go back to Eaton's again. They've lost their very soul.

I must have blinked or gasped in astonishment — I hadn't even realized she'd noticed me, alone on the step. She came right up to me, her pudgy little hand outstretched, smiling broadly.

"Here mister," she said, eyes glittering. "Don't be so sad, mister! It's Kissmas!" Then she handed me the penny she had just picked up, and scurried back to her mother's place.

I looked down at the coin in my hand and turned round and round in my pain for a while. Then I glanced over at the little figure near the Laura Secord counter. Suddenly, in her bright red jacket and pointed hood, she looked to me like a magical little elf — one of Santa's real elves! I couldn't help but laugh. She turned to gaze back at me, and returned my smile.

Then I stood up, stretched my cramped legs, and rejoined the crowd.

Noel, Noel

by J.S. Griever

"Mind if I sit here?" Nan looked up somewhat anxiously at the stranger who apparently addressed her, the tall fellow in the empty chair next to her. The tall fellow, Nan had remarked to herself during his performance earlier in the evening in the Dinner/Dance Christmas Eve university event.

"My name's Noel. I'm with the O.U.T.F.T. — Ontario Universities Touring Free Theatre. Started it up three years ago, after I graduated from the School of Drama here in '76. We'll be visiting three more universities this week, then we take the New Year's show on the road. You a drama student?"

"No, I'm a drama student," Noel replied, slowly warming up to this friendly fellow. At least he was someone to talk to for a few minutes; better than sitting all alone and feeling sorry for herself. "Not me. The microscope's my theatre, in fact.

"Oh, ho, ho," Noel laughed. Nan failed to see what was so amusing, and told him so.

"Well, it's just that biology was the last thing I would have guessed you were into. Thought you were into drama, music or English, or something... something in the arts, you know?"

"Not me. The microscope's my theatre, in fact.

Noel smiled and nodded, put his right arm around the back of her chair. They both turned to watch the dancing couples. Red and green strobing lights flashed, glanced off the silver tinsel hung around the banquet hall. A Chinese couple held everyone's attention as they self-consciously executed one graceful movement after another in a complicated dance routine, to a disco version of "I'm Dreaming of a White Christmas." General applause went up through the hall as the couple finished their routine, Noel, his arm around Nan's chairback, took her right hand in his, did the same with her left, and clapped their hands together, Nan laughed and at the same time marvelled at Noel's long, lean "artistic" fingers. Noel didn't let go, but pulled Nan up from her chair and almost dragged her to the dance floor. There was no time for Nan to protest. The tall, leotard-dressed figure drew her along.

The next three songs were slow, Noel drew Nan toward him. Her body brushed against his black-nylon-clad, slim body. She felt some what self-conscious, dancing with this oddly-dressed stranger, but this self-consciousness was replaced with a kind of pride — being seen dancing with one of the actors. Noel was a good lead. Nan held him closer, the better to follow his lead.

Resting her chin lightly on Noel's shoulder, Nan reflected on her Christmases of the past. All twenty of them, to her memory, were spent with her family in Winnipeg. This year would be different. Her parents had flown to Maryborough, Australia, where her father was overseeing a major construction project. Nan would spend Christmas alone at the university residence this year.

Most of the girls and guys in Nan's co-ed residence had gone or were leaving shortly to spend Christmas with their families. Even Nan's Malaysian roommate, Chik Swee, was going back to Sarawak for the month-long, mid-semester vacation. With the exception of a few of her friends from overseas, the residence was nearly vacant. What a contrast to the milling crowd of students two weeks earlier, when each floor enthusiastically vied for the "Outstanding Floor Decor" award. What fun it was to decorate the rooms, hallways and T.V. lounges with tinsel, angels' hair, aerosol snow to play baseball in the T.V. lounges with colourful styrofoam Christmas balls and cardboard gift wrap tubes. Now there was hardly anyone around to admire the efforts and to follow up the good lead.

"Why's that?" Nan shrugged off his question and returned her attention to the dis dancing couple on the floor. He continued.

Surrendering to the circumstances, Nan smiled to herself. Well, that solved her problem about asking him over to her place. Nice while it lasted. Michael hovered at her side.

Choral extravaganza decorates Assumption

by Catherine M. Wilson

Despite the inclement weather, Christmas was brought a little closer to our hearts this past Sunday in Assumption Church through a beautiful vocal concert entitled "A Festival of Christmas". The evening was presented by three area choirs, the Windsor Classic Choir and the Chatham Community Choir and featured a wide variety of Christmas music, from classical to traditional, from sacred to secular.

The University Singers, under the direction of Richard Householder (Assistant Professor of Music and Director of the School of Music), began the evening with "The Christmas Story" by Hugo Distler. This composition seems perfectly suited for the strong, fifty-five member mixed choir. Through song, the choir, soloists and evangelist Carmen Cavallaro told of the birth of Christ from the Angel Gabriel's visit to Mary, to the visit of the wise men to the Christ-Child. Certain chorales were soft, barely above a whisper, while others, such as the "Angels", "Glory to God in the Highest", and the final "Amen" were so beautifully powerful that it brought tears to the eyes.

The University Singers under Richard Householder were one of the three choirs at Assumption Church.

THE CINEMA CRITIC

by George Rasso

The plot is simple. The birth and death of an innocent Florida gator. The location is a small city with a neat sewer system (maybe not!).

(Windsor?) with a neat sewer system (maybe not!).

Well, after you see Alligator, you'll discover that Jaws is a masterpiece. Although Alligator contains all the ingredients that made Jaws a box office smash, it fails to entertain. People again get eaten alive by a pair of incredible jaws. This doesn't happen around a nice sandy beach with blue water and bright sky; these jaws live in a sewer. No sunshine. No clear water. No two-piece bathing suits.

The story is ingenious — a Florida Gator flushed down the toilet by a frustrated daddy, drinks too much Gatorade and grows to a two ton weight and thirty six foot length. It seems a certain scientist had performed experiments on little stolen puppy dogs with a new drug that makes cows grow to the size of elephants.

This same money hungry scientist gets eaten during his wedding party by an alligator who had been exposed to the drug through contact with disposed of dogs in the sewer.

Throughout the movie, all the bad guys get eaten. To add to the excitement, a cop, the mayor, a nosy "Star" reporter, a wild game hunter, and of course a kid all go through the sharp teeth of the beastie.

It ends just like Jaws: a big explosion, with lots of gator guts flying out of the manholes. I wonder why the film industry took so long to come out with movies like this to entertain New Yorkers. Lots of Alligators are rumored to be living in NYC's sewer system for years feeding on fat rats and garbage. Rumors of man eating beasts crawling around the subways are already too old to believe. Where is the filmmakers imagination and taste? If during your long Christmas vacation you get bored to death and you have three-fifty in your pocket, forget this film. You will be much better off to buy 93.50 worth of chintzy granola, stay home and watch "That's Incredible" on your robotomy box.

ORIENTATION

"In the past, all orientations have been a loss. Not this year." Those were the words of John Bernat before this year's Orientation festivities began.

But like other years, the events surrounding the first week of classes did show a loss - to the tune of $8,113.43 of SAC money.

Bernat certainly tried hard. Four months of organization saw over thirty events organized for Orientation week. Many simply were not taken advantage of. The Stingers played in Vanier Hall nightly, sometimes to crowds of below twenty people.

OCTOBER

-The University Players opened their season with The Waltz of the Toreadors, the Grotty-beats, pin to the Beatles, arrived at SAC's.

-The big news of the month however happened in Detroit. Bruce Springsteen, "The Boss", made his long awaited return. Opening his 1980 tour in the motor city, Springsteen found, again, crowds waiting to hear not only his classics, but the new material from his recent release The River.

-The Dublin Corporation appeared at SAC's as part of this year's diversified entertainment. Their one night stand was well received, perhaps this will entice pub management to pursue a return engagement.

Campus radio received a boost when the students voted CJAM an additional $10.00 per student per year fee increase. With this money, CJAM hopes to pursue that long awaited FM broadcasting license.

NOVEMBER

-November saw the return of Cliff Erickson to the University. His one night stand at Huron Hall was quite successful. Let's hope the residence council can follow this president with yet more good entertainment.

-Dan Dingler exhibited his art in the new centre gallery found downstairs in the student centre. Although the gallery is still not totally regarded as what the Fine Art students want, it is still a commendable facility.

-Canada Music Week made its mark on the campus with many good performances by musicians from the School of Music.

DECEMBER

-As the fall term comes to a close, entertainment on campus tapers off. It didn't stop the University Players from manuevering He To Heuba. Originally the play was a Broadway flop, the Players brought it to life on the Essex Theatre stage.

IN THE FUTURE

One thing conspicuously absent from first term's entertainment was events sponsored by the SAC Special Events. There was the occasional movie or beer bash, but with a budget of $7,000 set aside for entertainment my guess is that the SAC coffers still hold a large proportion of that figure.

-Why is it that other universities can provide name entertainment (Harry Chapin, B.B. King, Bob Seger) and Windsor students have to be content to hear Toby Redd? Let's hope Special Events Commissioner Mark LaCasse can come up with some better entertainment this year. In his opening remarks this year, LaCasse welcomed students to make suggestions to him about what Special Events would be welcome on this campus. Don't be afraid to take him up on his offer—he's playing with a large amount of student mon-
A social revolutionary who just left one song unfinished

by Ed McMahon and Pat Sedar

By now everyone knows the simple biographical facts about John Lennon. His birth on October 9, 1940 in Liverpool, his father’s desertion, and the influence his early life had on his music, (and thus the entire world) during the sixties and seventies is commonly referred to as history.

But Lennon the family man, the private man, was someone the world heard rarely, if ever; saw. In a recent Playboy interview, Lennon spoke candidly about his life, death, his marriage to Yoko Ono, the early Beatles, and his most recent album, Double Fantasy, with its hit single, optimistically entitled “Starting Over.”

Lennon was indeed starting over, and his untimely death on Monday, December 8 was more than the death of a rock and roll super-star, that word being so over used. Lennon’s death marked the passing of an era, the end of the world’s hopes that a pop music dynasty that once was, might be again.

Lennon’s influence on the course of history in the sixties and seventies cannot be denied. His death is a tragedy in the most classical sense of the word.

The songs of Lennon and McCartney seem to take on an added poignancy now. Lyrics that were once listened to and sung along with, little regard having been given to the meaning of them, suddenly become very meaningful and in some cases, ironic. It is indeed difficult to think of John Lennon as actually being dead. But though Lennon may be gone in body, he lives on in the hearts and minds of everyone who has been alive during the past twenty years.

Lennon’s recent interview in Playboy, the first extensive interview given in ten years, is a vivid portrayal of the “other side” of Lennon.

Lennon did not like to think of the Beatles as a social phenomenon. He maintained that everyone in the sixties was in the same state of affairs — confused about what was happening and the manner in which their lives seemed to be passing by them with very little ability on their part to control the direction. “I’m not saying that we weren’t flags on the top of a ship; but the whole boat was moving,” he said recently. “Maybe the Beatles were in the crew’s nest shouting ‘Land-ho,’ or something like that, but we were all in the same boat.” His wife, Yoko Ono, elaborated saying “The Beatles themselves were a social phenomenon not that aware of what they were doing.”

But the real influence on the world of songs such as “I Wanna Hold Your hand, Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds, Strawberry Fields Forever, I Am the Walrus, and Happiness is a Warm Gun cannot be denied.

Intentionally or not, the music of John Lennon did influence everyone who heard it — and it was heard by people the world over. Lennon’s early work does not really reflect on the creative genius that was apparent in In My Life. By his own admission, Lennon’s works before that time were simply “I love you baby” themes. Before In My Life, Lennon said, “we were just writing songs a la Everly Brothers, Buddy Holly — pop songs with no more thought to them than that.” But this song marked a transition in Lennon. “It was the first song I wrote that was consciously about my life” he said of In My Life.

The Beatles became the first pop music group to write their own material. Overnight, it seems, they proved that they were more than just a mop haired bunch of kids. Lennon and McCartney showed that rock was a suitable medium for expressing growing concerns about what was going on in their world. That a group such as the Beatles could write sensitive meaningful lyrics and music that had meaning to it. Rock and Roll, through the Beatles, became a social force to be reckoned with.

After In My Life, Lennon’s scope broadened considerably, to culminate finally in his reputation as a political activist.

The most notorious political incident is, of course, John and Yoko’s Bed-in in Toronto. Knowing that their honeymoon could not be a private affair, Lennon and Ono decided that they would use the media to make a commercial for peace on the front page of the papers.” Lennon’s songs of that era are best characterized by Give Peace a Chance.

Shortly thereafter, however, Lennon realized that, although he had meant to leave the Beatles some time earlier, the time had finally come to make the break.

“I had already begun to want to leave, but when I met Yoko it was like when you meet your first woman. You leave the guys at the bar. You don’t go play football anymore. Maybe you do it on a Friday night or something, but once I found the woman the boys became of no interest whatsoever other than being old school friends.”

So Lennon the family man was born.

Lennon painted a picture of himself as a concerned father, Ono as the business end of the relationship, which, he said suited him just fine.

Lennon also came a long way towards dealing with being, as he put it, “a pig.” “It’s a relief not being a pig [male chauvinist].” The pressures of being a pig were enormous.

He also conquered his old image. “I don’t have any hangkering to be looked upon as a sex object, a male, macho, rock’n’roll singer. I got over that a long time ago. I’m not even interested in projecting that.”

In this age where heroes are noticeably lacking, the death of John Lennon, at the stage of his life where he was again prepared to take on the world, to conquer all comers, is the greatest crime of our age.

Lennon was a hero because, long before heroes on television or in the movies were fashionable, in an age where fashion counts for so much, he stood up and spoke out for what he believed was the good of mankind.

And in an age where so little seems to have meaning, John Lennon brought meaning to all of us.

His music, his words, and his message are timeless.

And it is an understatement to say he will be sorely missed. But there seems to be nothing else to say.
Windsor gets first win in season of '80

by Steve Rice

If there were any doubts remaining about the Lancers hockey team before last Saturday, they have been completely obliterated. It was a win for Windsor, perennial also-rans and a team rebounding from a dismal 1-20-1 season last year, stunned the class of the league, the Toronto Varsity Blues, by a score of 2-1 on Toronto's home ice Saturday. It was the first win over Shaw College Saints as it has often been, reaffirming the fact that without his talents the Lancers are nothing.

A variety of presses and zones defenses resulted in numerous turnovers by both teams and a low halftime score of 30-23 in favor of the Lancers. Korosec as always, reaffirmed the fact that without his talents the Lancers would be far less of a team. He repeatedly blocked Shaw shots and grabbed defensive rebounds, while adding key buckets at the other end. Again, it was foul shooting which nearly brought the down fall of Windsor as it had so often this year. Playing for the first time on Canadian soil this season, the Lancers were awarded 45 trips to the charity stripe but could collect only 29 points there. That bothers Grabowski.

"If we win, it's a win, but it was a win," said coach Nick Grabowski after his Lancers picked up an 83-75 overtime win over the Saints the previous weekend at the Shaw College Classic.

Korosec stepped to the line and hit both ends of the bonus and Hermanutz added one for the technical. Seconds after gaining possession, Korosec hit inside to tie the game at 53. The overtime brought a startling transformation to the Lancers as they played with poised control and better, hit on 12 of 14 free shots. And Hermanutz, who had been quiet until that point, came on with a flurry. Hogan put on an impressive performance at the guard spot as he easily cut through the Shaw press and took control of the offense. Hogan has been under rated in the past while playing behind Vincent Landry, now assistant coach, and this year appears ready to take over as a leader on the floor.

"There's no doubt that if Brian can play like he played today, he'll be counted on very heavily," said Grabowski.

The first game of the regular season is Wednesday, Jan. 14 with the Guelph Gryphons. That will be a key one as Windsor and Guelph are expected to battle for top spot in the OUAA West.

Nothing ‘special’ about Bette’s committee

by Ed McMahon

In an address to the House of Commons on November 28, 1980, Minister of Colleges and Universities Dr. Bette Stephen­son announced the formation of a committee to study the future role of the universities in Ontario. The formation of the com­mittee is noteworthy in that its membership excludes any represen­tation by faculty or students.

Dr. Stephenson announced that the committee will consider five areas: a public statement of objectives for Ontario uni­versities in the 1980s; relating the universities, government bodies; and recommen­dations of policy changes.

Automation will continue despite the lack of money

by Wendy Coonter

If Albert Mate, Acting Uni­versity Librarian, has his way we might all be staring into little computer terminals, punching up our index cards in flashing green lights.

And why not? Guelph, Waterloo, and Queens are already working with this on-line automation in their libraries, with Western and Ottawa following close behind.

Mr. Mate says that although the Leddy Library already has some computerized systems he looks to the day when there will be a frame work of computer banks with terminal accesses. It will give better man­agement control over the rec­ords, he says.

The problem is that this idea comes from a report submitted to the Senate by Mr. Mate last summer explaining the Library’s financial “hard times”. Part of the report reads: “With­in the limited resources, the Lib­rary is forced to maintain services, although in a somewhat more tattered and shabbier form than in the stakcs, in the same form as in the past.”

Mr. Mate goes on to cite fig­ures of declining financial sup­port in the sixties, in the form than in the past.”

“People on the committee were chosen for their broad knowledge of institutional system,” he said, refusing to elaborate any further on Dr. Stephenson’s statement to the House of Commons on Nov­ember 28. Linda Woodcock, Public Rel­ations person for the OCUFA, charg­es that university presi­dents or principals are not suffi­ciently representative of the faculties at their respective uni­versities.

In response to the statement, Cummins reiterated that “the presidents are all academics” and that they see the future some way will be found to acquire these new com­puters. Mr. Mate feels the computers in the Library are mostly obscu­rate now and he would like to take advantage of the modern technology and the sooner the better.

Future role of the universities

The Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations (OCUFA) has condemned the Minister’s actions, saying that the committee has been con­­ceived and born in haste,” and that “its legitimacy is question­able and its credibility is sus­pect”.

According to an OCUFA news release dated the same day as the Minister’s speech, OCUFA President Sarah Shorten was “shocked and dismayed.”

“By what definition can five government officials, three heads of univer­sities, and five mem­bers from the corporate elite described as ‘broadly based’?” Shorten asked.

In a telephone interview from Toronto, Roger Cummins, Uni­versity Affairs Officer for the provincial government, stated that the committee was specific­ally mandated so as not to re­present any special interest groups. “The people on the committee were chosen for their broad knowledge of institutional system,” he said, refusing to elaborate any further on Dr. Stephenson’s statement to the House of Commons on Nov­ember 28.

Chinese Students Association dances in the new year

With the "Year of the Rooster" beginning on February 5, the Chinese Students' Association of the University of Windsor will be hosting a cultural festival in the University Centre on Friday, January 30 and Saturday, January 31.

Law comes to Belle River

Supervised law students from the University of Windsor will be providing free legal aid, representation, research and information for the people of the Belle River area every Monday from 4:30 p.m. - 8:30 p.m. in the Belle River Town Hall, beginning January 19, 1981. The objective of Community Legal Aid is to increase the public's awareness and understanding of the law. The service will provide free the fundamental legal services that may otherwise prohibitively expensive to many people.

Community Legal Aid looks forward to serving the Belle River area and invites everyone to take advantage of the service. For further information, call 251-7130.

(ZNS) — If you hate being supervised by a human, you probably won't like this much better.

A Scottish company called Panmac Corporation has invented an automated factory supervisor. When hooked up to a worker, it monitors the rate at which the work is being done in much the same way a speedometer measures how fast a car is moving.

The device, known as "Pam", hooks workers up to sensors and sets targets for the output a firm wants from its employees. The work then becomes more like a game where the employees are trying to beat the target production level. "Pam has not been trained to determine how much stress it produces in the employees it is monitoring.

Swami Girijananda to lecture on human awareness

Swami Girijananda is one of the few Western women to have been initiated into the ancient Sarawati order of orange-clad monks, a lineage that dates back to 8th century India.

Formerly Jo An Morton, she grew up in Ann Arbor and graduated in 1961 from the College of Wooster, Ohio, in English Literature and Philosophy. This was followed by a two year period spent teaching as a member of the Peace Corps in rural Ethiopia. Jo An then returned to her home town to complete a Masters degree in Anthropology at the University of Michigan, where she was also a teaching fellow. She was married during this time.

A growing interest in Indian philosophy led her and her husband to India in 1970 where she met the dynamic and widely respected meditation master, Swami Muktananda. For three and a half years, they were resident at Muktananda's International Headquarters near Bombay, studying philosophy, meditation and all the classical branches of yoga. In 1974, at the time of Swami Muktananda's Second World Tour, Girija and Shankar, as they now were called, were sent to set up and direct Muktananda's first Ashram, or residential spiritual community, in the Western World. This Ashram has now established itself as a major meditation and yoga center for the entire Midwest, offering public programs, courses and weekend workshops.

Since 1975, Girijananda has travelled extensively throughout the US, Canada and even South America, giving literally hundays of public lectures and workshops on Yoga and Meditation. Recently, during Swami Muktananda's Third World Tour, she completed a well-received lecture tour of the East Coast.

In November, 1980, she was formally initiated into the same monastic order as that of her meditation master and her husband. She was given the name Swami Girijananda, which means "bliss of the Creative Mother of the Universe.

Swami Girijananda's presence and expertise has the effect of bringing meditation easily to everyone. She is a captivating speaker with deep understanding and a great ability to make things clear. Her eleven years of daily yoga and meditation have made her grounded, lively and clear.

Sororities could be facing a revival here soon

by Wendy Coomber

Delta Chi’s “little sisters” want a house of their own.

The Chi Delphias are seven young women affiliated with the campus’ only fraternity, Delta Chi. The women are friends of courage other women to check the frats and often help the men out at their campus events and provide a little public relations for them, encouraging others to see what fraternity life is all about. Now they want to encourage other women to check out sorority life.

“It’s not an overnight thing,” says Delta Chi member Jim Boyer. Boyer mentioned the sorority idea to the women last year and says the actual fact of a campus sorority might still be a couple of years down the road.

The women are seeking anyone interested at all right now. According to Jim Boyer, “You have to go with maybe 15 or 20 people if you want to establish a sorority.”

Dawn O’Connell, one of the Chi Delphias, says they will be talking to people soon to find more prospective members. “I don’t think many people even know about it yet,” she said, noting the recruitment of their own friends while at the same time trying to spread the word to the rest of the campus.

Ms. O’Connell cited one of the main benefits of sorority life as being “everyone looks after everyone else.” The requirements for membership were established as anyone the women could get along with as well as being fully dedicated to making the sorority a better place to live.

Dedication is what makes a sorority or a fraternity live. Without the desire to see the “house” flourish and become better it can die like most of the sororities and fraternities in Windsor did in the early seveneties. In the sixties Windsor had about four sororities and six fraternities but due to their insular natures, keeping to themselves and not attracting any new members, they disappeared and left Delta Chi as the only fraternity here by the mid-seventies.

To become a sorority the little sisters will first have to dwell in colony life for a while. They must find a sponsoring sorority, most likely in the United States since they all originate there, to help buy them a house and to initiate them into the group. The women must show their prospective sorority they are a cohesive group and are willing to take on the responsibilities of being a sorority which includes bringing new members into the house to ensure its continuity.

It was pointed out in an interview with the Delta Chi members involved that continuation of new members would always be a problem because of the similarity of the members—the same faculties, age, interests—so when graduation time came everyone would leave the house. This led Ms. O’Connell to comment it would be very good if the members of the new sorority were from all different faculties.

Movin’ on up

Full-time enrollment at Ontario’s 22 community colleges has increased 11.6 per cent over last year while enrollment at the province’s 15 universities, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, and the Ontario College of Art, has increased 3.6 per cent.

Minister of Colleges and Universities Dr. Bette Stephenson said that registration of full-time students in colleges of applied arts and technology (CAATs) was 103,238, up approximately 11,000 over last year. The increase is comprised of 6,000 more students in post-secondary programs, and 5,000 more students in adult training and apprenticeship programs.

Preliminary figures show that full-time enrollment at the universities, Ryerson and OCA is 160,113, an increase of about 5,000 students. Part-time enrollment at universities was 89,456, up 5.1 per cent.

From July to October, part-time CAAT students rose to 237,491, an increase of 9.7 per cent over the same period last year. Because college full-time programs and part-time courses vary greatly in length, the precise growth in college enrollment cannot be measured until enrollment is audited at year-end.
Committee destined for failure

Ontario's Minister of Colleges and Universities, Dr. Bette Stephenson, has done it again. Bumbling along from catastrophe to disaster, she has set up a 13-person (with an odd numbers) committee to study the future role of the universities in Ontario. Dr. Stephenson would have us believe that the members of the committee were picked for the "system-wide and institutional knowledge", and that they don't represent "special interest groups". And they are listed in her address to the House of Commons as "the members of the committee will be". There's no room for debate.

Yet one look at the members of the committee will reveal that they do indeed represent a number of special interest groups - most notably the Ontario Council on University Affairs, big business, and university administration. The latter two, especially, are not noted for their actions in the best interests of students at all times.

The list of who is on the committee is terribly reminiscent of something Orwell might have written. 3 members from the provincial government, the President of Thomson newspaper Limited, the Director of Southam Incorporated, the President of Corporate Relations to the President of Western Ontario, the President of Lakehead University, and the Chairman of Noranda Mines, and the Chairman of the Guaranty Trust Company of Canada to round out the big business side; 3 members of universities administration (either presidents or principals of their respective institutions); and 2 professors ostensibly to represent the faculty viewpoint.

These are the people who are determining the role the universities in Ontario will play in the lives of present and future students as we move into the eighties. Students are not the only qualification for membership. The request was for six unique scientist/businessmen to round out a research team. The team's task was to design, build and bring into production a Hydrogen/Oxygen fuel cell of such excellence that further optimization is not economically practical. Any one interested should contact K.Y. Surlyka, 1978-3107 in Toronto. You don't even have to go to California.

If you are worried about the future of Ontario universities in the 80's, than those that will be attending them. In the words of one faculty member at the University of Windsor, "If there is no equity for universities, and the persons directly involved must have a voice."

"If there is no (less than five committee members chosen for their experience with universities, rather than to represent "special interest groups")..."

And although only one member of the committee is officially listed as being from the OCUA, there are no less than five committee members who are affiliated with the organization.

"If that is indeed the basis on which they were chosen, one would have no choice but to conclude that the Honourable Dr. Stephenson has failed in her task. How much more special interest can you get?"
Student journalists just a little bit too eager?

Dear Editor:

I am glad that there is still justice in this university at all. I read the letter from Mike Anderson in the December 11 issue. Since easily in October, you, Mr. Editor, have used pages of The Lance to attack the SAC. I find it very interesting to note your reports only come from some unverifiable sources or your personal opinion.

Concerning the SAC, my opinion is that the SAC can only be an extension of the studentship and has no authority other than what is assigned to it by the student body. The SAC can only act as a entre between the students and the administration. It is the students' right to select their leaders and to demand the fulfillment of their demands. The SAC should only act on the request of the student body. The student body should be consulted before any action is taken. We are talking about the studentship here, not the SAC.

You may recall the problems the administration had with our own engineering newspaper, The Essex, last year. The paper was the object of a lawsuit and complaints concerning "the blatantly sexuality of the paper, the use of pseudonyms, the plagiarism of articles and material from other publications and the use of the University's name in the paper's masthead."

Since that time, under the guidance of an ad hoc advisory committee set up to look into the matter, The Essex has had no complaints brought against it. However, one of its brethren, the Toike Okie at the University of Toronto, has remained a continuing source of concern.

Last year Andrea Knight, Students Administrative Council woman's commissioner, colclected editions of the Toike that she considered offensive and brought them to the attention of James Ham, U of T Students Council president. One issue included "Teenage Necrophilic" which she said "makes a joke of violence against women". Not much has changed...

Prohibiting distribution on campus of the Toike Okie, the Engineering Society publication, has been suggested by the Chairperson of the Ontario Human Rights Commission in a recent letter to U of T President James Ham.

The Dec. 5 letter from Doro-thesa Grintanen states that "the contents of the Toike Okie fall beyond the acceptable standards set by a community which endeavours to foster the dignity and worth of all our people, regardless of their race, sex, or ethnic background."

The letter is in response to an information package prepared by the U of T Status of Women Committee (UTSWC). UTSWC has criticized the Toike in the past, pointing to such features as the 1976 article on rape describing rape victims as "just begging to be raped!". The article goes on to speculate whether women achieve "sexual satisfaction during the episode."

In an interview yesterday, Ham asserted that he lacked the power to ban distribution of the Toike on campus, adding that this could only be dealt with by Governing Council. He pointed out, however, that UTSWC and the Toike have been recently involved in discussions with a view to transforming the nature of the publication, and that he would prefer to stay any action pending the outcome.

Ham indicated that if the Toike did not improve its "lowest common denominator" journalism, then the possibility of banning distribution could be looked at again.

Dave Thompson, current editor of the Toike, declined comment on the letter pending consultation with his fellow editors.

He pointed out, though, that a "changed Toike" was being planned, under the direction of past editor Bob Moults, and that the tentative date for the first issue of this new incarnation is Jan. 21. An issue of the unchanged Toike will probably come out this week.

When asked whether the new Toike would really be different, Thompson replied, "I'm not too sure myself. I haven't seen any new material yet." Bob Moults could not be contacted by press time for comment.

W omen Alexander, Vice-President for Personnel and Student Affairs, said he hoped the affair could be settled by negotiation pointing to the meeting just before Christmas between Dean Gordon Slomon of Engineering and representatives of UTSWC. Alexander considered it "premarital" to contemplate banning distribution of the Toike, given the possibility of its "changing direction dramatically."

Alexander indicated that a meeting would probably take place in the next week or two, bringing together UTSWC, Slomon, the Toike and the Engineering Society, to further discuss the issues involved.

Maureen Kelly, UTSWC spokesperson, said that UTSWC was calling a meeting of its members to discuss the letter from the Human Rights Commission, and would comment later.

Back at the Human Rights Commission, Executive Of-Ricer Howard Jones confirmed that there has been no reply as yet from U of T, but, he added, "We're hoping for one."

Newspapers are only in it for the money

WINNIPEG (CUP) — "I say it's spinach, and to hell with it," said Walter Stewart commenting on newspaper journalism since the Thomson and Southam takeovers of last summer.

Speaking at a center for investigative journalism seminar in Winnipeg, Stewart said, "Newspaper proprietors now feel they have only one task and that is to make money.

"There was a time when newspapers felt they had a dual function. One was to come up with great news stories and the other was to make a little money, now they just want to make the money," Stewart said.

"The best way to make a really big heap of money is to fill the nation with one newspaper towns, and fill those papers with wire-copy, soft news, and gossip," Stewart said.

"Market surveys determine what the readers want, and editors deliver horoscopes, celebrity recipes, and other junk journalism," he said.

Author of Paper Juggernaut and Canada's Newspapers: The Inside Story, and former columnist for FP Publications, Stewart talked on the subject of media monopolies, and the impact of closures on Canadian newspapers.

On September 25, 1979, the Montreal Star was shut down and "The stage was set for the elimination of competition in this country," Stewart said.

FP sold its assets of the Star, which included its buildings and press to Southam, he said.

"If anyone else wanted to join the newspaper race in Montreal they were going to find that the horse, saddle, blanket, and shoes, had already been sold to the front runner," he said.

Newspaper proprietors soon learned the lesson that a two newspaper city creates competition and, Stewart said, "Competition costs money – eliminating competition makes money."

The national collapse of competition was assured when, three months later, FP Publications was taken over by Thomson. Now there were only two newspaper chains.

"The FP chain was completely Thomsonized," said Stewart. "The accountants took over and the journalists gave up."

On August 27, the roof caved in, Stewart said, when the Winnipeg Tribune and Ottawa Journal were closed.

Stewart explained that on this day the "Miracle of cross-subsidization" disappeared. Chains use to argue there was no danger in chain ownership because with cross subsidization papers like the Edmonton Journal, which was making money, could support the papers that weren't making money, like the Winnipeg Tribune, Stewart said.

Cross subsidization died the day the Tribune died, and on that day the myth that Canadian print journalism was good also died, Stewart said.

Thomson and Southam are presently under investigation by the Kent Commission for violations of the Combines Act.

Carleton's radio will not intentionally obscene

OTTAWA (CUP) — Listeners of Carleton University's student radio station have nothing to fear.

Station manager Craig Mackie said CKCU-FM announcers will still be given the freedom to choose their own music despite recent complaints about "obscene lyrics" played over station's air waves.

The first complaint, just before Christmas, was over the Mary Ann Faithful song, "Why'd ya do it?". Mackie said the announcer, who also does the station's religious programming, got a request for the song at 2 am and played it, not knowing the lyrical content.

The listener was later sent an apology and has since stated he will not complain to the Canadian Radio Television and Telecommunication Commission (CRTC) which is holding a license renewal hearing for the station in February.

The second incident happened early in the new year when a listener was startled to hear references to male sexual organs during the playing of a comedy album.

Mackie said an apology has been sent, although the woman did not contact the station. She did contact a local newspaper and the university administration.

"It's not our policy to broadcast offensive and obscene material," said Mackie. "It's just one of the risks you take with free form radio."

The Grottybeatles?

by Peter Hagger

Some people will believe anything they read!

Thirteen years ago when they told you Paul McCartney was dead you probably thought the world was going to end. wasn’t it obvious with “Strawberry Fields” and “I Am The Walrus” that the Beatles were no longer the same group of licentious Liverpudlians?

Boy did they fool you! After a court appearance or two, it was proved to the world that Paul really was alive and breathing English air. They called it a publicity stunt!

Now they are trying to tell you that John is gone. I bet you all fell into the trap for a second time. They say some dingbat shot him. Well, at least it is more believable than a car accident.

The Lance has learned exclusively (we visited the pub) that John is actually alive and well and living in the basement of our editorial suite.

In fact, the story is better than that! The Beatles are back together! Don’t be fooled by the fact that SAC’s band calls themselves the Grottybeats, I know better. Remember, we reporters are trained to look for those kind of things.

Yes, on that fateful day, ten years ago when Paul went to the press saying it was all over, he was lying. As you can clearly see from these exclusive photographs the Fab Four are still around. Notice the striking resemblances in the comparative pictures?

If that isn’t a give away, consider these facts. How many Beatles were there? How many Grottybeats are there? Huh? Huh?

Think of the music they’ve been playing all week in the pub. I’m sure that at least one long sounds like something Lennon/McCartney wrote.

I hope I’m breaking these amazing facts to you gently enough. You should be thankful you have ace reporters like me to expose such things. Now for the real shocker! That isn’t really Ringo behind the drums. Through a careful study done in our science laboratory, The Lance has discovered that the present drummer is actually two inches shorter than the original Richard Starkey.

Our biggest clue was when we found the real Ringo crouched in a secluded corner of Windsor Hall muttering something about “Deceptionists”.

Alas, no more will we hear the gentle strains of “You’re sixteen, you’re beautiful, and you’re mine . . . . . . .”

W4 rocks Detroit no longer

by Bill Buchannan

On Sunday morning, January 18th, thousands of rock and roll fans turned their stereo dials to 106 FM - only to find the sounds of country music on the airwaves.

The switchboard at WWWW began to light up, with faithful listeners complaining that they weren’t receiving W4’s rock and roll music. They thought that something must be wrong - they were receiving country music on a station that’s been predominantly rock since 1972.

Sorry, rock fans. There’s no mistake. WWWW has officially changed to a country and western format.

The Lance contacted Lori Converse, Program Assistant at W4 in order to learn why the station has made such an abrupt change.

“It was strictly a management decision,” Converse told The Lance. “Some of our staff weren’t aware of the change until they showed up for work on Sunday morning.”

Most employees reacted differently to the change, but some were annoyed. Converse revealed that no employer, disc jockey or otherwise has quit thus far. She said that those employees who did not like the change would just have to “go through a period of adjustment”.

As far as one-time country-hater Howard Stern feels, Converse said that Howard would “stick it out” for a while and “see what he thinks”. But why the change?

“There are so many rock or contemporary music stations, so we decided to start a new service for the city,” Converse explained.

Converse also pointed out that country-western relies on ballads and on news in order to stabilize the overall format.

“Our ratings for the end of December, weren’t real hot. We’re hoping that the format change will keep our ratings stable.”

Many surmised that Detroit rival station WILZ played a role in WWWW’s format change. Converse told The Lance that having so many rock stations in Detroit was starting to “exhaust” rock. The abundance of rock stations began to fragment the listening audience causing it to be an “up and down” business. At the present time, WWWW is not concerned with the competition, only stability.

Converse says that former rock fans have reacted to the change, but the degree of their reaction depends on many factors such as their dedication to rock, and simply their loyalty to the station.

As for all the rock memorabilia?

“We still have all our albums,” Converse explained. “We put them all in boxes and we’re storing them away. As for the pictures, we can always have country printed on them.”

Is that because the writer wanted to move like a train, or is it because, like every other song on the album, they had to fit it into three and a half min­utes? Next to "Letter From Hiro," "Sixty Second Interval" is prob­ably the best song. It begins quite slow and melodic, like a love song, describing the moon and stars, and then moving onto a scene something like the trenches in World War I. THE VAPORS:

by Wendy Coomber

The Vapors were in the "pin . . . sorry, "new wave" section of the record shop so I bought their album. I could have thrown away eight dollars on garbage. I could have. The truth is, my brother, Terrance the Unsteady was 27 this week and what he wanted was a pun ... new wave album. So I closed my eyes, knowing very little about the sound, and picked. Besides, I thought the song entitled "Letter From Hiro" looked interesting. What I thought I was getting was The enterprising demands of the propelling Jethro Tull towards the type of song I would expect about communication lapses. What I thought I was getting was Anarchism. What I got was love out of the way first. Not exactly what I expected of communication breakdowns that lead to them. little messages on nuclear atti­tudes. "New Clear Days" doesn't expect a band quite like the Spy's. Their single (available also in the University of Windsor Bookstore) serves as a good memento of this great band.

Spy's come out of hiding

by Cecilia Deck

The 9-month legacy of the Spy's has been captured on vinyl. Their single — "Under­ground / Machine Shop" — was released at record stores in December, two months after the band's demise.

This is an historic disc in that it will probably be the only one ever to come out of Wind­ sor's new wave scene. But it is also a fine record in its own right, with two good, original, up-tempo tunes. Although the production quality on "Machine Shop" leaves something to be desired, on the whole both sides sound better than you would ex­pect from a local band, at a local studio.

The Spy's garnered a sup­risingly large cast of supporters during their brief existence. They played just about any­where that new music was being played — Emanuelle's, J.P .'s, the Cola­bria, Donlon Hall, and the Uni­versity.

Although they have broken up, the Spy's are offering a small memento.

They combined some of the raw elements of the 1977 Punk Rock revolution with fun, danceable sounds from the six­ties. This mixture can be heard on the single, where pseudo-relevant lyrics appear on a back drop of fast, pop accompani­ment. Live, they played ver­sions of the Clash's "Jan­Jones" side-by-sides with Nancy Sinatra's "Boots," or Chris Mon­ton's "Let's Dance." Yet there need be no contradiction in this bridging of the decades; it is only logical that a new wave in music should be a dance revolu­tion after the hum-drum of 70's heavy metal.

"We were a respectable band" says lead singer Frank Carlone. Indeed, they did not adopt the terrorist antics of the early punk-rockers, best left in 1977. Their somewhat different straightforwardsly with good, tight musicianship.

Windsor will probably never again yield a band quite like the Spy's. Their single (available also in the University of Windsor Bookstore) serves as a good memento of this great band.

You dress to kill

For shame. Also, "Turning Jap­anese" has the same off-the-wall theme as Queen's "Somebody to Love," although this song is equally funny. By the e nd of the song, the singer ponders life

"Spring Collection," while not one of their singles, is also a fine record in its own right, with the Spy's having a side-by-side with Nancy Sinatra's "Boots," or Chris Mon­ton's "Let's Dance." Yet there need be no contradiction in this bridging of the decades; it is only logical that a new wave in music should be a dance revolu­tion after the hum-drum of 70's heavy metal.

Volleyballers sixth

by Chris Legerbow

The Lancaster volleyball team finished with an 8-4 record in the University of Waterloo Invitation tournament last weekend to take sixth place overall.

Windsor was ranked fifth going into the 12-team tournament with the attending teams representing outstanding volleyball pool areas from as far as Guadalajara, Mexico and among Canadian teams, Halifax.

Windsor began play by splitting their two-game match with McMaster, 15-10, 4-15. The following two matches were much closer and the Lancasterettes defeated Brock handily, 15-5, 15-6 and Sherbrooke, 15-12, 15-9.

The greatest surprise of the day was Windsor's near defeat of eventual champions Dalhousie. But the Lancasterettes finally lost their hold on the Halifax team, which boasts two national team members, and went down to defeat 12-15, 2-15.

The Dalhousie coach commented following the game that she had not seen a team play better defense than Windsor.

Windsor opened Saturday's play with a 15-10, 15-4 win over Laurier and a 5-15, 7-15 loss to a very spirited host club Waterloo.

The final match of the tournament was against Western and the teams split 11-15, 15-8. In league games, the Lancasterettes lost to Waterloo Jan. 15 by scores of 10-15, 5-15, 15-17, while defeating Laurier 15-8, 15-5, 13-8, the same day.

Windsor now stands 6-5 in league play.

Runners continue hot pace inside

by Scott McIlloch

Several members of the University of Windsor track team competed over the Christmas holidays at indoor meets in London and Toronto.

Andy Buckstein set a new University of Windsor record of 3:16.3 in the 1500 metre race. Buckstein was ranked 17th at the UMIL invitational in Michigan on Jan. 15. Paul Konkol ran a personal best of 3:20.6 in the same event.

Paul Roberts competed in the 1500 metres for the UMIL invitational in Michigan on Jan. 16. Paul Konkol ran to a personal best of 3:20.6 in the same event.

Paul Roberts placed third in the 1000 metres for the UMIL invitational in Michigan on Jan. 16. Paul Konkol ran to a personal best of 3:20.6 in the same event.

Paul Roberts placed third in the 1500 metre and 5 mile races and Ray Holland competed in the one mile event. "I was not pleased with my times," said Roberts of his 4:06.3 and 15:15.9 clockings.

A week earlier, at the Michigan Open in Detroit, Roberts placed fourth in the 880 yards in 2.00.9. Although faster than the existing University record, the time will not count as a new record because the meet was not an official University meet. The same was true for Henry Eldracher's third place, 51.8 time for 440 yards. Eldracher also competed in the 600 meters placing fourth in a time of 1:16.3.

The first meet of the season for Windsor athletes was a Western all-conference meet in London on Jan. 3, in which Eldracher finished fourth in both the 300 m. and the 1000 m. with times of 38.0 and 2.37.4 respectively.

Paul Roberts placed third in the 1000 m. in 3:53.3. On the distaff side, Kathy Rice, running in the women's 3000 m., placed third.

Although the indoor season has started, one team member is still competing outdoors. Linda Staadt left for Bermuda Wednesday, where she will be running in the invitational marathon Sunday.

The rest of the team will be competing Saturday at the University of Michigan, not at York University in Toronto as was previously planned.

Q. What do you get when you pour hot water down a rabbit hole?
A. Hot, cross bunnies.
Two home losses

Pucksters lucky to get out alive

It was an ugly incident. The kind of behaviour that has no place in University sport, according to Lancers coach Bob Corran.

So with 12:14 left to play in the Lancers’ contest with Guelph Sunday at Adie Knox Arena, Corran pulled his team off the ice after Don Martin was slashed across the size of the neck by Guelph’s Ross Bowden.

Bowden received a two-minute slashing penalty and Corran, feeling that was not enough measure, removed his players from the game in order to protect them.

“It was clear that the referee was not going to protect our players,” Corran said. “By only giving him (Bowden) two minutes, the referee was saying to Guelph, ‘You can do anything you want.’ And given the attitude of many of the Guelph players, it’s worth two minutes to them to go out and do that sort of thing.”

An OUAA board made a decision on the game early Thursday and ruled that neither team would be reprimanded for their actions in the game and the final score at the Lancers’ exit, 5-1 for Guelph, would stand.

In no way, they made a ruling in our favour,” Corran said. “By not penalizing us, they said that what we did was right. ·

“I loudly applauded them for their maturity and conviction in what the league stands for,” Corran said. “The league is essentially educational and what happened Sunday was not educational.”

The loss was the seventh straight for the Lancers at home against no wins. Windsor also fell to Waterloo 3-1 at Adie Knox Arena Saturday.

John Ivan scored the lone Lancer goals in both games. Meanwhile, the Lancers have been nearly unbeatable on the road with their only loss coming in Waterloo Nov. 7. Their road record is 6-1-1 to make their overall record 6-8-1, placing them eighth in the 12-team league.

Two of those road wins came easily in the new semester in Sudbury where Windsor downed the Laurentian Voyageurs by scores of 7-4 and 6-3.

The Lancers will face Guelph again Saturday in Guelph and the team has considered not participating in that game unless assurances are made that there will be no repeat of Sunday’s violence.

Windsor will meet McMaster tonight in Hamilton.

Sabre team captures title at York Invitation

by Peter Haggett

The University fencing team began their season with some success on Jan. 10-11 at the York Invitation Fencing tournament.

The Sabre team, composed of Peter Ott, Wayne Walczak and Dave Marsh captured the Sabre team championship. Although no individual awards were given, Peter Ott was an overall champion losing only one of eleven individual bouts.

In winning the championship, Windsor had to twice defeat the defending OUAA champions from the University of Toronto. Coach Eli Sukunda however, was not pleased with their overall performance.

“They scraped through,” Sukunda said. “It was obvious that our fencers were better than the other teams, yet we only had one or two convincing wins.”

Windsor also took two foil teams and an epee team consisting of three members each to the tournament. For some of the fencers, the meet provided them with their first taste of fencing competition. Although none of the teams advanced to the play-offs, the experience proved invaluable.

“These tournaments give the fencers the confidence of experience,” Sukunda said. “Every-time they fence they become a little more sure of themselves.”

You can teach them things over time they fence they become a fighter. There were numerous delays holding up the foil competition and Sukunda was quick to note the added stress this puts on the fencers.

“When you have to worry about losing penalty points due to faulty equipment as well as your actual bout you can’t expect to do very well. Our team has the capability, it’s a matter of concentration, practice and cleaning up faulty equipment right now. When it comes time for OUAA competition we’ll be ready,” promised Sukunda.

Last weekend at the Wayne State Championship, Lancer prowess was in evidence. Facing relentless opposition in Wayne State (defending American University Champions), Bowling Green, Michigan, Michigan State and University of Detroit the Lancers finished a surprising second.

Again Peter Ott was outstanding, going undefeated in fifteen matches.

The Lancers are now preparing to host the OUAA Far West Championship this weekend in the dance studio at the Human Kinetics Building starting Saturday at 9:00 a.m.
The Lancers opened their season with an impressive 90-82 overtime win over their primary competition in the OUAA West, the Guelph Gryphons.

Windsor trailed 45-35 at the half.

Stan Korosec led the attack with 31 points while centre Rick Dundas added 22.

The unusual statistic in the contest was that the Gryphons hit a phenomenal 3 of 49 field goals while the Lancers connected on just 18 of the 82 shots they threw up. The small number of shots by Guelph can be attributed in part to a tough Lancer defence that made them choose their shots carefully.

"We've said all along that our defence was going to win it for us," commented head coach Nick Grubowski. "Defence won it for us tonight."

"But I think we answered one question tonight," added Grubowski, "and that is we can shoot from outside, but we can't rely on it. We have to get the ball inside more."

Windsor's outside shooting put them out front by an 8-2 score early in the game, but when it went sour, the result was a 10-point halftime lead for Guelph. Korosec scored only four points in the first half.

The return to the inside game was obvious immediately at the start of the second half as Korosec nailed six straight points. And when he dropped in a reverse layup at 9:49 and drew the foul for the three-point play, the score was tied at 62.

The Lancers led 80-78 with time running out when Herman- matsu was called for travelling—probably one of the top 10 worst calls of OUAA history since he was surrounded by three men all sawing at his arms. That gave the ball to Guelph under the Lancer basket with five seconds left where Mike Sesto snuck from behind two of his teammates to take the inbounds pass underneath and force the Lancers to win in overtime.

Mac '83 Lancers 81

The Lancers blew leads of 16 points in the first half and 15 points in the second half as they were upset by McMaster Marauders 83-81 Saturday in Hamilton.

Windsor held the second half lead eight minutes remaining in the game when they dropped back into a zone defence to protect John Ritchie with four fouls and Stan Korosec with three.

At that point, Marauders Marc Dubois and Jim Hoyle got hot and took advantage of the relaxed Lancer defence. Dubois finished with 28 points, Hoyle with 27.

"They kept hustling all the time," said assistant coach Vince Landry. "We should have given them more pressure on defence by coming out of the zone."

Head coach Nick Grubowski echoed the same feelings, but felt that the Marauders must have had four leaf clovers in their back pockets most of the game.

"In any game you have to have a little bit of luck," Grubowski said. "Tonight we didn't have any and McMaster did. Of course, we missed too many free throws, too."

Windsor hit just 17 of 30 free throws in the game, including 11 of 21 in the second half. Stan Korosec led the Lancers with 22 while Phil Hermansutz added 21.

Lancers 85 Warrior 75

A new foul shooting drill installed in Lancer practices this week by Vince Landry produced marked improvement in a regular season OUAA match with Waterloo Wednesday night.

Veterans Stan Korosec (50) and John Ritchie (44) of Windsor and Guelph's Rick Dundas (34) give freshman Ron Henry (13) a lesson in rebounding which Windsor won 85-75.

At the drill goes, each player shoots three foul shots with a number of laps equal to the number of missed foul shots being run by the team. According to Landry the drill, which is run twice a day, increases the players' concentration at the line, a statement which is borne out by the fact that the Lancers hit on 23 of 28 shots from the line in Wednesday's game.

That factor was clearly the difference in the game when it is considered that the Warriors connected on five of their only eight trips to the line. And as far as a somewhat disgruntled Waterloo coach Don McCrae was concerned, the difference was unqualified.

"I hope Korosec wasn't bruised," remarked McCrae sarcastically. "The officials did a good job with the other parts of the game, but I have to disagree with the way the inside game was called."

McGee took down 10 rebounds since he was surrounded by three men all sawing at his arms. That gave the ball to Guelph under the Lancer basket with five seconds left where Mike Sesto snuck from behind two of his teammates to take the inbounds pass underneath and force the Lancers to win in overtime.

If it's the issue in the game, it has to be well-called. And with the ball, the home game is always the issue," Stan Korosec again led the Lancers with 30 points including eight of nine at the free throw line. John Ritchie and Phil Hermansutz added 14 apiece.

Crusaders triumph

In a preliminary game to the Jan. 14 matchup between the Lancers and Guelph Gryphons, the junior varsity Crusaders defeated a Toledo recreational league team 112-99.

The Crusaders had trailed 60-45 at the half before wearing down the more elderly team with a fast paced run-and-gun game.

Gu Kandias paced the winners with 30 points. Larry Longbach added 18 and Jeff Dyck 17.

Ailing Lancerettes still winning

by Sue Hrycay

The Lancerettes are well into the second half of their schedule and have posted a 3-1 record since the break.

The most recent win came Saturday in the only league game to date, a home start against Queen's. Windsor dominated the first half of play and led the Golden Gaels by a 16-17 score at the intermission before coasting to the 65-47 win.

The Lancerettes now stand at 4-2 in league play and hold a firm grip on second place in Tier II behind the undefeated McMaster Marauders.

Top scorers for Windsor were Mary Hrycay with 14 points and Kerri Towers with 12. Therese McGee took down 10 rebounds in the win.

Injuries continue to plague the team and have reduced the roster to just eight players. Despite this, the remaining Lancerettes rallied to play one of the finest games seen in St. Denis Hall in a number of years.

"The four guards: Mary Hrycay, Kerri Towers, Kit Kelly and Mary Brannagan, have become the stabilizing force for the team," coach Sue Swain is concerned, the difference was unmatched.

"I hope Korosec wasn't bruised," remarked McCrae sarcastically. "The officials did a good job with the other parts of the game, but I have to disagree with the way the inside game was called."

Community College of Port Huron, Mich., Kit Kelly poured in 14 points and Diane Minello 11 in the losing cause.

Windsor's third win came in a matchup with cross-town rivals, St. Clair College. The Lancerettes romped to a 67-37 victory as Tracy McNair hit for 13 points, Diane Minello and Kerri Towers 12 each and Mary Hrycay 10.

Due to a quirk in scheduling, the Lancerettes will play the rival Villiter of their games at home. Why not take in a few games?
OUAA championship unlikely; West will not be won easily

Coach Nick Grabowski
by Steve Rice

On paper, the Lancers look good. Maybe as good as they were two years ago when they took the OUAA championship with an 80-78 upset of York. And they’re probably as good, if not better than last year when they won the OUAA West despite strong challenges from Guelph and Waterloo.

The biggest loss the team suffered this year was the loss through graduation of guard Vince Landry who has moved up (down?) to assistant coach of the team. Landry was a three-all-star whose spectacular drives and long-range bombs were only the tip of the iceberg as far as his importance to the team was concerned.

Laney was a leader, the quarterback, the guy who could control the flow of a game to spark a comeback or slow down a game getting out of hand. So far this year, no such player has emerged in that role and that may tell the tale as the team moves into the playoffs.

If anyone, Brian Hogan is the heir apparent to Landry’s throne and he has exhibited a high degree of skill in the art of court organization. Yet Hogan and the rest of the team have also shown a disturbing tendency to toss up wild shots, often at crucial moments in the game. Blowing a 16 point lead with eight minutes left in the game, as Windsor did against McMaster, is not the mark of a championship team.

Most of the Lancers’ success will depend upon 6’9’’ centre Stan Korosec and the ability of his teammates to get the ball to him. Korosec, last year’s OUAA West MVP and OUAA co-MVP, has scored 83 points in the team’s first three games and figures to add a lot more before the year is done.

Windsor is currently ranked eighth in the CIAU, but another team from the OUAA West is ranked sixteenth and rightfully so, the Gryphons. Guelph returns the best back-court in the league with Mike Setto and Tom Heslop and will be equally strong up front with Nick Donetas, Peter Smith and Derrick Lewis, now eligible after transferring from St. Mike’s where he helped his team to the national championship.

True, Windsor defeated the Gryphons in the home opener 90-82. But this is not to say that Guelph may be all that is needed to put the Lancers out of the all-important first place in the West. Since winning in Guelph (Feb. 6) will be no mean feat.

The first-place finisher receives a by in the first round of the playoffs in which all seven teams compete. They then hold home-court advantage for the four-team tournament which follows the first round. For Windsor, home-court may be the key, as there is little doubt of their abilities in St. Denis Hall (or the inabilities of opposing teams). But the Lancers will find it tough to win on the road this year, both during the season and the playoffs, if that is necessary.

Should the Lancers win the West, they will host the OUAA final against York Yeomen who will probably go undefeated in the dismal OUAA East. Yeomen are ranked numero uno in Canada and backed by the guns of Dave Coliadis and Ted Pelcik, will also probably beat the Lancers without too much trouble. Of course, you can’t rule out that strange St. Denis magic.

Tuition fees and blood pressures to rise again

by E.P. Chant and
The University of Toronto Variety

Tuition at Ontario universities is going up by ten percent, effective immediately, says Dr. Bette Stephenson, Minister of Colleges and Universities, announced last week.

In a phone interview Wednesday, University of Windsor President Dr. Mervyn Franklin said that increase might increase tuition and course fees at summer school this year and would certainly be tacked on to tuition prices in the fall semester, bringing the average Arts student's tuition for a year to approximately $1,000.

The budgetary experts at the university are also examining the possibility of an additional increase in tuitions, but Dr. Franklin said the Board of Governors (which would give approval to such an increase) probably would not be examining such a proposal until March.

The president noted such an examination would be "sensitive to many things," including the possible financial hardships that would be placed on students.

He added that the provincial government is currently considering raising the tuition of foreign visa students to further help universities. A recent report showed Ontario to be one of the cheapest (tuition-wise) places in the Western world for foreign students to study — cheaper than the United States and much cheaper than Great Britain.

In addition to the tuition increase, the provincial ministry last week announced a 10.1 percent increase in operating grants to universities. Dr. Franklin explained this goes into a "pool" which is divided among the universities according to an established formula involving a school's enrolment and various programs.

The president said this information has already been run through the computers here and that the university will be receiving a 7.85 percent increase in operating grants.

The 10.1 percent basic increase in operating falls below the 12.4 percent demanded by the Ontario Council of University Affairs which has argued this is the absolute base for the universities' survival.

The tuition increase was not well received by the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS). That organization's chairperson, Karen Dubinsky, said "Don't proclaim that universities are open to everyone and then slide a large tuition increase under the door."

OFS also balked at the ministry's announcement that OSAP should be adjusted to help students pay the increased tuitions, citing the current inadequacies in student aid and arguing for a drastic revamping of the program.

More Ph. D.'s than the continent can handle

by Wendy Coomber

Graduate students skipping out of the classroom world and establishing their Ph.D's as a panacea to ward off all unemployment evils may be in for a rude awaking when they step outside their cozy university.

With the high numbers of Ph.D's turning out by universities in the sixties and the seventies, the present doctoral holders will find that many a raw knuckle has knocked on those doors of business before them. By 1982, Statistics Canada says, "It is wrong to speak of the unemployment of Ph.D's. Underemployment, underutilization and unfulfilled dreams of the Ph.D are more important areas of concern."

And so, with nearly an entire generation of Ph.D scholars still looking for work, universities are facing a critical population of new students who would rather bypass the time consuming doctorate degree for the shorter Master's program. Such is the case at the University of Windsor.

A short report written for The Lance by Dr. Cornelius Crowley, Dean of Graduate Studies and Dr. Gordon Woods, Assistant Dean of Graduate Studies said: "While enrollment in Master's programs has been increasing in the last five years, enrollment in several of our doctoral programs has been dropping. Among the reasons for this latter fact, three may be cited as determining: erratic behavior of the job market, stringent financial conditions in the University of Windsor, and lack of a clear-cut federal policy on highly qualified manpower."

The report goes on to say that universities are expecting a shortfall of 500 doctorates per year in science and engineering alone. Such a drastic decrease would most likely create a high demand for Ph.D's in the 1990's. "The doctoral employment situation seems to be fairly stable" at the University of Windsor, because the university puts out such a small number of doctoral graduates each year it is not too hard for each of them to find jobs.

"The sixties were great," he said, because the universities had lots of money to expand with and create better facilities for teaching. There was an effort at the university in the early seventies to set up more doctoral programs, but by then they were just coming into the period where money was getting short and new students were not coming in.

Dr. Crowley said the university is beginning to look at new Ph.D programs again in geology, Human Kinetics, and Psychology, the latter which, says Dr. Crowley, produces the most Ph.D graduates.

Miswurable rabbits (ZNS) — And you thought "The Creature that ate New York" was just a movie.

"These dreadful creatures — immune to poison, as big as hares, and bold as brass — are running amok at British nuclear fuels Ltd's Capenhurst enrichment plant and at the adjacent electricity council research center."

The superbunnies are munching on the grass at the disposal site and seem to be thriving on it, the magazine says. "The only way of getting rid of them is to get in a rifle-toting assassin to carry out a cull every year or two."

In a student summer employment... of Human Kinetics had the best probability of finding jobs.

The purpose of the survey was to enable the SAC to derive a clear indication of how the employment situation in Windsor was affecting students as far as accessibility to education was concerned. It is not only provided this information, but also provided useful information regarding student accessibility, and the need for assistance. 13.6 percent said they were not registering or and of these, 16.9 percent indicated financial reasons for their decision.

It is hoped that this initial survey will act as an informative guide to members of the community as well as university administrators in planning the future plans towards increasing tuition fees.

The survey, which was undertaken under the direction of Henry Kramzyk, was based on a similar survey done at both Carleton University and the University of Western Ontario. Input and the coordination of the survey also came from David A. Simmonett, President of SAC, and Mike Stipic.

Melts snow and road

An oxidizing agent, used in defoliation of plants and the mixing of dyos, was inadvertently mixed with sand and applied to a stretch of campus roads last Wednesday at the University of Saskatchewan.

"I'm not sure of the toxicity of it," Dr. Bader of the Chemistry Department said, "but it's not the kind of stuff you should be spreading on roads."

The substance, sodium bicromate, is a strong oxidizing compound and it's a normal laboratory chemical, that, because it is such a strong base, is used in cleaning up acid spills and such in the lab.

"I noticed the bright yellow sand on the road on Wednesday at lunchtime," a University employee told The Sheaf. "I had never seen it before."

"I'm not sure what they had found a new use for nuclear waste."

Drop out counselling available

by Laurel Brandt

The Office of Student Affairs set up a drop-out counselling program in January of 1980. The program was fully implemented with the police.

The average time that was spent working was 13 weeks. While the average hourly wage was $3.50, the average earnings for those who didn't work was that amount, $1,100 was saved, though they expected their educations to be a year for $3,100.

The survey also showed that 50 percent of the students indicated that they would need financial assistance and 33 percent expected assistance from their parents or part time earnings. As the combined parental income increased, more financial support was expected to come from the parents which averaged out to be $390.00.

The report was significant for it showed women to be at a disadvantage in the work force. Though more women were employed 54.3 percent - 45.7 percent and it took women less time to secure a job (3.6 weeks for women and 4.6 weeks for men) their average hourly wage was $5.64 compared to $5.95 for men. Thus, the average summer earnings was $1,500 compared to $2,500 for men.

Females also saved less than men. 485.00 compared to $500.00. The result being that more women indicated a dependence on family and other forms of assistance to continue their education.

The most frequent cited problem was with only 45 drop-outs last year between January and May. Approximately 45 drop-outs had received no academic counselling, and 53 no personal. Seventy-four had no study-skills assistance. Most had not participated in any extra-curricular activities, few had jobs.

Of those who eventually decided not to withdraw, the biggest problem was with only one class which they usually dropped.

Procedures for police questioning and searches

This article is the first of two dealing with a persons interaction with the police.

This week's article discusses what to do when stopped by police and their powers of search.

Police are allowed to stop you and ask you questions. Police may stop any person whom they consider suspicious, but unless the officer gives you a legal reason to stop you, you are entitled to deny the officer. You have the right not to identify yourself or supply the officer with other information unless the officer can suggest a legal reason for your detention. The officer, for example, may believe there is a warrant out for your arrest.

If you are found in suspicious circumstances (for example, being in the near vicinity of a recent theft), then a police officer has a legal right to stop you and ask you questions. The police also have authority to stop and search individuals where they have a reasonable belief that the officer may be entering a house or other building that is being searched for drugs you may be personally searched. A police officer may also search anyone found in a vehicle that is being searched for liquor or drugs.

To other cases, unless the police officer arrests you, the officer cannot search you. If you have been unlawfully searched, you will have the right to bring an action claiming damages against the police.

A police officer cannot enter your house, room or apartment to make a search unless the officer has either a Search Warrant or a Writ of Assistance. A Writ of Assistance is a court order compelling the person to whom it is presented to give whatever assistance is required. These documents are rarely issued by the RCMP and are issued personally to the officer.

If a writ of assistance is presented to you, you must permit the officer holding it and all those accompanying the officer to enter and search your premises regardless of the time of day.

A search warrant is a court order authorizing any police officer or officer to search the place named on the warrant. You may ignore the warrant and bar entry if the address on the warrant is wrong, if it is not used on the same level or if it is used at night unless the warrant specifically authorizes a night search.

You should always demand to see the warrant before you admit the police; otherwise you cannot complain as you have admitted them voluntarily.

If we have to pay more, we must receive more

A few new reports of a discouraging nature have found their way into the "in" basket this week — reports that raised again that increasingly popular question, "What am I really getting out of a university education?"

"A lot poorer" looks like a reasonable answer when you examine the new tuition increase discussed above.

It looks indeed reasonable when you see that a SAC survey found a 9.9 percent summer unemployment rate among Windsor students (see page 2 story), another report showing Ph.D students having greater difficulty finding part-time (page 6), and another report about how there are too many Law students being graduated in Ontario.

Doesn't seem you can win, no matter which way you turn. If you're an undergrad, you're probably experiencing double-digit summer unemployment. Granted, this is Windsor and finding a job in this city at the moment is like finding a needle in a haystack, but that does little to ease the pain of an idle summer when September necessitates shelling out several hundred dollars to the university of your choice.

So you decide to make up for all the money you never made in the summer by getting a Ph.D and, thereby, making a real financial killing with a job you get upon graduation. Well, according to Statistics Canada, you had better not graduate in 1982.

At that time, says StatsCan, there will probably be a glut of 3,200 Ph.D's looking for jobs. This is a big country, but you really don't need that many ditches dug.

In the early 1990's, it is predicted, there will be an urgent need for Ph.D holders, but, again, that does little to ease the pain of those graduating shortly. The money they have spent over their five and more years at school is probably enough to make a nice deposit on a Mercedes, but there is no guarantee of a job with high pay when they hit the streets with diplomas in hand.

It appears there is not even a guarantee when one is holding a professional degree, such as one in Law. The Law Society of Upper Canada expressed concern recently about the number of lawyers admitted to the profession each year. The number of lawyers in Ontario has doubled from 7,237 in 1960. Each year, over 1,000 lawyers are admitted to the profession.

The treasurer of the Law Society, John D. Bowley, stated that the problem is concerned that the younger lawyers are providing a lower standard of service, a charge that law school deans across the province have vehemently denied in return.

Dr. Ron Ianni, the Law Dean here, said that the students coming out of school now are more highly qualified lawyers than their predecessors and that the law society receives more complaints about seven to 10 year legal veterans than it does about the rookie graduates.

It too is also easy to guess about the "graduating too many of the dam people" criticism because the law society is doing its best to root out of school now are more highly qualified lawyers than their predecessors and that the law society receives more complaints about seven to 10 year legal veterans than it does about the rookie graduates.

So maybe that latter employment situation isn't as bad as it's being cracked up to be, but it does help to demonstrate the point that higher education is not, in these times, the definitive solution for unemployment. What is, after all, is to continue.

Maybe we should be graduating more experts in Economics so they tell us. Somehow, I don't think that makes sense.

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter to clarify the situation of the Malaysian—Singaporean—Sinpporan Joint Commission. SAC has no jurisdiction over the Malaysian Students' Association (MISSA). The SAC office is located on the second floor of the Student Centre, whereas SAC does not have any authority over the Student Centre itself. SAC is merely a student organization that promotes the interests of students and facilitates their participation in academic and social activities. SAC is not a government body and does not have the power to make decisions that affect the academic policies of the university. SAC's role is to represent the students' interests and to work towards achieving their goals.

Student enrolment can’t be declining

Dear Editor:

Just recently I came to recognize how much we need to have privilege like the others for this privilege of the pub and the support it promotes friendship. If some one has a good educational system, the benefit we get from it, even foreign students.

At last Saturday's (Jan. 24) MISSA general meeting, we had a heated debate on whether the Malaysian Students' Association (MISSA) should remain or split up. As far as I am concerned, I would be very surprised if it did not accept the verdict of the majority of MISSA members. I understand that SAC has no jurisdiction over the three nations' students organizations. I also understand that SAC will only act as a rubber-stamp on this issue. So, among other things, the approval must be first gained from SAC is purely an excuse to stall the process without proceeding with the debate.

MISSA was formed in 1972 to represent the students of three countries and to look after the interest of the students from the three countries. The three countries are Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia. The fact that the three nations' students' organizations are not united in order to support each other can be a reason why the students are left with no choice but to split up. As far as I am concerned, I would be very surprised if it did not accept the verdict of the majority of MISSA members. I understand that SAC has no jurisdiction over the three nations' students organizations. I also understand that SAC will only act as a rubber-stamp on this issue. Dear Editor:

Declining enrolment is a big hoax.

They say that the size of the class is decreed at 100. However, Computer Science and Engineering is experiencing a growth and is packing in more students per classroom than already tolerable by professor or room size. There are cuts by this "declining enrollment," however the student/professor ratio is on the rise. So what? A small class has a better quality of education.

As a student, I would be able to receive a transfer to another institution. Universities are not welcome to transfer student more easily due to declining enrolment. But the issue is that "due to limited enrolment" we cannot accept your transfer. And this is predicted that we will be hard hit by declining enrolment in a few years. It is very hard to keep a class in the middle of his contract. So the universities are preparing for bad times by not hiring enough professors. However staff size may drop too. Then the professor is another role of reduction on a short term basis, and reduced workloads. This only simplifies his removal, except his alleged special needs.

It was announced that increased tuition fees are due to higher costs because of declining enrolment. Declining enrolment decreases total revenue collected from students. To offset this increase, higher fees will be charged.

This is downright robbery! Just recently The Toronto Star newspaper reported that university enrolment is at a record high throughout Ontario. Check this out by looking at our own increased enrolment here at Windsor.

Due to this record high enrolment, the number of raised entrance requirements is more strict, and the number of people who will not be accepted as entrance requirements.

University enrolments are further guaranteed by dropping out, but keeping behind those who pay fees to SAC in order to have privileges like the others. Without pictures on the cards, there is no way to guard against these abuses.

This same type of thing occurs with our own. It is the students who pay for the library through their fees. Again, this abuse could be prevented by putting the student's picture on the ID card. A motion went before SAC to do exactly this. However, despite support from the managers of the pub and the support from the President, SAC did not see fit to pass the motion. It is the responsibility of SAC to guarantee that the students actually get the privileges that we pay for. If they are passing this motion, SAC has in fact guaranteed the opposite. In doing so they have neglected their responsibility to the student body. SAC got their money in the latest referendum, it's time they earned it. St. University already has pictures on their ID cards — there is no logical reason why we shouldn't follow suit.

Robert Weaver shuttles into the university

by Rosemary A. Breschuk

Creative writers take note: Robert Weaver, the driving force behind CBC Radio's "Literary magazine of the air," "Anthology" (heard Saturdays at 10:05 p.m.), is slated to speak to aspiring writers on Tuesday, February 3, at 3:00 p.m. in Room 361, Dillon Hall.

Mr. Weaver, along with Robert Hadlow in Vancouver, was co-editor of Anthology when it made its debut in October 1954. Interestingly, the first program featured a story by young Mordecai Richler. Richler was among the many then-unknown writers featured on Anthology who went on to wider recognition. His fellow "unknowns" included Alice Munro, Al Purdy, Brian Moore, Norman Levine and the late Hugh Garner, to name just a few. Nearly every writer, reviewer and critic of repute, in Canada's Department of English, will be speaking at Area's Department of English, an opportunity to explore and participate in the possibilities of human unity in our troubled world.

The Conference is hosted each year by a different group of people in a different part of the world. Last year's event, sponsored by the Universal Great Brotherhood, was attended by a wide range of individuals, some associated with groups such as Unity Church, Central Association for Humanistic Psychology, Friends of Mindstreams, Cornell University, etc., wholistic health groups, Support Our Own, the West Side of the West, and A Course in Miracles. This year's Conference is being sponsored by the Society of Emissaries, a non-sectarian group interested in wholistic living. Their representatives, George and Joelle Emery, are co-

CBC Literary Competition, now in its third year. Submissions for original, unpublished works — poetry, short stories, memoirs — by Canadian writers are sought. Prizes of $2,500, $2,000 and $1,500 are awarded by judges in each category. In addition, these prizes constitute a license to perform the work on all CBC-owned and affiliated stations. Last year's winner in the poetry category was University of Windsor alumna, Mary Di Michele.

HALIFAX (CUP) — Former Dalhousie University President Henry Hicks knew about human rights violations occurring in Guyana when he nominated that country's president for an honorary degree.

Yasin Sanker, a professor of business administration at Dalhousie, charged that Hicks told him he was "not sure" he knew all about the "Guyana president [Forbes Burnham] was from.

Sanker has called on the university to revoke Burnham's honorary degree, citing numerous political assassinations, human rights violations and the rigging of Guyanese elections, as making the Guyanese leader unworthy of holding a "particularly outstanding public service." Hicks has longstanding relations with Burnham. Hicks was first as a financial advisor to the University of Guyana and later became a member of that university's board of governors.

Hicks could not be reached for comment. However, Gene Hicks, the ex-Dalhousie president's wife, praised Burnham's "commitment to Guyana's economy and played down charges of election rigging. 'We were really rigging elections he was doing it in a desperate attempt to save the country,' Gene Hicks said. Henry Hicks told the CBC earlier that Burnham "showed a commitment" in his efforts to revitalize the poor Guyanese economy.

"It is a self-explanatory thing," Gene Hicks is saying Hicks was rewarding friendship. Meanwhile Alliart Sinclair, chairperson of the University of Guyana's board of governors, said he was unable to predict how that body would vote on the issue of rescinding the honorary degree.

Hicks said much would depend on what is said in the hearings transcriptions Burnham is said to have committed occurred before or after his judicial water-wasting.

When it was pointed out that Burnham had been charged with rigging elections dating riding reason for bestowing back to 1986, Sinclair said the Senate may have had an over rozin.

Tis but a miracle

(ZNS) — If you can see God when you smoke marijuana, it may be legal.

A U.S. federal judge has ordered the government not to destroy 26 bales of marijuana they seized off the coast of Maine last October because, according to prosecutor James Brannigan, it is difficult to separate the 26 bales of grass seized off the coast of Maine last October and say that it is "holy."

The U.S. attorney office, however, wants to destroy the weed because, according to prosecutor James Brannigan, it is difficult to separate the 26 bales of marijuana that may have been dedicated to religious use.

Member of the Ethiopian Zion Coptic Church says that the ·1,260 weed that may have been dedicated to religious use is "most visionary, directing." Ned Chaillet of The Scotsman, noted that "its electrifying dialogue and poignant counterpoint of the failure of human dreams keeps haunting the audience, "Despite the possibility of destroying the weed, it may be legal because, according to prosecutor James Brannigan, it is difficult to separate the 26 bales of marijuana that may have been dedicated to religious use."

Part-time students can end their wanderings

It's a dream come true. After four years of wandering in the desert, OPUS now has an office which officially opened on November 1, 1980. It wasn't without a sense of relief and homing, that Josie Iannetta, our past president, bathed all four drawers of OPUS files into an office which is located just inside the main entrance of the University Centre. Now that we're anchored, it's all systems go and so far, it has been smooth sailing.

The office will be open three afternoons a week from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. and is staffed by part-time students who have been through the mill. A bright red telephone sits on our desk waiting for queries, complaints or just that about the joys and sorrows of being a part-time student. The number to dial is 253-4687.

Our Wine & Cheese party is due to take place on February 5th, Thursday, 5:00 p.m. in the Esse Lounge of the University Centre. All part-time students are invited to attend. We are hoping that the party will give everyone the opportunity to make new friends and contacts and to establish a rapport that will make our office into a type of centre where any part-time student is welcome to come in, sit down, relax and chat. There will be wine all day and send it in. Remember, this is your newsletter and your contributions are like music to our ears.

We have a booklet entitled "Part-time Studies at the University of Windsor, 1980-81," which is an excellent source of information. No part-time student should be without a copy of this booklet. Next time you are passing by, drop in and pick up a copy; you can introduce yourself at the same time.

For those part-time students who can only come at night, we will be making arrangements for opening our office a couple of nights a week. We look forward to seeing you.

Your organization, OPUS, is a member in good standing with the national part-time student organization COPUS. In the past OPUS has participated in the successful lobbying effort on behalf of part-time students and their problems, to the provincial government in Ontario.

Through the efforts of the Canadian Organization of Part-time University Students (COPUS), the provincial government has agreed to fund a research project which will examine the availability of University programmes on a part-time basis in Ontario.

The Levy-Coughlin Partnership has been chosen to carry out this research. In the "Summary of the Levy-Coughlin Partnership Research Proposal dated June 20, 1980," the summary of objectives of the project reads as follows:

1. To take an inventory of those programmes in each Ontario University that are available to part-time students.
2. To identify general and specific gaps in the available to part-time students.
3. To identify the University and/or Professional Association policies that determine these gaps, where such policies exist.
4. With reference to identified programme gaps and the professional/institutional policies that determine them, to assess the barriers to part-time studies as perceived by students.

The province-wide Levy-Coughlin survey will help to indicate that it is valid to offer better part-time degree services at Universities because students are taking their part-time studies seriously," says Roy L. Smith, Executive Director of COPUS. "Perhaps it will encourage the province to increase its post-secondary education spending as it has been decreasing over the years," she adds.

According to a recent news release circulated by the Council of Ontario Universities' (COU), "Ontario currently ranks last among the provinces in the level of operating grants per students.

If you wish to be interviewed by the researcher, do not hesitate to contact OPUS (258-4687). More information is available upon request. If you prefer, you may relay your concerns to OPUS and we will pass them on to you. Your chance to be heard, and to contribute to the improvement of part-time studies is now.

Cheeks bring rock 'n roll back to SAC's

by John Liddle

The title song of the second set sums up Cheek's philosophy of music. The song title? "This is Rock 'n Roll."

No, Virginia, rock 'n roll isn't dead, it's alive and personified in this week's pub band.

Cheek's strength lies in the fact that they play upwards of 70% of their own music. Don't let that turn you off—it's good. In fact, Cheeks has released a single on Capitol Records—both sides of which were part of the movie soundtrack to Up the Academy.

Other originals (which include some pretty stunning lyrics) are "You Say You Love Me But —," "Looking for a Strange, most people only have two cheeks.

The Quality of Rock 'n Roll

Cheeks offer more than their own brand of hard driving rock and roll. Their sets are also sprinkled with a fine selection of sixteen songs. From the Stones they have borrowed "All Day and All Night", and "Let's" including a Yardbirds style rave. Another song that was well done was Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away", which had stirring, alternation vocals.

As if this isn't enough, Cheeks also offers a fine tribute to one of the best rock bands of all time — The Who.

If you have a hearing problem, no problem. Cheeks are as loud as they are original. Don't miss Cheeks, this weekend at SAC's.

The Measure

Poetry, like fiction, can become a medium through which we might savour the life experiences of others without having to leave our favourite armchairs. It is characterized by its immediacy, its vicarious zeal and wonder.

There is gothic subtlety in these poems, a refined quality of the grotesque that is neither overpowering nor inconspicuous. To put it simply, Lane can strike balances, his images scaled with the Kodak clarity of a photograph.

The images are real, sustained by truths that grate the mind. And the characters that come to life in these poems are also real, propped up by Lane's keen appreciation for precise detail. There's old Charlie, hooked on lemon extract and a delerious lifestyle. And Annie She, whose proficiency with the pool cue says something about her aspirations in the smoke-filled back room of a wasted life.

The most colorful work in this collection is "Certs", which Lane has directed our attention and interest? Man no longer man but hero," and "With You Now."

Show will again visit Room 1120 of the Math Building courtesy of the SAC. LaCasse is also hoping to have two more movie nights in March.

Don't expect to see a big concert this year. St. Denis Hall is simply not large enough to handle a "break even" crowd which would make bringing big name entertainers worthwhile. A ticket would cost the students about ten dollars. That's ten dollars to see a dimly lit, acoustically poor performance.

LaCasse is hoping to have a speaker, possibly Jane Fonda or Jesse Jackson. LaCasse feels Fonda would receive a large reception due to her political and theatrical involvement. When asked about the failure of last year's "Scorrey" visit, LaCasse said: "I plan to hit advertising harder, making the event more visible to the campus and the general public."

Paradise Theater is different in the sense that the music is much better in thought and quality. Styx used a different style of music for Paradise Theater but I found this complemented their overall theme. The use of the horns and sax is found at least five different songs. The addition of these instruments just add that "big band" sound.

"Nothing Ever Goes As Planned" is a pure ballad. It's a catchy tune, effectively produced with a heavy dose of Styx's DeYoung guitar. On the track "Best of Times," DeYong's classical piano and keyboad playing brings back the stacks memories of the single "Pieces Of Eight" from their album of the same name.

Tommy Shaw also contributed effectively to Paradise Theater. In one of his tracks, "The Chairs," Shaw reflects "the Never Say Never style," but juices it up cleverly by the use of the piano, sax, and even car-

Lancerettes defeat Hawks, Ewes to move to 7-2

by Steve Rice

The Cinderella story of the Lancer hockey team is now entering the midway hour. After a 3-2-1 unbeaten streak that sent them soaring into seventh place in the 12-team OUA, Windsor heads into the final stage of the season it is point-competitive against the four teams below them, Toronto and Western, in the league's three top teams, York, Guelph and Waterloo.

Windsor started the game hesitantly and that resulted in an 8-1 lead for the Gryphons after two periods. But the Lancers, who realistically accepted defeat, achieved their goal from that point — to prevent Guelph from running up the score and win the third period.

Windsor outshot Guelph 14-7 in the final frame and out-scored them 1-0.

Don Martin and Norm Synnot picked up the Lancer goals. The score of the contest with McMaster was in no way indicative of the type of game it was as the Marauders led 4-1 at the end of two and only 3-3 with two minutes remaining in the game. At that point the Lancers began to press and it backfired to the tune of three Mac goals.

Mike Lefler, Mike McGee and Len Chittle tallied for Windsor.

"We're going to work hard and hope that it will be a stimulus to keep the people at their peak. We'll make whatever sacrifices are necessary to make that playoff spot."

SAC announces new ID cards and commission

by E.P. Chant

In addition to paying more money on tuition next year, University of Windsor students will also be paying two dollars each to the administration for their campus ID cards, it was revealed at last Thursday's (January 29) Students' Administrative Council (SAC) meeting.

SAC President David Simmons announced at the end of the meeting that the university's Board of Governors had examined the situation and felt that it would be wise to put students' pictures on their cards (to prevent looting them to others going to the pub or library).

This, however, would necessitate the purchase by the administration of some photographic equipment, that expense being divided among the four campuses.

At a SAC meeting in November, a motion which would have had the council lend the administration $9,000 to set up the picture-card program was roundly defeated. It was thought, at that time, that the administration might have to increase student fees in the future to repay the council for the borrowed money.

SAC probably doesn't have enough money to loan to the administration to help with the tuition increase situation, but it will be attempting to act on that matter. A motion which would have had council protest a Board of Governors' recommendation to students, was defeated, as was a motion asking for a joint committee of five members of the SAC with governors to examine the situation in addition to the mandatory provincial tuition hike.

"Students must fight increases," Simmons urged, "until those asking for them can justify them by providing increased services to students."

After a letter to President Mervyn Franklin, the SAC President urged the university's president and Board of Governors to give very serious consideration to any additional increase - and to allow the participation of students in any tuition discussion.

Specifically, Simmons suggested the establishment of a joint committee of five members of the Board of Governors and five SAC members to examine the situation, in addition to the open Board of Governors' meeting to examine any proposed increase. He also urged Franklin to appear before the student body to answer their questions about such an increase.

During an informal meeting this Monday, Franklin told this reporter he and the Board of Governors were concerned about the students, but he really did not want to discuss the issue until the various finance and budget offices in the administration had examined the situation. The whole matter of tuition increases would not be put before the Board of Governors before March or April, he said.

A new SAC executive member was ratified by the general council at the meeting. Milan Stipic, who has had extensive experience with campus and provincial student politics in his three years at the university, was welcomed as the new external affairs commissioner. He is responsible for keeping this campus' council in touch with those of others and with the several provincial and national student organizations.

Stipic recently attended an Ontario Federation of Students conference in Kingston and reported the delegates were "anti-Bette everything". In addition, he explained that OPS was in the process of being amalgamated into the new nation-wide student organization, the Canadian Federation of Students (CFS).

Membership in this new organization, Stipic said, would likely entail a seven dollar per student fee - something SAC would have to seek in a referendum either this term or early next fall.

SAC Odd's and Ends: Finance V-P Brad Mitchell reported the recent SAC "Used Book Sale" in "The Works".

As it turns out, the students were able to purchase more than $400 million - 15 percent more than the cost of equipment, that expense being divided among the four campuses. Donations increased to outside of the campus. Stipic said, would enter this new nation-wide student organization, the Canadian Federation of Students (CFS).

OTTAWA (CUP) — While student leaders across Ontario are reacting angrily to the recent tuition fee increase, university administrators are praising the government's decision to increase education funding by 10.1 per cent.

"Don't proclaim that universities are open to everyone and then slide a large tuition increase under the door," said Karen Dubinsky, chairperson of the Ontario Federation of Students.

The Ontario Ministry of Colleges and Universities announced January 23 that tuition would rise by ten per cent. The universities are also free to add a discretionary fee of up to another 10 per cent.

University of Toronto students will pay only the mandatory 10 per cent increase, since the university levied most of the discretionary fee last year and fees are already 10 percent above the 1980-81 base figure.

"I do not regard that as socially unfair," he said, adding that he feels students must bear more of the costs of education.

He would like to see tuition represent 20 percent of the costs, rather than the current 14 per cent. Harri also said he was "moderately encouraged" by the funding increase of 10 per cent.

Peter Galway, U of T student council president, said he was outraged by the increase. He said the quality of education has declined significantly because of under funding.

"You're asking people to pay for an education that's not worth it," Galway said.

At the University of Ottawa, rector Roger Ganemond said he was happy with the funding increase and said he hopes "this is the beginning of the universal

"...This government is just going to have to increase funding to make sure that education is not an inaccessible luxury," he said.

Money from the Games Room slated for discussion

by Wendy Coomber

It's been quite a long time since those penny bubble gum machines with the whirling chrome knobs held out unwieldy attention. Now we have "Asteroids" and a host of other video games that flash at us and jingle our spines in more colours than Walt Disney, at a cost well above that of our first seductive gumball machines.

Randj Johnston, director of Ancillary Services for SAC and member of the Student Services Committee, said the money is going into a separate Games Room account of the university administration.

"This government is just going to have to increase funding to make sure that education is not an inaccessible luxury," he said.

Thank heavens for all night radio

(ZNS) — Musical Vibrating Pantries are catching on like wildfire across Ontario.

The underwear that pululates to the beat of recorded music is apparently selling far beyond the wildest dreams of designer David Lloyd. According to Lloyd, customers are getting off with the sound, the weird noises, and the wide array of colours that come off the screen," said the Centre Director.

Johnston also said there had been no negative feelings because of the move of the machines and tables to the basement of the centre. "Instead, he said, the machines have been very positive and security is much better. You have to go through four or five doors now, doors locked after hours, to get to the room and, up until now, there has been no vandalism occurring there."

February 18, 19, 20, and 21, the annual "Games Room" is again on the schedule, sorting a smoker and a video game tournament.
The right way to talk back to your professors

by Scott McCulloch

How and why to argue was the subject of a lecture given last Wednesday at 3:30 in the Speaker's Pit at the University centre by Tony Blair of the philosophy department.

"The idea for this studentship lecture goes back a few years," Blair told the Lecture in an impromptu and spontaneous lecture. "Professor Johnson (another philosophy professor) and I thought there was a need for a logic course that would help students deal with problems in everyday life. There was a logic course already, but it was almost like mathematics, a sort of algebra. We wanted a handout that would be practical and would teach the students skills they could use in university and beyond."

When Ken Long, founder of Studentship, originally heard about the course and asked Prof.essor Johnson and Blair to talk about it as part of the studentship series, they were at first reluctant. "We had an eight-month course that still didn't cover everything, and now we were going to have to try to give it in one day shot," Johnson, away on sabbatical this year, and Blair decided to go ahead and "try to give students a few pointers on developing and evaluating their own arguments."

The one-hour studentship lecture differs from the course in this respect, because the course focuses mainly on what Blair calls the "consumer" of arguments and deals with the instigator of the argument only incidentally.

"We'll also be talking about what a good argument is, the criteria for it, strategies for formulating good arguments, how to defend yourself and not to make a case for your point of view," Blair said. "We believe this is important because most written work a student does involves presenting arguments."

Both the lecture and the course focus on written arguments. Asked if any time would be spent on the techniques of oral arguing, Blair had to admit "I hadn't thought of that. It's a whole other area that it would be good to get into, but I don't trust it to work."

Blair and his colleague, Professor Johnson, have been giving lectures in the studentship series for several years now. In the 1980-81 season, Johnson spoke on how to criticize arguments and Blair dealt with how to formulate them. "I tried a different approach in the lecture given last semester and it didn't come off all that well," Blair confessed. "I tried to give a massive speed, convincing students of the importance of reasoning and logic. The evaluations showed the students didn't want that and they were absolutely right. They wanted something that was practically oriented and that's what I'm giving them this time."

this Tuesday

Professor Bob Doyle of the Biology Department will give a studentship lecture concerning assignments and original thinking this coming Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. in the Speaker's Pit at the University Centre, "It'll be more of a workshop," Doyle says. "I'll talk a bit about what students will try something, we'll move on, it's not really a lecture."

What Doyle is talking about is "a step by step process to generate innovation and creative thinking. It's a combination of several systems I've heard about over the years."

Doyle uses a handout that demonstrates the technique by showing how Frank Striker, script writer for the old Lone Ranger radio program, drew up a chart to help him think of 250 different stories per year. Striker didn't know it at the time, but he was using what a writer named Zwicky called "morphological analysis" in a book he published in 1968. "It's breaking things down into their components," Doyle explains.

use your interests

Doyle thinks students shouldn't be afraid to take chances when it comes to projects. "I know an essay on paper can often become dull stuff. There's a strong temptation to "inherit" one or buy one or to do something safe and non-controversial," Doyle believes students should ask themselves if they might have something special to bring to an assignment. "We should get some of his interests into it," he says. "If he's interested in photography, he can do a film for an assignment for another class, or write a script.

humour is important

Some assignments handed in to Professor Doyle recently included a "Nobel Prize Game," a diagram of a wheelchair for an invalid biologist, a model, and a study in which children were given the first part of a phrase and allowed to fill in the rest themselves. "The model was of a concept in science that's overly verbalized. The student wanted to make a concrete representation and he did quite a good job of it," Doyle explained.

As for the study using children, "Some of the results were very funny. Humor is an important part of creativity. The student was suggesting that the same method could be used to teach science -- give the student part of a procedure and let him try to fill in the rest. He used some examples."

Also giving a studentship lecture next week will be Carol Baker, Assistant Dean of Students. She will speak on "Doing Your First Seminar?" at 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday in the Speaker's Pit.

Learn to Speed Read and Comprehend More

When was the last time you were up to date with all the books and never had time aside to read? Better still, when was the last time you had a day to enjoy your favourite leisure activities?

We are not suggesting that you must...
Continual overstatement is an Habit

Wildly overstating your demands works sometimes. Sometimes when you do more than you really want, you get exactly what you want. Call it "dickering", call it "corss-prom- prom- prom- prom- prom-plas" or "bargaining", call it what you will. Call it terribly ineffective when you're planning the record of the Ontario Federation of Students and the various other quasi-political student organizations, for example, you probably represent, us, the huge unwashed masses.

When was the last time you saw the government of this province roll over tuition fees or attempt to make student aid run more fairly and efficiently, or refrain from demanding exactly what it damn well pleased because OPS suggested it should? When was the last time you saw the federal government radically increase its research and development grants because of some well reasoned and ancially logical National Union of Students’ argument?

Now recently" is right.

The thing that these student organizations fail to realize is that they are vew-
, rightly or wrongly, as special interest groups, and those are hated as much by government as they are by organized business. This is a constitutionally whining about one thing or another and, more often than not, are asking for a huge windfall of free money — in the form of sharply reduced university fees and/or greatly increased student aid.

The fact of the matter is that the governments in question are representing an even more special interest group: the tax-hating citizens in their specific areas — people who, for the most part, simply do not want to pay increased taxes to make a student's life a financial nirvana. Whether rightly or wrongly, not everyone that believes that "education is a right, not a privilege" equates that with meaning "education should be free for all who want it" (as the student organizations, from the sporadic outspoken moments, would urge us to accept).

Instead of trying to appreciate the government's dilemma and tailor their demands to fit those budgetary limitations, the student organizations, for the past several years, have taken to so grossly overstating their demands as to make them totally ludicrous. It is no wonder that governments go gungho ahead with their own plans with the alternative suggestions fornished by student organizations occasionally consist of "all-grant" student aid programs and other such non-serious.

This is not to say that the student organizations and their executives are completely out of the picture in a while they will do something exceptionally well — OPS's well-timed advertisement of the initial task on student aid is a good example. As a general point, however, the fact that student organizations take far too much pride in their mouthy radicalism causes them to be unsuccesssful adversaries of government, instead of the valuable and respectable advisors that they could be.

The Ontario Federation of Students has come up with a dandy and mature way to show how this provincial govern-

The Ontario Federation of Students has come up with a dandy and mature way to show how this provincial government’s recently declared ten percent tuition hike: OPS is urging all concerned students’ councils across the country to send Colleges and Universities Minister Dr. Bette Stephenson a funeral wreath to tell her (as if she couldn’t surmise it) that they think to access education is dead.OPS is urging all concerned students’ councils across the country to send Colleges and Universities Minister Dr. Bette Stephenson a funeral wreath to tell her (as if she couldn’t surmise it) that they think to access education is dead. The Centre desperately needs a dozen large bulletin boards to get all the posters up (before taking out the paper off): CJAM needs more room; it would be a good idea to give the various faculty societies and, possibly the Office of Student Affairs, some office space in the building; a SAC financed and student-operated store with "discount" prices on popular items such as rec-cords and rolling paper (cups) would be spiffy; and the Editor’s office here urgently needs new drapes to replace the natty burlap bags we have strung up now.

Perhaps this year — certainly next — the students of this campus are going to have to make some proendum for about seven dollars to support a new, nationwide student organiation: the Canadian Federation of Students. Past performance draws the worth of such an investment into serious question.

Open Letter to All Students

Caribbean culture

Dear Editor:

I have noticed that the Caribbean students are once again having their cultural show on campus. Last year's show was most enlightening and informative. My knowledge of the Caribbean students and their culture was significantly enhanced by the different performances of each island.

I am looking forward to attending this year's show, and would appreciate your printing this letter, to congratulate the Caribbean students on a job well done, and also to inform them that their work was well received.

Do you truly believe?....

Dear Editor:

There are many issues that directly concern you and your education and, from my impression, a majority of you couldn't give a damn. Maybe you're not to blame - ignorance often breeds apathy and mistrust.

For example, the Ontario government has recently introduced a proposal called system rationalization which threatens the destruction of the University of Windsor by taking away our Masters and Ph.D. programs. It is a real problem, not one that you can easily dismiss.

Dear Editor: Open Letter to All Students

Caribbean culture

Dear Editor:

There have, unfortunately, been several times in recent months when, by his conduct, the Lance editor has confirmed his immaturity and lack of intelligence. But in his treatment of Joe Clark's visit to campus he has achieved a new low.

My knowledge of the Caribbean, of Joe Clark's visit to campus, the Lance editor has confirmed months when, by his conduct, I am deeply impressed. He has, to put it more bluntly, made himself look like a jerk! (Unknown outsiders may generalize.)

The appearance of a national party leader on campus is a rare event in the history of the University of Windsor. Joe Clark was received warmly by more than 300 students, a credible turnout. They asked a number of questions, both friendly and unfriendly, mostly quite intelligent. Whether one agreed with the answers or not, one had to admit that they were skillful.

This is an occurrence which deserves major and responsible coverage. And if the editor wanted to attack what Mr. Clark said, he had an editorial page on which to do it. Instead he acted like a rowdy eight-year old riding a third grade rival.

If the reputation of the University of Windsor is not to be dragged in the mud—for you can be sure that this incident will be noticed on campus—the Lance staff should immediately review the tenure of the editor. Otherwise all of us, students and faculty alike, will suffer, not only this time, but perhaps again.

Windsor has bright students who understand the canons of responsible journalism. Let them step forward!

Tory turns red over ex-prime minister's coverage

Dear Editor:

I found the Caribbean Cultural Show unique and refreshing last year. The music, acting, scenery, and effects transported the audience to a place I always hope to visit some day. It was great! I'm looking forward to this year's show and I hope to see everyone there.

Every change or "improvement" brings its own share of problems when it is introduced. Dean of Students Ken Long grew concerned about the number of students coming to the Student Affairs office to tell him when their registration time was up. Last year they were complaining about not getting into the courses they wanted, not having their grades for effective counseling, and that was only the last thing." Asked what "the five or six things" were, Smith replied, "Some of it's so technical, even I can't understand it." The Registrar explained that "we have technical problems and we had internal staff problems, some retirees. We were working with one third of our regular clerical staff."

computers still slow but working hard

"We'd planned originally on having marks out by the twelfth of January," Smith said, "but with the technical problems we ran into registration. Last year they weren't out until slack week so we're still ahead of that."

"It was our first crack at it," said Registrar Frank Smith. "It's two years ago," he explained, "To take effect now." He said confidently. "There's no reason to believe it will change." Smith still feels this is the best way to do it. "If you want six courses and can get into all of them, that's fine. But if you really\n
"We've had some students come to us who weren't in courses they needed," Ken Long said. "We told them to go to the professor and explained and asked to be signed in. We'd heard back yet - we're waiting for some letters."

"I hate to say it, but fewer and fewer courses are available in time to pay them off," said Dean Frank Smith. "Students who registered in January were lucky if they got two out of six courses at the times they wanted. The 1,200 people who registered the first day back in December were all processed together. Classes are filled according to student number."

"It's our first time through two registrations. The line up in our office is the regular one. There aren't long lines. They have left their card on it. They may come back to the office and re-registration time is here."

Justice Department creates student jobs

Justice Minister Jean Chrétien announced recently that the Department of Justice, in cooperation with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, will again in 1981 offer a programme of summer employment for law students by police forces across the country. Under this programme, which has been in operation since 1971, the police chiefs of participating municipalities will hire law students to work with their police forces for periods varying from 12 to 15 weeks. Students specializing in criminal law will be given priority in the selection process. Participants in this employment programme will get first hand experience of police activities and understanding of the importance of the work of police officers in our society, said the Minister.

Application forms may be obtained from the Dean’s office of any Canadian law school. The completed application form must be submitted directly to the police force in which the candidate is interested, before February 27, 1981.

Certainly one of the benefits of being part of a university’s multi-ethnic community is that one may learn about, and even participate in, other students’ cultural festivals and celebrations.

While foreign students must accommodate, adapt, and adjust to our Canadian climate, customs and other conditions, fortunately they are quite willing to share their fascinating customs with us. The Chinese Students’ Association (CSA) did just that last weekend by presenting a two-day Chinese New Year festival.

Occurring sometime between late January and late February, the Chinese New Year is celebrated on a different day each year. More specifically, New Year’s falls on the day of the second new moon after the winter solstice. This year, it fell on February 5.

For the Chinese, the passing of the years is identified with a cycle of animals, a system inherited from the Babylonians and Greeks. This animal cycle corresponds roughly with our zodiac cycle. The Chinese animal cycle begins with the rat, followed by the ox, tiger, hare, dragon, serpent, horse, sheep, monkey, cock, dog, and boar. This year, 1981, is represented by the cock.

One feature of the Chinese New Year celebrations is a striking pantomime, the “lion’s dance”. This popular amusement is performed by professional artists. Drums are beaten as the multi-coloured beast springs about, tosses its fearsome head, winks and snaps at the crowd, and swings its tail.

Such a dramatic performance opened the ceremonies last Friday at noon. The “lion” headed a procession of onlookers through the Centre and retired upstairs in the Alumni Lounge. There, a distinguished panel – U. of W. President Mervyn Franklin; president of the Windsor chapter of the Multi-Cultural Council, Patricia Alexander; recently appointed International Student Advisor, Dr. Haque; CSA president Solomon Chan – gave short speeches about the weekend program. “These exhibitions should remind us of the richness of the Chinese culture and society, and the contributions of the Chinese people,” concluded President Franklin.

The highlight of the festival was the Cultural Night Variety Show. Various examples of the Chinese lively arts were presented: music, opera, dance and Kung Fu demonstrations. A fashion show and movie, North China Factory, completed the program.

The musical bill of fare included a ten-member choir accompanied by pianist Tony Kwok, a violin piece by Amy Pong and Billie Koo, singer Emily Wong and guitarist Raymond Sau, traditional instrument player Daniel Chan and flautist Mark Young. An opera, The Butterflies Love, was delightfully performed by two ECCCA singers, Christine Leung and David Yeung. Two dancers performed a Miao folk dance.

An exhibition of Chinese National Minorities costumes elicited appreciative “ooohs and aahs” from the audience as the attractive models displayed Mongolian, Tibetan, Manchurian and other traditional costumes.

A Kung Fu demonstration, too, elicited gasps from the audience as Derek Fung and David Wong performed several flesh-and-floorboard resounding movements, including the Jit Jin Chuen and Jit Chuen.

When you have "a stupid, rotten life", your only saving grace might be a great love for bingo.

That, in part, is the message of Les Belles Soeurs by Michel Tremblay (translated by John Van Burek and Bill Glance), the play currently on stage at Exeke Hall Theatre.

This two-act, all-female cast, University Players production, also deals with unwed motherhood, abortion, the immorality of nightshades, mismatched sex, birth control, the generation gap, lotteries, religion, and aging. In a larger thematic vein, the play constitutes a microcosmic look at lower-middle class life in Quebec. Extending that, Les Belles Soeurs is about the salacity of life and relationships, and the fleeting foolishness of dreams.

Ah – where to begin, where to begin?

The scene is Germaine Launton's (Cyd Vanderberg) kitchen. Germaine has just won a million stamps – the kind you stick in the booklets and use to buy merchandise from a catalogue company dealing in them – and has invited her friends and acquaintances over for a night of pasting.

The gossip-filled group scene which erupts from this conglomeration is broken by individual spotlight speeches with the rest of the actresses in darkened frcents. These "from-the-s嚢ron" addresses serve to cut through the relative superficiality of the subject matter of the group scenes, showing each woman's anger and sadness.

The group is, as set by a chorus of the women part way through the first act is one of complete dissatisfaction with their roles as wives and mothers. "This stupid life", at the chorus describes it, is one constant rotation of housework, feeding smoky-nosed children and unappreciative husbands, and watching TV at night.

Still, however, they have their dreams. They all claim to have come close to realizing them by winning newspaper contests, but never close enough to grab the brass ring ("Do I look like anyone who's ever won anything?").

(Laetitia de Courval (Gay Simylie), Grace might be a great love for you."

Les Belles Soeurs continues tonight (Friday) and concludes tomorrow night.

Don't ever stand in the way of a cut-throat stamp trader.

A corresponding chorus in the second act entails the women's one great joy in life, playing bingo. Aside from the stereotypical cultural connection of the game to Roman Catholic French-Canadian, the "Ode to Bingo," demonstrates the sorry state of these humdrum lives – when the possibility of winning a "combination standing lampashtray" can cause a woman to write around in ecstasy and shout, "I love BINGO!" you know that you've got an unfilled woman on your hands.

Although the serious note of the play, then, is a rather depressig one, there are lots of laughs along the way. Director Vance Paul has elicited some fine performances from the cast which, collectively, has met the challenge of presenting middle age without possessing it.

The set by Nicholas Ayre and crew, plastic Virgin Mary statuettes and all, constitutes the stereotypical French-Canadian households. The considerable work by Lauren Mile and crew scream out, "Yes, we're frumps, but we can be charming!"

Doug and the Slugs are oozing their way from their slippery wave with a 50's sort of beat", and as having a consistent, high energy show.

The group's sound, slupwise, as being "new wave with a 50's sort of beat!", and as having a consistent, high energy show.

The show will be held in Ambassador Auditorium, 8:00 p.m., and not in the pub because the Students' Administrative Council has been waiting to get their hands on some kind of major act this year. Besides, said Stanton, having the event held outside the pub will allow them to sell liquor for less than in the pub. The pub, by the way will not be having a band that night so concentration (and students) will go to the concert upstairs.

The Slugs will be playing two one-hour sets for a price of $3.50 students, $4.50 guests. Everyone must be a student to enter the pub. Tickets are available from SACS pubs or from the post office. The pub is hoping to set up a table in front of the Centre to sell tickets.

The slick little quasi-clams already have set up RGA called Cognac and Balogna (?) with a single entry Bad. RCA is also helping with the concert's promotion.

Slugs are people too, so remember to watch where you step at the concert. That might just be the lead singer under your shoe.

SLAM hits 'em with their best shot

by Peter Haggener

It may not be Christmas, but the pub this week is again decorated with Holly.

Holly, if you haven’t already guessed, is the lead singer of Slam, this week’s entertainment at SAC’s.

Early in October, Slam visited the pub for a three night early week affair. As the week went on, it became increasingly difficult to find a seat. Partly this was due to the popular New Wave/Rock style of the band, partly it was because many mindless males love to ogle pretty face. (Thanks for the word Woody).

At times however, their New Wave can sound pretty scrambled. The sound this band was built for was that of the Pat Benetars and B-52’s. The lead singer benefits greatly from her Deborah Harry looks to match her Benetar voice. Holly seems to be at her best singing the “naughty” female songs of today’s music.

Anything Holly lacks in actual vocal ability she makes up for with stage presence which suits her songs. You might say she doesn’t exactly act like the girl you might bring home to mother.

At times the vocals are a little hard to distinguish from the music. Even with this minor distraction, Slam presents one of the best shows for a week long performer this year in the pub. It looks like it’s going to be another busy weekend at SAC’s.

Siki shines

by Catherine M. Wilson

Last Saturday in Moot Court, Hungarian pianist Bela Siki performed for a large appreciative crowd. An audience of about one hundred and eighty people were treated to a display of extraordinary brilliance.

Opening with the “Sonata in D Major” of Franz Joseph Haydn (1732-1809), each movement created a mood of its own; the moderate a heroic air, the adagio full of mobility, splendour and passion, and the adagio closing the piece on a lively note. The “Sonata in B Flat Major” of Frederic Chopin (1810-1849) opened with chords presenting the ultimate in drama. The scherzo displayed Siki’s intricate fingerwork, and mastery of the keyboard. The marche funebre created a sombre, reverant atmosphere through a billiant contrast of dynamics. For some the finale represented a gossiping commentary on the Funerary March, for others it became the night wind sweeping over the churchyard graves.

The second half of the program opened with the premiere performance of “Praeludium, Blues, and Tocatta” by Paul McIntyre, professor of music at the University’s School of Music. The Praeludium was similar in form and spirit to those of the 17th Century keyboard toccatas in colour and texture. The Blues followed the classic form with a hint of the style of electronic music. In the toccata, a four-note figure was carried all over the instrument, ending with a burst of tone clusters.

“The Hungarian Legend”, by Franz Liszt (1811-1886) opened with the movement depicting walking over the water of the Strait of Messina between Italy and Sicily by St. Francis. Dynamics and ascending scales created thunderous waves. The placid mood which prevailed throughout the “Sonata del Pescara” reminded one of celestial apparitions through its rich, full chords. “The Rhapsody No. 13” (Rákóczi March) expresses indomitable will of the Hungarian people to overcome tyranny and to reach freedom.

Siki performed two encores of Chopin preludes, displaying fantastic fingerwork and effective dynamics. The evening was a wonderful treat for all music lovers.
Kings perform majestically

by Laurie Bergoline

The Kings were here! Saturday night was the first bash put on by the newly formed Social Science Society. The Society managed to get one of the most popular Canadian New Wave groups, The Kings making possible the incredible "Sold Out" sign posted on the entrance doors. The Society was more than happy with the campus response to the concert.

The warm-up band, Trixie Goes Hollywood, started the evening off right. This tight sounding, quite energetic New Wave group got everyone evening off right. This tight sounding, quite energetic New Wave group got everyone excited, it is not quite fair (including their own drummer) "Shaking All Over." Although their sound was exceptional, it is not quite fair to compare them to the Kings, the band that everyone came to hear.

The dance floor (a little added extra that is something that isn't found often at concerts) crowded with people as soon as the group came out. Most wanted to get a little closer to watch this energetic band perform.

"The Beat Goes On" and "Switching To Glide" received a great welcome finely complementing their other music. The Kings played music from their first album, The Kings, also introducing some new music from their second album which they will be releasing before next fall.

Keyes also noted that their new single's title will be, "Don't Let Me Know," with the flip side being "Partyita" (both of which were played Saturday night). The single will be released here -- in Canada -- on February 16th.

Sonny Keyes, the band's key board musician, spoke very highly of the band's producer, Bob Ezrin, who, he says knows all of their jobs. He (Ezrin) heard the band recording their first album (which was to be done by their own, newly formed record company, Extreme Records based in Toronto), and knew that they had the potential. He offered a few suggestions to improve some of their songs, and eventually agreed to take on the band as their producer.

Keyes said, "He tries to get them to sound out of us." Rather than changing their style, he worked with that style, which is not something every producer does.

The Kings have been together for three years and have been on the road together quite a bit since the release of their first album. When asked if they didn't become bored and worn out by doing the same music and being on the road for long periods of time, Keyes said no, that every time they played, they tried to change the set somehow, and that on the road they acquire more energy.

When asked where they got the energy they seem to have on stage, he replied, very emphatically, "NOT DRUGS". The audience is vital to all rock and roll bands. It is important to have the interaction between the band members and the people. When the audience likes what the band is playing, they smile. When the band members see that, they play better, gathering more energy and so on and so on.

He explained "You can tell those who watch television all the time. They stand there watching with a completely blank expression on their face, not realizing that the band is looking back at them and seeing them too. "Not the audience tonight though. They were a good audience." It is not hard to be a good audience when the band is The Kings, and they play so well. They looked like they enjoyed it as much as the audience did.

I think we all must agree that this has been the best, most entertaining band we have had at the University all year (perhaps for even longer than that). We must also thank the Social Science Society for bringing us such a good band. Perhaps this will set an example for future bashes, in the line of well known entertainment.

Anyone who is 24 years old and still calls himself "Robby" has a long way to go to prove himself in my books. With this in mind I set out to see Jack Lemmon, Robby Benson and Lee Remick in Bob Clark's film Tribute, adapted for the screen from the Broadway show. And surprisingly, I found that during the course of the movie I grew to hate Robby Benson less made for TV movies. "Workin' in L.A." from the movie Portrait of an Escort, and "Let Me Love Again" from Anatomy of a Seduction. Also featured was a medley of songs which Hardy has written over the years for children. The three pieces that the medley was based on, showed how well Hardy can translate a theme into a musical achievement.

His last piece, of course, was "The Homecoming." The flute solo itself at the beginning of the piece sent the patron's mind hoping for this conclusion of the concert. The varied program offered by Hardy and the Windsor Symphony emphasized the audience throughout the night. With an informal approach to the crowd, Hardy shared his experiences and general thoughts at random to the receptive audience.

Probably the most pleasing aspect of the evening was that Hardy attacked the solo trumpet of which they knew they were about to hear the piece which they had anticipated all night.

At no time however was the patron's mind hoping for this conclusion of the concert. The varied program offered by Hardy and the Windsor Symphony enlightened the audience throughout the night. With an informal approach to the crowd, Hardy shared his experiences and general thoughts at random to the receptive audience.

Probably the most pleasing aspect of the evening was that Hardy attacked the solo trumpet of which they knew they were about to hear the piece which they had anticipated all night.

At no time however was the patron's mind hoping for this conclusion of the concert. The varied program offered by Hardy and the Windsor Symphony enlightened the audience throughout the night. With an informal approach to the crowd, Hardy shared his experiences and general thoughts at random to the receptive audience.

The Lancers exhibited the finest outside shooting of any of their OUAA contests this season as they hit 62.5 percent on their shots from the floor in a 110-73 romp over Brock Wednesday night in St. Denis Hall.

As has been the case most of the year, it was Phil Hermannus who did most of the damage from the perimeter with 11 of 14 field goal attempts and 4 of 6 free throws for 26 points. That ups his per game average to 22.5.

Hermannus probably would have scored more except that he sat out much of the second half as the Lancer bench was allowed to take the floor in the runaway game. As such, Ron Wallman picked up 13 points while Mark Landry and Jim Kennedy each added 12.

Jim Zaeseki was high for Brock with 21.

Stan Korosec scored only seven points in the contest as Brock followed the pattern of most Lancer opponents by employing a tight-knit zone to block off the middle. However, Korosec did his job by clearing the boards 17 times.

Kennedy added 13 rebounds and Jim Molyneux 11 as the Lancers outrebounded Brock 64-26 on the game.

"I think we've got a better ball club than we showed tonight," said Brock coach Garney Henley. "But Windsor is the best team we've played. Probably the best ball club in our league."

The Lancers play a pivotal game tonight with the Guelph Gryphons in Guelph, then travel to St. Catharines Saturday for a rematch with Brock.

Windsor — Landry 4-4-12; Hermannus 11-4-26; Holek 3-1-7; Austen 1-0-2; Haplis 1-0-2; Wallman 4-5-11; Ritchie 2-2-6; Korosec 1-7-1; Molyneux 4-1-9; Kennedy 5-2-11. Four University of Windsor players earned honors by meeting qualifying standards. They are: Jenny Pace in the mile), newcomer Linda Apeadu in the 600 yards, newcomer Steve Thatcher in the shot put and newcomer Ray Holland (4:38.1 in the mile), and Ray Holland (4:38.1 in the mile).

The team earned three other medals as well. Jenny Pace received a silver medal in the shot put with a throw of 12.05 meters while Sandor Carson took second in the long jump with a personal best jump of 5.08 meters.

Apeadu also competed in the 60 yards, winning a time of 6.7 and jumped 5.44 meters in the long jump.

Steve Thatcher ran 7.3 in the 60 yards as well as throwing the shot put 13.13 m. for sixth place.

John Key recorded a time of 7.85 seconds in the 60 hurldes. Also competing for the University were Paul Kosak (1:22.8 in the 400 yard), newcomers Mike Bondy (2:44.5 in the 1000 yards), and Ray Holland (4:38.1 in the mile).

Stautz fifth

Linda Stautz finished fifth in the marathon as she ran a week ago last Sunday in Bermuda, but suffered abdominal pains in some parts of the race.

"I felt good for the first fifteen miles," she said. "I had a good five or six minute lead on the other girls but then I started getting abdominal pains. It was my diaphragm.

"I dropped to a jog and then a walk between fifteen and sixteen miles by which time I'd fallen to fourth place," explained Stautz. "I felt better after a while and picked up the pace again and at twenty miles I was in second place. But by that time I was all over again at twenty-three miles. As soon as I tried to run faster I'd get a sharp pain."

Stautz plans to return to Bermuda next year for the same race. "I'll have to redeem myself," she said.

Four University of Windsor athletes have now qualified to compete in the CHA championship by meeting qualifying standards. They are: Jenny Pace in the shot put, Linda Stautz in the 3000 m., and George Henry and Andy Buckstein in the 800 m.
Lancerettes lose to Mac, end season at 9 and 3

by Sue Heyce

The Lancerette basketball team will see no further action this season after a 66-60 loss to McMaster Marauders Saturday. The loss brought Windsor's record to 9-3 on the year and put them in third place in Tier II of the OWIAA basketball league behind Western (13-0) and Ottawa (10-2). Only the top two finishers in Tier II advance to the tournament with the four lowest finishers from Tier I.

Tier II teams move up to Tier I by defeating any team from that Tier, while Tier I teams who lose drop down to Tier II for the following year.

Theresa McGee led Windsor against Mac with 12 points and eight rebounds. Roberts Smith, who had only recently returned to the lineup, added seven points.

The loss brought an abrupt halt to what had been a superb late-season charge by the Lancerettes who had won their last six games including weekend victories over both the University of Ottawa, 45-44, and Carleton University, 84-85.

Windsor 45 Ottawa 44

Saturday's contest with Ottawa's Gee-Gees was an exciting see-saw battle which saw the lead change hands throughout the game.

With the score knotted at 28 at the intermission, Windsor set up an aggressive 2-3 zone defense for the second half which was successful in quieting Ottawa's potent attack. A thirling three-pointer from Diane Minello and a last-second jump shot by Mary Hycay clinched the win. Windsor McGee was high scorer with 14 while Diane Minello added 11. Tracy McNair piled up an amazing 19 rebounds as she sparked the team with her defensive performance.

"Although it was plagued with crucial turnovers, it was still an excellently played game," coach Sue Swain remarked. "I was particularly proud of the team after this one because they maintained their poise and made the pressure baskets when we needed them." Sunday's game with Carleton was less dramatic, but equally fulfilling. Lancerettes trailed by six early in the game, but opened up an 11-point cushion of their own at the half.

The 2-3 zone which had proved so successful against Ottawa completely subdued the Carleton offense.

Gambjohn played an excellent game with 18 points, most coming from inside. Kerri Towers tamed rebounding with 16 each while Theresa McGee and Mary Hycay closed up in 12 and 11 respectively.

Kerri Towers puts the ball up against Ottawa Saturday.

Swain said, "Every one of the remaining eight games has improved in some way and has given everything they have and more to this team. As a coach I can ask for little more."

"They've come a long way this year, despite many adversities, and have proven that hard work and courage do eventually lead to success."

Final tribute

The Lancerettes played their last game in St. Denis Hall Monday night as a final tribute to defeated Show College 75-53. High scores for Windsor were Roberta Smith and Theresa McGee with 12 points each. Smith added 11 rebounds and McCue 10.

Windsor overcame a 10-point halftime deficit by scoring five unanswered baskets into the second half, from which point they never trailed.

Cows and ducks

New games are great fun! Over twenty people participated last Sunday in a series of new, co-operative games such as "cows and ducks", "exterminating beer", "caterpillar" and "hogs and ducks", "cows and ducks", "caterpillar" and "hogs and ducks", "cows and ducks". These games are very popular in the States and have recently become popular in Canada. Donna Fucci, Bob Slotten and Marlene Kimmele should be congratulated for their efforts in making the New Games Night a success.

IM Hockey

With most of the teams having four games under their belts, Commerce B and Eng. Soc. B both lead their respective divisions with perfect 4-0 records. These two teams could be heading for a championship showdown.

In A division play, the 69ers have registered a share of first place after soundly defeating the Western Exiles 6-2. Barry Moreish and Rob Ross had two goals each in that game.

The final months of play should prove very exciting as the playoff positions are still very much in the air. A Division

Some students calling for post-tenure review

by Wendy Coomber

There is a motion presently before the Senate that should have tenured employees here on their toes for a while. In fact, it seems to have had that effect already.

Eric Dixon, student senator, and David Simmons, SAC president, yesterday introduced a motion to the Senate concerning post-tenure review.

The whole concept of tenure, said Dixon, is to allow teachers to teach without being harassed, not to give them a job for life. The motion, he said, will ensure professors remain productive years after they have been hired.

We have the highest percentage of tenured professors in Ontario, said Simmons, and we need some means whereby the professor could be assessed to allow them to make changes for improvement.

We're being positive, said the SAC president. The motion, he said, is "to encourage them to do what they're supposed to do."

The Faculty Association "is obsessed with this academic freedom bit," said Dixon who, with Simmons, thought the Faculty Association was overreacting on the matter.

In turn, the Faculty Association sent a notice to its members on the Senate February 10 which read in part: "The Faculty Association Executive urges all members of Senate, to give this motion the unequivocal rejection that it deserves."

"Mrs. Joanna Foster, Head of the Faculty Association defended tenure as being basic to the purpose of the university and its research. She noted tenure is one way of promoting our high academic standard and that, although the organization disapproved of tenure review, some other form of performance review would be beneficial."

Universities across the province are beginning to look at forms of tenure review. Western was looking at it earlier this year. A presidential committee was recommended last year for a three year grace period for a professor whose performance had been found lacking to correct the problem. Recently, the Senate Committee of Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave at Queen's, while not exactly suggesting tenure review, stated that "Universities ought to try to arrange their affairs to keep more job opportunities open for young, highly qualified applicants."

At the same time, Queen's is also financing a limited number of short-term non-tenure positions. Queen's has 80 percent tenured staff right now and they predict very few vacancies in the future, saying presently there is an average of only 10 retirements per year.

The Senate meeting here dealing with this issue was taking place yesterday (Thursday) as The Lance went to press. A report will be in next week's issue.

Controversial professor resigns

by E.P. Chatt

A letter from one campus president to another has resulted in the setting of what could be an action-packed meeting on February 23.

On that day, at 2:30 p.m., university president Dr. Mervyn Franklin, at Students' Administrative Council President David Simmons' invitation, will meet with campus students to discuss the recently announced 10 percent provincial tuition increase and the possible Board of Governors-approved addition to that increase. The meeting will take place in the University Centre.

In addition to inviting Franklin to such a meeting, Simmons' letter also suggested the establishment of a joint committee of five members of the Board of Governors and five SAC members to examine the situation, and an open Board of Governors meeting to examine any proposed increase.

Franklin did not respond to those requests in his letter, simply because he cannot unilaterally change established Board of Governors' policy.

What he did say (to Simmons in a letter of February 10) was: "I believe that a meeting with students to provide information and respond to concerns is very desirable. Consequently, I have directed the Division of Student Services to arrange for an open forum at the University Centre on "SGS in Fog," Page 3.

WINNIPEG (CUP) — Dave Dueck, the University of Winnipeg collegiate teacher who recently asked a student to leave his class because the student was homosexual, has resigned from his teaching position.

Dean of collegiates John Vanderstoel cited "philosophical incompatibility" as the reason for Dueck's resignation and noted that the recent controversy surrounding the homosexual student incident had been a major influence in Dueck's decision.

"This has been an ongoing thing," Vanderstoel said. "As a teacher, Dave has never been comfortable with the collegiate's secular policy, and feels that he can not continue as it stands now. The gay incident was a testable error by Dueck, but it is not the reason behind his leaving."

It was reported two weeks ago in the University of Winnipeg student newspaper, The Uniter, that Dueck asked the leader of the Undergraduate Students' Association. Dave Cymenko, to leave the classroom where Dueck had a guest lecturer speaking.

"I was trying to protect the guest lecturer," Dueck said. '"I felt that if Greg, who is gay, sat beside the lecturer, the class might think that he too was homosexual. I didn't think it would be fair to the lecturer." Vanderstoel said, prior to Dueck's resignation, the dean met with members of the faculty to determine what course of action would be taken with Dueck.

"They were shocked," Vanderstoel said. "It hit pretty close to home when one of your peers does something stupid like that."

Vanderstoel would not say what faculty decided to do about Dueck.

Dueck insists the incident involving the homosexual student was not discriminatory. "The student was not a regular member of my class. As an instructor I felt it would be in the best interests of my class if the student was not present."

"My cup runneth over"

Does this happen to you? You're not alone.

Stuart Smith liberally answers political queries

by E. P. Chant

Prematurely introduced as “Mr. Premier” by Students’ Administrative Council Vice-President Jim Shaban, provincial Liberal leader Dr. Stuart Smith was on campus Monday afternoon garnering votes in this, the incumbent Conservative government in the election on March 19, Smith answered the questions of those students packed into the Mini-Mint Courtyard in the Law Parlor holding.

The first question, asked by SAC President David Simmons, was whether he felt the province would need to raise taxes this year. Smith responded that it was unlikely because the economy was growing.

Smith then fielded questions about his economic policies, foreign policy, and education. He also took the opportunity to personally campaign for his supporters on campus.

Security is a little lacking

by Laurel Brandt

During most of the year, male guests at Laurier Hall are required to be signed in and receive passes before they can get above the first floor. The pass system was not in effect while the university was shut down for the Christmas holidays. Staying in residence at that time were mainly foreign students and St. Clair College students.

On January 13, one of the residents of Laurier was touched by a man who managed to get above the first floor. He was caught by the security force, which then closed off the dormitory for a brief time.

The biggest security problems are associated with law enforcement. The university is closed down for the Christmas holidays, would be more difficult for the security force to make sure no damage is done.

A woman officer has been added to the Security force, Mary Ann Elliott. Disruptive students may find it easier to talk to another woman, and Melver says the former Windsor policeman is “doing excellently.”

To avoid an incident, Melver advises students not to lend out their keys, and lock their rooms at all times. Engaging a student or Social Insurance number on valuable items, a project similar to Operation Identification which is used extensively in the United States, is also a good idea.

The Director of Residences explained that, when the University is closed down for the holidays, staff is cut back. Security at the residences suffers at these times. The U of W Security force does make random patrols, mainly in the public areas and sometimes in the hallways.

A suggested alternative, having all residents live in two buildings during holidays, would not be well received, McMurray claims. He feels students prefer their autonomy and the independence of living in the building of their own choice.

He suggests that the hope of the future lies in a new student Security force which is being set up now and should be out implemented in the fall. Similar programs have been successful at other universities including Western and Queen’s.

The biggest security problems are in the residences last year were broken windows and stolen items. McMurray hopes the peer pressure of a student security force could cut down on these problems. He also hopes students could organize residence patrols at times when the university is shut down.

The Student Services Committee is in charge of putting together the student Security program. Ken Long, the Dean of Students, is coordinating efforts to implement the program.

He feels everyone will benefit from the program. Studies have shown working students do better in their classes. There are plenty of students who want employment. The university will have a low turnover.

He sees the function of student security as similar to that of the student ambassadors. Student Security people could be useful at sporting events, concerts, or the pub. They would have the authority to assist when or where requested to make sure no lanyard is a door. However, they would not be associated with law enforcement.

Meanwhile, some Laurier residents avoid being alone, living in the old adage of “safety in numbers.”

The Diary of Ten Boom

The true-life story of Corrie Ten Boom, a former Nazi prisoner, will be presented in the motion picture, The Hidden Place, on February 26 at 7:00 p.m. at the University Centre in Room 117 of the Math Building.

This story of tragedy and victory shares the experiences of a Christian family that was willing to risk all for others. The Ten Boom family aided the Dutch underground during the German occupation of World War II, by hiding Jews in a secret room in their house.

Tickets will be available at the door and one week in advance at the University Centre, Cost $1.00. The movie feature is sponsored by four on-campus groups: InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, Windsor Chinese Christian Fellowship, Northeast Asian Chinese Bible Fellowship, and the Chinese Baptist Church in Windsor.
The following is the record of two articles on a per- son's potential interaction with the police. This week, we discuss arrests and bail procedures, as well as the re- moval of a criminal record.

Arrests will often be made under the power of a war- rant to arrest. A warrant is an order from a justice of the peace which authorizes the arrest of a person sus- pected of having committed a criminal offence. These warrants will be served by the police in most cases. A warrant is not always necessary, however, for a legal arrest to be made.

A peace officer may arrest without warrant anyone found in the act of committing a criminal offence. He may also arrest any person whom he knows, or rea- sonably believes, has committed or is about to commit an indictable or serious offence. In making an arrest, the officer is authorized to use only the amount of force required and he must inform the individual, if asked, why the arrest is being made unless it is obvious from the circumstances.

If you are stopped by the police because they suspect you of having committed an offence, the police officer has three alternatives. First, he may formally place you under arrest in which case you must accompany him to the police station. Instead, he may issue you with an “appearance notice”. This document will contain your name, the offence alleged and the time and place at which you must attend at court to answer the charge. If an appearance notice is issued, you are free to go about your business until the day set for your appearance in court.

The third alternative is to release you immediately and arrange to have a summons sent to you. A summons is authorized by a justice of the peace and will contain the charge and date of hearing. Failure to obey an ap­pearance notice or summons is a very serious offence, probably more serious than the original charge.

In Canada an accused must be granted bail for most offences unless the Crown Attorney can show cause why bail should be denied. In effect, the prosecutor must establish that detention is necessary in the public interest, that is, for the protection and safety of the pub­lic, or that detention is necessary to ensure the accused’s attendance in court.

The justice of the peace or judge can impose several conditions if he decides to release the accused. First, he may order that the accused remain in a particular geographical area. As well, the accused or a surety (someone who acts on behalf of the accused) may be required to prom­ise to pay a sum of money should the accused fail to appear in court for trial. Finally, the accused or a surety may be required to make a cash deposit. This cash de­posit must be a reasonable amount and should not be so large as to be equivalent to the amount of bail set.

Remember, you have a right to see a justice of the peace within 24 hours.

A criminal record arises from a registered conviction for a criminal offence and can have far-reaching effects on an individual. Employment can be difficult to obtain for one who holds a criminal record. Jobs which require bonding, civil service jobs and many professions (for example, law) may be closed to the holder of a criminal record. If you are not a citizen of Canada and are convicted of certain offences, you could be deported. Further, entry into other countries could be denied if you just your one wishing to enter Canada could be forbidden to do so because of a prior criminal record.

A criminal record can be removed if a pardon is granted. Applications for pardon can be made to the Federal Parole Board after a waiting period of two years for a summary conviction offence and five years for an indictable offence.

If one requires further information on any items mentioned in this article, contact the Community Legal Aid Office in the basement of the Law School. Telephone number 253-7150 or ext. 160.

Theft and mutilation all in the life of a library book

by Kishor Oza

The university’s Lexy Library continues to experience a growing theft problem. “We can literally sell our books, they can easily steal from us”, said head librarian Al Maze.

Despite the guards and the electronic devices, people manage to steal over 500 books annually, costing taxpayers and students over $10,000. “They do not steal the books for their value,” said Maze, “but simply for the convenience of having the books at hand, making references, and reserving materials to use in your research.”

But many do not steal the books - they simply tear out the pages and pictures they want and leave the books behind. This, according to Maze, is one of the biggest problems because damaged books cannot be used by others and must be reco­vered - that is, if they can be recovered.

Since many of the older books are no longer in print and so cannot be replaced, the library stocks many recent books needed by students for courses.

“Pat Suttor, it is very foolishly left unattended and wallets lifted from coats and even pockets. It is a certain amount of theft and we find out a book is missing or damaged is when another student needs it but can’t find it.”

Many people use stolen books - they simply tear out the pages and pictures they want and leave the books behind. This, according to Maze, is one of the biggest problems because damaged books cannot be used by others and must be recovered - that is, if they can be recovered.

The Justice of the Peace can impose several conditions if he decides to release the accused. First, he may order that the accused remain in a particular geographical area. Finally, the accused or a surety may be required to make a cash deposit. This cash deposit must be a reasonable amount and should not be so large as to be equivalent to the amount of bail set.

A criminal record arises from a registered conviction for a criminal offence and can have far-reaching effects on an individual. Employment can be difficult to obtain for one who holds a criminal record. Jobs which require bonding, civil service jobs and many professions (for example, law) may be closed to the holder of a criminal record. If you are not a citizen of Canada and are convicted of certain offences, you could be deported. Further, entry into other countries could be denied if you just your one wishing to enter Canada could be forbidden to do so because of a prior criminal record.

A criminal record can be removed if a pardon is granted. Applications for pardon can be made to the Federal Parole Board after a waiting period of two years for a summary conviction offence and five years for an indictable offence.

The theft and mutilation all in the life of a library book

by Kishor Oza

The university’s Lexy Library continues to experience a growing theft problem. “We can literally sell our books, they can easily steal from us”, said head librarian Al Maze.

Despite the guards and the electronic devices, people manage to steal over 500 books annually, costing taxpayers and students over $10,000. “They do not steal the books for their value,” said Maze, “but simply for the convenience of having the books at hand, making references, and reserving materials to use in your research.”

But many do not steal the books - they simply tear out the pages and pictures they want and leave the books behind. This, according to Maze, is one of the biggest problems because damaged books cannot be used by others and must be recovered - that is, if they can be recovered.

Since many of the older books are no longer in print and so cannot be replaced, the library stocks many recent books needed by students for courses.

“Pat Suttor, it is very foolishly left unattended and wallets lifted from coats and even pockets. It is a certain amount of theft and we find out a book is missing or damaged is when another student needs it but can’t find it.”

Many people use stolen books - they simply tear out the pages and pictures they want and leave the books behind. This, according to Maze, is one of the biggest problems because damaged books cannot be used by others and must be recovered - that is, if they can be recovered.

The Justice of the Peace can impose several conditions if he decides to release the accused. First, he may order that the accused remain in a particular geographical area. As well, the accused or a surety (someone who acts on behalf of the accused) may be required to promise to pay a sum of money should the accused fail to appear in court for trial. Finally, the accused or a surety may be required to make a cash deposit. This cash deposit must be a reasonable amount and should not be so large as to be equivalent to the amount of bail set.

Remember, you have a right to see a justice of the peace within 24 hours.

The Fortnighter

BY CHRIS WOODROW

Isn't it always the little things in life that succeed in aggravating one the most? Niggling though they are, they always manage to get one's dander up to such a degree that frustration wins the day, making logical and rational action impossible.

One species that constantly frustrates me are vending machines, particularly ones whose crafty way is to dispense coffee and other similar stimulants. It's very difficult to be pleasant to an impersonal machine solely intent on wresting your change out from you. Lately this has become impossible because Canteen Canada, in its infinite wisdom, has deemed it fit to stock its machines with lids that in no way come close to fitting the cups.

Even the most skilful and devious having a hard time trying to fit the lid on the cup. Maybe Canteen Canada is giving a priori to the lucky contestants who happen to find a cup and lid that go together. My advice is to hang onto a cup and lid that go together because very soon the combination will be available. If you see people walking to class carrying empty cups, don't act startled; all they're doing is taking the cup and like home, washing them, and bringing them back to campus to re-use.

Attempts to fit the lids on the cups is a non-issue - it's a "hever win" situation. Either your coffee squirrels out and burns your hands when you squeeze the lid on or you carry the cup with the lid half on with the coffee spraying around inside, occasionally spewing out onto the floor.

Are the lids too small for the cups or are the cups too big for the lids? (Ed. Note: Ever notice how your hat doesn't fit, Woodrow? Think about it.) Smacks of the chicken of the egg theory, but I wonder whether or not Canteen Canada is aware of the problem. Maybe it's part of their master plan to increase their profit. If the lids don't fit and the coffee spills out, people will buy more, thus increasing their profit margin. It sounds silly but, Canteen Canada is concerned, can tell what they're thinking?

The advertisement was no one's fault in particular but rather a collective lapse on the part of the pub, SAC, and the Central Bureau of Advertising (Mark Greene for short). The problem mightn't have ever arisen if the subsidy had not been published in the first place but, said Greene, "It was my understanding that the subsidy would be for two days prior to publishing, that a subsidy in this circumstance was acceptable."

Stanton, in an interview, said subsidisation is not legal with the type of licence held by the pub. She called the LCBO director immediately after discovering the ad, which was minutes after the paper was out. The Liquor Control Board told her not to release the paper or to get rid of the ad. Naturally, she refused to do so. The paper was pulled down our littleinky fingers and released a chorus of "freedom of the press," and all that.

At the second resolution, we slowly began hauling the bundles of Lancs (each holding 150 copies), feebly crying out for black magic markers, and mechanically drew the intoxicating ink over four lines of the "Doug and the Slugs" ad, 5,000 times for three and a half hours.

Luckily, this writer and two others skipped off for Ottawa after only a couple of hours, but then that's another story.

Stanton said the concert was changed back to the pub because the event is on a Monday, an early week night, and the appeal of the pub would be greater than that of the auditorium.

And the moral of the story is (guess) communication! See, we're all supposed to be communicators, up here at The Lance anyway. All it takes is one little slip of the tongue to have the paper quoting you at your/-like home, washing them, and bring them back to campus to reuse.

The letter to the Editor over the signature "Dear Editor," is just a trashy tirade. I predict that it will never see the light of day.

I am writing to express my disagreement with the editorial "Dealing with the media" in The Lance, Vol. LIII, No. 17, February 6, 1981, Page 4.

The editorial states that "The media are no longer a one-sided monopoly," which I believe is not true. I think that the media still have a lot of power and can influence public opinion.

I hope that you will consider my points and give them due consideration.

The conference was highlighted by the visit of Paul Jones, newly-hired Executive Director of Canadian University Press (CUP) Media Services, a national advertising agency formed recently by CUP.

Also of note was a seminar of newspaper ethics conducted by professor Joe Scanlon of the Journalism Department at Carleton. The professor, a well-known "cut-throat" newspaperman, gave everyone a lesson in the myth of conscience and unbiased, objective reporting. In other words, he made his largely idealistic listeners question their motives in scooping the "big story".

The Canadian University Press is a co-operative of university and college newspapers from across the country. There are approximately 65 member papers in the co-operative. The Lance is a prospective member paper in CUP. As such our paper receives certain benefits from that organization but does not have an official vote in their national elections.

The Lance was a strong member of CUP until it pulled out of the organization recently. But is always faced with the choice of whether it wants to join again or not. We'll be facing that decision once more this December.

Come Say Good-bye!
EVERYONE IS WELCOME

Dear Editor,

At a Canadian and a student, I feel alienated from the idea of pictorial ID and its associated concepts.

The university should not be considered by itself. It is, in law, part of our country and spirit, part of every country. We make students welcome here from all over the world.

The university is a public institution maintained by taxes, not by student fees. The public's right to use the universities, libraries is an integral part of a society which believes in the civil liberties of the individual rather than in the regimentation of a totalitarian regime.

The idea that students should take precedence over non-students at the pub is contemptible. After all, who built the Student Centre? The taxpayers of the Soviet Union? There should be no more need for ID at the pub than at any other public house.

Pictorial ID would result in an erosion of our rights to privacy and dignity. Except to those with movie-star faces, it would be an embarrassing form of identification. It would be a nuisance at registration.

Imagine what an uproar there would be if the National Department of Citizenship and Immigration decided to mandate pictorial Social Insurance cards!

The members of SAC who oppose pictorial ID are defenders of the freedom that should be found in a free and open society like ours, the pub notwithstanding. It should be opened up too. This is Canada, not just a few university buildings.

If the acts of the Ontario legislature which are the legal instruments under which the administration operates are examined, it may be seen that unnecessary bureaucratic rules and procedures can be challenged in a court of law. Lawsuits and the threat of lawsuits may be an effective way to prevent the thrustless use of time and money by the administration and the hamfisted expansion of bureaucratic power.

The most unfortunate effect of pictorial ID will not be its complete needlessness. Most depressing of all will be a measurable feeling of discomfort and self-consciousness that will accompany this loss in individualization to an overly-rigid group conformity.

Men who should be among the most cultured and civilized among us — namely our Board of Governors — should not be as insensitive as they have been certainly not as authoritarian. In a democracy, an issue as important as this one should be put to a vote by the student body.

Don't be alarmed — this is only a job interview

by Scott McCulloch

Irene Schen of the Student Placement Office will be giving a studentship lecture this week concerning the interview and what employers really want, next Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in the Speaker's Pit at the University Centre.

After graduating from the University of Windsor with a B.A. in economics, Mrs. Schen worked for eight years at the Office of Employment and Insurance downtown before a retirement gave her the opportunity to work in the Student Placement Office at her alma mater three years ago.

Schen is still a part-time student, taking some business courses at night. "I love the campus atmosphere," she says.

"Most of the information I'll be giving about interviews comes from direct contact with employers," Schen says. "They're the best source. If you are going to read books about it, don't just look at one. Students should look at several and come to an understanding of what works for them."

Schen stresses the importance of "doing your homework" and finding out something about the company to which you're applying. "Bring a list of questions in with you if you want. It shows you're interested. That's the most important thing," Schen feels. "Don't be too laid-back. Make each employer feel you're interested only in them."

Schen doesn't neglect the importance of appropriate dress either. "Do anything you can to set you apart from the rest. If you're well dressed, it makes a good impression as soon as you walk in the door."

The Student Placement Office has a list of seventy popular interview questions. "Some of them don't apply," she admits, "but it's surprising how many come up again and again. Some employers might even ask you to tell a story. They're just interested in how you handle questions, how you field questions, how you handle yourself! They know the technical stuff from the resume. The interview is just a question of personalities clicking."

Schen tells students not to be discouraged if they are rejected even after they feel an interview has gone well. "It just means someone had something more," she says. "You have to consider the market. If you feel you have some drawback, you should come talk to myself or Pat Pare. Pare, of the Writing Development Center, will be doing a studentship lecture on Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. in the Speaker's Pit about "the resume," and has worked closely with Schen over the years.

"I've done the lecture for other groups too," Schen says. "Law students, the Home Economics club, fourth year social workers. If your group would like to hear it, Stuart Meaghran (Manager of the Student Placement Office) or myself would be glad to do it."

Don't wait til summer

by F.P. Chant

Economically depressed Windsor in the winter is not a particularly wonderful time of year to be about finding a job in the good old summertime, but it is time to start the search nevertheless.

Now that the Canada Employment Centre for Students (CECS) has hired its three supervisors, high school and university students have an effective place to begin their search.

The centre, said supervisor Paul Chemish in an interview, is there "to find students for employers and employers for students." Last year, mainly in June and July, approximately 3,000 students found work through the CECS.

This year, said Chemish, the office plans to surpass all figures from before; he admitted that would be difficult considering the city's economic situation.

Next week, the supervisors will begin the "employer relations" phase of their jobs which entails soliciting jobs from city employers. Chemish explained that the severe decline and layoffs in the manufacturing sector would mean a shortage of factory jobs for students. Ford and Chrysler would be "big zeroes", he said, while General Motors would be hiring some but certainly not as many as in the past.

Instead, Chemish is expecting a lot of "householding" jobs for high school students (cooking, painting) and sales and service jobs for university students. In addition, some summer Campanda (SumCan) youth employment projects will be devised by government and Chemish thinks, a number of young people will be placed in the mil­

Time part-time jobs will also be available to university summer school students.

One of the major advantages of the CECS is that it is a free service, unlike private employment agencies. To help it find you a job, however, you should register early — as soon as you can.

The CECS office is presently located in the main federal employment office at 467 University Ave. W. (224-2152 or campus extension 269). It is possible that the service may move to a separate office later this spring (as it did last year), but that is not definite yet. In April, however, all records from the Student Placement Office in this campus are moved into the general city office.

It's been a good week for double letters.

Maybe, as it is "Slack Week" in the pub, just maybe they employed bands who can't spell (air) on purpose.

Monday through Wednesday Stuttz was on hand to entertain. Their heavy metal sound provided ample warmth for those who braved the early week's weather.

The sound of Van Halen was typical of the groups performing.

The lead vocalists were close to those of Ian Gillan, former lead vocalist of Deep Purple.

The sound of Van Halen was typical of the groups performing.

Almost every music lover enjoys himself standing on a stage, with crowds of people cheering, and cameras flashing, as he picks up his instrument and begins to play. Many dream of becoming rich and famous, but for most, it will remain just a dream!

According to Ray Turner, part-time professor of music at the University of Windsor and trombone player with The Detroit Symphony Orchestra, the chances of playing professionally are a million to one against you.

"The competition is rough, and the market is small."

During the seminar (part of the School of Music Wednesday-at-3 lectures) last week, Turner attempted to explain the job market by saying that the total number of possible job openings in the Michigan area next year will be below six, and the number of people trying for these openings will exceed two hundred. Only "those with the best grades, skills and ability will stand a chance."

According to Turner the quality of music instruction in our grade schools and high schools is very poor and does not prepare students for the rigid program at university. Thus students must be retained all the disciplines of music and taught to drop bad habits learned earlier, so as to prepare them for what lies ahead.

"The only way to beat your competitors is to be the best, and that requires ambition and hard work. But many students have no ideas as to where they are going or what they will do. And often they are not prepared for the competition," said Turner. "Music is not a science, it is an art. One that requires a great deal of discipline and sacrifice!"

Role of schooling

The role of the university and the professors is to train the students so that they can meet the competition, but the rest of it is up to the individual.

"The only way to beat your competitors is to be the best, and that requires ambition and hard work. But many students have no ideas as to where they are going or what they will do. And often they are not prepared for the competition," said Turner. "Music is not a science, it is an art. One that requires a great deal of discipline and sacrifice!"

Turner went on to say that he would not discourage any music enthusiast from seeking a career in music, "even though the market is tight, there is room if you are good, and have the drive to succeed!" There is always room for a good teacher, and that perhaps is where most of the jobs today are, and if your "bag" is to perform, then you can always work freelance, but there is no security and you will make enough just to eat and pay the rent.

If you do not find work at all, the discipline which you learn from playing an instrument will help you in life and in any other field that you may choose. This, says Turner, is what justifies us teaching hundreds of kids when we know only a handful will make it.

Sex doesn't matter

The situation is exactly the same for women as it is for men, but in some instances it may be harder for the women. In both cases, however, the chances for employment are better in the United States than in Canada, even through Canada is stressing the hiring of Canadian rather than American talent, because of the larger market and demand. Your chances in California or New York would be much better than anywhere in Canada.

The key ingredients to success in the music industry, or any of the other arts, is 1% inspiration, 99% hard work and a whole lot of luck!!
Fort Apache, The Bronx, is an exemplary cowboys and Indians movie set in, no, not the wild, wild west of the past, but in the eastern, urban sprawl of the present.

The film is a life-like dramatization of two cops, performing their 'routine' duties, at the 41st precinct, in "The Bronx". Notorious for having the highest crime rate in New York City, this precinct is appropriately named, "Fort Apache".

Paul Newman’s portrayal of officer Murphy will more than likely become another one of his ‘classic’ roles, comparable to those in Hud and Cool Hand Luke. Like Fast Eddy in The Hustler, Murphy is confronted with the sudden and tragic death of a local one, and, the scene in Fort Apache is just as memorable. It is Newman’s finest moment.

Paul’s new protege, Ken Hahl, is destined to follow in the famed footsteps of Newman’s former celluloid sidekick, Robert Redford.

Wahl as Murphy’s partner, officer Corelli, may lack the polish and experience that Redford has but the talent is there and his future looks promising.

Murphy and Corelli answer to commanding officer Connally (Edward Asner), who is new to the 41st and determined to ‘clean up’ The Bronx. One of Connally’s first decrees prompts concerned and angry citizens to virtually surround the precinct station-house. The scene is reminiscent of a Saturday afternoon western, with covered wagons in a circle and pioneers bravely staving off the Indians.

As Connally, Asner is, merely good. Unfortunately, he’s neither ‘Lou’ from the Lou Grant Show, nor is he ‘Mr. Grant’ from The Mary Tyler Moore Show. His character is somewhere in between.

Women in this film are seemingly treated with respect, and yet, their presence in the film is superfluous and unnecessary. Murphy’s girlfriend, Isabella (Rachel Ticotin), is a nurse but she may as well have been a dance hall girl in the corner saloon. Perhaps the most useless female character in the entire movie is Teresa (Kathleen Beller). Although she is Corelli’s fiancée, her appearance in the movie does nothing to advance the plot.

It takes a whore to steal the show and Charlotte (Pam Grier), is a prostitute-junkie who manages to stay straight enough to kill a few cops and have everyone in the Bronx borough totally frantic.

Fleetwood Mac: Live
by Neil Buohoe

Some people think Fleetwood Mac are pretentious, over-rated, over-representations of the profitable brand of music that filters out of Southern California. These people even level that filters out of Southern California. These people even level their low-down, low-life music. They even level with the School of Music Artists Series. Critics should listen to Live.

The most exciting songs on the album are the ones in the old Fleetwood Mac style—"Oh Well" and "I'm So Afraid." The latter, though written by Buckingham with its anthemic guitar solo and oom-pah organ sound, is like late sixties Fleetwood Mac. "Go Your Own Way" is almost as good as the first two, but it is marred by an opening Buckingham sneer similar to the sound of a car being strangled.

Lovers of the Fleetwood Mac album will not be disappointed. "Over and Over," "Listen to America" and "Over Here" are performed with as much feeling as the originals and even more beautiful harmonies. This is partially a result of the excellent quality of the recording. Like Two, Live is digitally mastered and recorded. If there is one criticism of the album it is that it does not completely capture the feeling of the concert I saw in May primarily because of the omission of one song—"The Chain." In concert this was the second song and the electric twisters of the guitar and bass of Buckingham and John McVie pulled people out of their seats. Despite this omission Live is an entirely satisfying album which captures a band whose music defined the mid-seventies and shows that Fleetwood Mac is a true rock band, not mere creations of the studio and not wimpy.

Psychedelic Furs
by John Lidlre

With a name like the Psychedelic Furs you've got to wonder how the band could possibly lose. Don't be mistaken, the Psychedelic Furs do not play psychedelic music — at least not in the '60's sense that you'd expect. Instead of attack spots, create the mood, and, best of all, leave you thinking. In the '60's it was drugs, sitars, and Zen. In the '80's, according to the Psychedelic Furs, it's drugs, guitars, and a Bible.

Like any band with the title "Psychedelic Furs," it's drugs, guitars, and a Bible. Like their '60's counterparts, the Furs' music has a lyrical base bordering on the expressionistic. In order to understand where the Furs are coming from, (someone between England and the Twilight Zone), proper lyrics are imperative. Most of the songs are poignant, critical-vocal views of modern society, or (is it the lack of modern society?) In "Soap Commercial" gravel-voiced lead singer Richard Butler points out to us that "this is my drug and this is you and this is called a dream and this is the drug you use and mine is called to keep you off this drug on channel nine.

The most compelling songs on the album are "Flowers," "Pulse," the latter of which only the truly selfish and conscious would find unsettling. In "Pulse," Butler paints a surreal scene with his juxtaposition of images: "my baby points herself out but her hair is dead and her eyes are open she's living in the city but the buildings that scream we are all at war. We are all at war. They dance in their swirl point the sky upon the ceiling". On this, I wouldn't recommend this album to the notoriously happy. Like any band with the Chetraah to label themselves as "psychedelic," the Furs know where to draw the line. In fact, some of their slower, saxophone-oriented songs "Sister Fury" and "The Assassination of Christ" are among their best. Another, "Sister of Mine" comes off as being almost optimally drenched. The song, like psychedelic, has a subtle, hypnotic flair to it.

The Psychedelic Furs direct their songs at the modern thinker, not the modern Neanderthal. As well, they're a band whose evolution and success seems a natural musical movement after the post Sex Pistols era (or is it postwar?) barrage of heavy metal punk. Instead of attacking everything and anything, the Psychedelic Furs pick their spots, create the mood, and, best of all, leave you thinking.

I believe . . .

Basketball team is overlooking one man

I have seen nine of the Lancer basketball team's OUAA contests thus far this season as well as having witnessed a fair percentage of exhibition matches. One thing is clear, that the restocking of veteran starters Jim Molyneux, Stan Korosec, Phil Hermannutz and John Ritchie has given the Lancers a solid base from which to build another OUAA West championship team - one that certainly has the potential to go farther.

A lot of the credit may have to go to the more relaxed mood which apparently surrounds the Windsor campus in comparison to years gone by. And, the fact that the starters are given a chance in the game and get hot: But that's not the point of this article.

The point, painfuilly so, is that there are only four names at the top of this column, and four players do not make a basketball team make. Who is that fifth player? Your guess is as good as mine.

For now, I believe the words, "to stimulate and promote sound character and sportsmanship," are not being observed.

Quality over quantity is the key here. Why then is he not given more floor time? Many point to his being prone to sluggishness on the court. But, after watching him, you have to admit it's worth it.

"We didn't think it was necessary to take any action against Guelph" said Mark Landry, who topped all scorers with 28 points while pulling down an even handful of 63 field goals (65 percent) and 25 of 39 free throws.

Lancers in the OUAA West.

The first-place finisher receives a bye in the first round of the playoffs and hosts the tournament's top four teams left after the first round.

Twenty-one turnouts were a big reason for Windsor's failure to take control of the Guelph game. Also factors were a healthy Nick Grabowski who scored a game high 26 points, the return of Peter Smith who potted 11, and a great offensive game from Derrick Lewis (18). Guelph also got big scores from Tom Heaps with 20 and Rick Dundas with 17 .

Phil Hermannutz was tops for Windsor with 20 while Jim Molyneux added 17, Stan Korosec 16 and John Ritchie and Brian Hulse 10 apiece.

"We're not a quick team and we thought we needed an extra big man. "I saw the smart Windsor," said Guelph coach Gib Chapman. "That was the first start for Smith since the Laurier game (second game of the season)." Like so many other opposing coaches, Chapman too had praise for the Lancers' big man.

"I was quoted in The Starting Line-Up as saying that Korosec was one of three legitimate all-Ontario guards this year," Chapman said, "I didn't see anything tonight to change my mind.

The two others were York's David Coushard and Acadia's Telefou. As far as Grabowski was concerned, it was Windsor's lack of offense that caused the Lancers' problems.

"We didn't look at the basket and the stats show it," Grabowski complained. "We took something like 50 shots (59) and you have to take more shots than you did. We shot well when we did." Lancers hit 34 of 59 shots from the floor and 13 of 21 from the line while Guelph connected on 40 of 81 from the floor and 16 of 24 from the line.

Windsor trailed 48-45 at the half.

Lancers now 7-2 in second

by Steve Rice

Windsor Lancers dominated all facets of the game Wednesday night as they felled McMaster Marauders 107-88 safe within the confines of St. Denis Hall. The win avenged an 81-80 loss the Lancers suffered at the hands of the Mac in the second game of the season.

The Lancer attack was led by the friendly giant, Stan Korosec, who topped all scorers with 28 points and pulled down 28 rebounds. That, in only about 35 minutes of playing time with rests and fouling out with just under six minutes left to play in the game.

"If he doesn't make all-Canadian this year, I don't know what they're looking at," remarked coach Nick Grabowski.

"Korosec is the best quiet man in the country," Punch said. "We can't hold him. He's too good, too good with bad basic talent."

Kind words

Punch, noted as the most colorful coach in the league with two technical fouls on the game to prove it, also had kind words for Windsor as a team.

"I think Windsor's the class of the league, I can't see how Guelph beat them. Nick has done a good job with the team. It's nice to see Windsor players getting a chance to stay in the game and get hot," Phil Hermannutz was spot on his game average with 23 despite limited time. "You need to play good with the Marauders and it's not a game of work to do defensively." Windsor led 49-38 at the half.

Lancerettes ready to play

by Chris Ledgebow

The Lancerette volleyball team will compete in the preliminaries of the Ontario university championships this weekend in Waterloo. Windsor qualified for this meet by winning four of five matches at the West versus Central interlock at Laurier two weeks ago.

by Tom Viegandt

The Lancer hockey team finished its season with a horrendous 1-6 loss to the playoff-bound Western Mustangs in London Wednesday. Windsor finished with an 8-13-1 record for eighth place in the 12-team league.

Lancer goals came from Scott Kolody, Pat Byrne and Marty Slower. No other information was available at time of printing.

Overmatched, but undaunted, the Lancers fought their inevitable slide into oblivion by splitting a pair of weekend contests with two of the best teams in the country.

Saturday, the Lancers played the University of Toronto Varsity Blues to a standstill for two periods, only to have the floodgates open in the third. Final score: 6-2 Toronto.

Johnston outstanding

The loss overshadowed a standout performance by Don Johnston, outgoing Lancer netminder, who turned aside several point blank drives and breakaways in spectacular fashion. But by no means were the Lancers dominated. In fact, they ousett Toronto 26-19 through two periods and finished even for the game at 34.

"We really lost the intensity in the final 10 minutes and made some fundamental errors," said Windsor coach Bob Corran. "That made the difference. Lancer tallies were donated by Len Christe on the powerplay and Scott Kolody. Period scores were: 1-0 Toronto, 1-1.

Windsor 4 York 3

Sunday's match with the pretty-painted York squad was vintage Windsor hockey. Defensively, the Lancers cleared the crease and flushed out the slot, making possible a 4-3 triumph that was highlighted by another key Johnston performance.

"Don came up with some very big saves when we needed them," Corran said. "He played a very solid game.

"We played the body well and I think that slowed York down. There was a brief period in the second period when they dominated, but other than that, we had good control of the game."

The fast-breaking, risk-taking Yeomen turned in a surprisingly-paced effort, but all antics were confined to the neutral zone. The opportunistic Lancers executed the cost, as evidenced by two breakaway goals.

Kevin Breacken and Dave Easter each netted two for Windsor. Period scores were: 1-0 Windsor, 1-1.

Borner wins three

Women's swim team wins dual meet

The University of Windsor Lancerette swim team defeated the University of Western Ontario 64-52 in a dual meet held at the Human Kinetics pool Saturday.

Both Lancerette relay teams placed first, the medley relay consisting of Patti Roy, Kathy Samson, Jenny Agnew and Gill Stevens and the freestyle relay of Charlene Aitken, Kim Woytuck, Lauren Yee and Anne Friesinger.

The strongest individual performances came from Megan Borner, a first-year Communications Studies student, who took three firsts: in the 50, 100 and 200 metre freestyle races, and Gill Stevens, a four-year Human Kinetics major, who once again qualified for the Canadian university championships with her winning time of 1:02.7 in the 100 metre butterfly. Stevens also won the 400 metre freestyle.

On the board, Petra Uhlig placed first on the three metre and second on the one metre. In her first meet of the year, Cathy Fair placed third on the one metre board. Uhlig has already qualified for the CIAU championships in Toronto March 4-6.

Key also meets standard

Three University of Windsor athletes fared well at the Ontario senior track and field championships held in Toronto Saturday.

Linda Staudt placed second in the 3,000 metre run with a time of 9:53.8, Sandee Carson second in the high jump with a leap of 1.65 metres (about 5' 5"), and Paul Roberts eighth in the 1,500 metres with his time of 4:01.0.

Last week in The Lance it was reported that four athletes—Staudt, Jenny Pace, George Henry and Andy Buck—had qualified for the CIAU championships in Saskatoon March 13-14. Excluded from that list was John Key who qualified for the event with his time of 7.8 seconds in the 60 yard high hurdles (8'-0"), set at the Mountie Relays Jan. 31.

Spike Barry (134 lbs.), in the 190-lb. weight class, 'Spike' Barry (134 lbs.) in the high jump with a leap of 1.65 metres (about 5' 5"), set at the Mountie Relays Jan. 31.

Windsor grapplers take three golds at open meet

by Dominic D'Amore

The Lancer wrestling team and the Windsor Wrestling Club (W.W.C.) led by coach and fellow competitor Mike (Spike) Barry, showed a very competitive spirit and performed well at the Windsor Open Wrestling tournament Sunday at St. Denis Hall.

Present were two of Canada's finest wrestlers, John Park of London, and Barry, both members of the national wrestling team.

Windsor captured three gold medals in the meet: Dan Branzigan, in the 190lb. weight class, 'Spike' Barry (134 lbs.) and Dan Moonie in the heavy weight class.

Windsor placed no other athletes in the top three of the remaining nine weight classes. The meet included grapplers from the University of Western Ontario, University of Guelph as well as teams from Toronto, Waterloo, Hamilton, Kingston and Michigan.

St. Denis Hall was also the setting of the 12th Annual High School Wrestling meet on Saturday, where three W.W.C. members proved themselves outstanding. The wrestlers are, Terry Champagne of Forster Collegiate (1st.), Jerry Champagne also of Forster (3rd.), and Calvin Proctor of W.D. Lowe (2nd.).

The Windsor wrestlers are now training for the main event of the year, the OUA wrestling championships which will be held in London on February 18, 1981.

Ott. Sabre team No. 1

by Peter Haggett

The Lancer fencing team closed out its competitive Ontario season last weekend at Western with a third place finish in the OUAA championships.

For the third year in a row, the sabre team captured the OUAA crown. For Peter Ott, it was his third straight Ontario individual championship. On the season, Ott posted a phenomenal 63-2 record.

Wayne Walczak, despite suffering from a bad cold, finished fourth individually. The third team member, Dave Marsh, narrowly missed the championship pool.

Both foil and epee teams placed third provincially. A disappointing performance from Iranian Olympic fencer Hassan Niknam kept the foil team from possible higher standing.

The surprise of the Lancer team was epee member Todd Rocky. Although only having fenced for three months, Rocky was able to beat eventual epee champion Bruno Scherzingter of Toronto twice. Quite an accomplishment when one considers that the latter has fenced for over six years.

"Todd was dynamite," remarked sabre captain Ott. "He showed spirit which should help this team for years to come.

The future is where the fencing team is looking now. With only epee captain Craig Bennett leaving, this team will next year have a chance to improve on what has to be considered a disappointing season, albeit hard to call a third-place OUAA finish disappointing.

"We have never had a better team than we had this year," said captain Eli Sukenda. "We're certainly among the best Canadian teams around."

The Lancers close out their season at the Great Lakes Championship in March, where they will face top-ranked American schools.

Are police really infringing on our civil liberties?

by Peter Hrastovec

Police enjoy far more power than is demonstrably necessary for a functioning society. In sharp contrast, civilians possess fewer safeguards to protect themselves from abuses that stem from such power.

Borovoy is a seasoned veteran of libertarian causes, having compiled a quarter of a century of involvement in the quest for individual freedoms in Canadian society.

Borovoy focused on police powers and how they infringe upon individual liberties. An article of interest was a remand of a “search-and-strip” raid in Fort Erie, Ontario in 1974, when over 100 patrons of a hotel-tavern underwent humiliating vaginal and rectal examinations. “Marijuana doesn’t keep in those places where the police looked,” quipped Borovoy. “And, if stored in those places, it wouldn’t make for a good smoker.”

He also alluded to the recent raids on Toronto bath houses and the resultant use of force by municipal police during their search. His request for an inquiry into the matter has been turned down. When a student asked what would be his next step, Borovoy, quoting Pierre Trudeau during the October Crisis of 1970, suggested, “Just watch me!”

Borovoy outlined provisions in the Narcotics Control Act which allow for a forcible search of premises and persons (found on those premises) on broad grounds of “reasonable suspicion.” Such wide power, said Borovoy, creates situations in which a person’s coincidental, albeit innocent, presence would invite police suspicions.

The protection of individuals with electronic surveillance equipment is “egalitarian in nature as everyone within earshot has their privacy invaded.”

Borovoy cited statistics demonstrating the cost of “search-and-strip” raids on the innocent as well as the guilty. In the United States in 1969 and 1970, 1,500 criminals were convicted on evidence obtained by electronic surveillance equipment. But to assure these convictions, 40,000 people were overheard in half-a-million conversations, seven percent of which were non-incriminating in nature.

Borovoy criticized the Official Secrets Act, which empowers law enforcement agencies to procure bugging warrants under a blanket provision where “activities are directed towards governmental change by force, violence, or any criminal means.” He set the hypothesis that striking public employees who violate back-to-work legislation may be subject to this provision in the future.

Many of the safeguards protecting individuals from the abuse of police powers are outdated and outmoded, said Borovoy. Suing the police for damages has proven to be an inadequate process as mounting court costs become burdensome to the person of average income. Criminal prosecution of police officers for flagrant abuses of individual rights becomes a complex, unusual and technologically sophisticated matter.

Ministerial responsibility for police wrongdoing is virtually non-existent, said Borovoy. He cited a string of successive Solicitors-Generals denying knowledge of the crimes perpetrated by the RCMP while allegations and admissions were being recorded at the recent McDonald Commission investigations into RCMP activities.

“Canada is a pleasant, authoritarian country,” said Borovoy. “But there is a potentially serious imbalance of police powers with individual safeguards. As we become more complex, urbanized and technologically sophisticated, our society will become more authoritarian and less pleasant in which to live.”

Student Art Show

by E. P. Coats

After years of discussion and committee work, the university Senate last Thursday approved the concept and a procedure to obtain student opinion of potential teaching ability.

In September, a one-year trial period for these “Student Opinion Surveys of Teaching” (also called “student evaluations”) will begin.

Most students now regularly fill out computerizable questionnaires on their professors’ teaching abilities, but these differ from faculty to faculty. The motion passed by Senate will guarantee five standard questions on all questionnaires, with the faculties allowed to add their own if they wish.

In presenting the motion, Dr. Gerry Booth recounted some of the history of the Senate’s consideration of the student evaluations matter. The committee dealing with the matter was struck in the early 1970s and submitted a widely used (in North America) questionnaire with about 40 questions in 1976 or 1977 (Booth could not recall).

That form was rejected by the Senate and the faculties where they surveyed to find what they would like to see in the questionnaire. After that compilation, the committee sat down and devised the five questions. There was still opposition to the concept of student evaluations at this Senate meeting. Several members wondered what the opposition survey would be used for—on one member even suggested it appeared the evaluations constituted an experiment without any purpose.

The majority, however, viewed the results of the questionnaires as a valuable addition to the prior student-opinion-barren forms of the University Committee on Academic Promotion and Tenure. Dr. Gordon McDonald noted that such committee should be cautious not to equate student opinion with teaching quality.

In another tenure-related matter, a motion by student Senators David Simms and Eric Dixon, which would have had the Senate establish a review procedure for professors already tenured, was altered to suggest that an Ad Hoc Committee of five individuals, including one student, be set to study methods of maintaining and improving academic excellence in both teaching and research (for example, post tenure-review, awards for excellence in teaching and/or research, etc.), with the committee to file its initial report by May of this year.

Though both of the student motions involved post-tenure review, the inclusion of the Ad Hoc committee in the altered version was viewed as a drastic change and was, hence, considered a new motion. Since it was not put on the agenda in time, discussion on the motion was postponed until the next meeting.

A procedure for the naming of campus buildings was also approved at the meeting. From now on, names for buildings can be suggested by the Board of Governors, the Senate, or 10 or more members of the faculty, staff, or student body. The first target for the committee responsible will likely be the Math Building (Buildings can be re-named after past chancellors, presidents, chancellors, presidents, etc.—you name it).

Also approved on Thursday was a motion to establish a Bachelor of Commerce degree for a double-major combination of courses in Business Administration and Economics.

There will be a special Senate meeting next Thursday (February 26) to prepare this university’s brief to the Ontario Council on University Affairs.

As the university turns
by E. P. Grant

The search continues for a new Vice-President of Finance and Administration for this university. Last September, Dr. John Allan submitted a resignation to his employers at Queen's with little explanation. The resignation was accepted and his responsibilities will be divided among his colleagues. Allan was the President of Administration and the university's treasurer.

Towards the end of the first semester of this year, a joint Board of Governors Senate Search Committee began a quest to find a replacement for Allan, who is now in a senior position with the department of the Alberta government.

Dr. Cameron MacInnis of Engineering, a Senate and vice-presidential search committee member, described the search process at a phone interview as the committee's quest. "To have a search strategy for our small search committee to ascertain the type of person the department wants."

MacInnis said the search committee would consider five candidates in the position. "I would like to see students given up to a quarter of the positions to be held by students," said MacInnis. "This is what we call 'silly filler'."

Prospects of peace in the Middle East

What are the Prospects of Peace in the Middle East? Three scholars give their separate views on the speakers to be held at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, 23rd, and Thursday, 26th of March. The event is called "Peace in the Middle East: An Israeli View" and will be presented on February 23rd by Dr. Gabriel Ben Dor. Dr. Ben Dor, an Israeli citizen, is currently visiting professor of Political Science at Carleton University. Dr. Doherty also said NUS would have an exact format in mind for the evening.

The prospects of peace in the Middle East are already beginning to take shape. The Middle East is a region where the United Nations and the United States have failed to make any progress. This is why the United Nations and the United States must abandon their stand on this issue. The United Nations and the United States must abandon their stand on this issue. Committee on Student Affairs protect and punish

by John Doherty

Are you a student? Do you have affairs? you could use assistance with?

Ken Long, Dean of Students, can probably help you out. He has been looking at students' problems this year, especially since he became Dean since last September. The Committee on Student Affairs protects and punishes students. The powers of the university's populace and looks into complaints (or charges) made against them. It can refuse to violate these rights. Among the most common charges Student Affairs can find students guilty of are exams and malicious abuse (vandalism or assault).

A student shaming on an exam by a professor, that professor could handle the situation itself, or it could bring it before the Committee on Student Affairs. Such a case, if handled by the professor, might almost certainly result in an "F." For the semester for the student, the professor would be referred to the committee, the result could run from suspension to expulsion. Let's say the student's conduct involved in expulsion about three years ago which involved a student who looked at a case in which one student committed a marital offence. In one instance, said the Dean, the student who had been guilty of sodomy, bestiality, or rape, or who has engaged in a homosexual act, has also committed a marital offence. To obtain a divorce on grounds of separation (where the parties are living separate and apart), two conditions must be satisfied: first, there must be a physical separation. For example, the husband's arrangements for child support, or where it would be unduly harsh or unjust to either spouse.

Divorce, on grounds of separation, may be granted to a married couple if they have been living separate and apart for at least three years. The deserting spouse, on the other hand, must wait for five years before he or she can seek a divorce. The spouse who leaves the matrimonial home is not always the deserting party. One spouse may be forced to leave by the other spouse's misconduct. This is to lessen the chance of a constructive desertion. For example, the husband's conduct may be so intolerable as to force his wife to leave the home. This is generally done by deserting the home, the husband may be the deserting party. In this situation, the wife can apply for divorce after three years. Courts have held that a legal separation must not be no more than a "paper" separation, that is, not a formal separation, but a separation in fact.

The following is a brief introduction to the law in regards to grounds for divorce.

For further information, one should consult a lawyer. If one wants a divorce but cannot afford a lawyer, they should apply for a legal aid certificate. A court-ordered divorce officially ends a legal marriage. Under present federal law, a divorce is granted to the parties, in the event of a serious marital offence or the permanent breakdown of a marriage. Most provinces include adultery, any form of marriage to another person, and physical or mental cruelty which makes living together intolerable. A spouse who is a refusee, an illegal immigrant, or a foreigner, or who has engaged in a homosexual act, has also committed a marital offence.

Marital cruelty includes refusal to the husband and wife to live separate and apart. Imprisonment, gross addiction, disappearance, non-consummation of the marriage, and desertion are also forms of marital breakdown.

Physical or mental cruelty is grounds for divorce in Canada. Under the provisions of the law, cruelty to the other, the court considers the entire marital relationship. It considers the cumulative effect of the spouse's actions or behavior. This is in order to identify a pattern of alleged cruelty. That course of conduct must be more than mere trivial acts of annoyance or personality conflicts. The court will consider if the other spouse has been overly sensitive to the other's conduct. On the other hand, the court may find cruelty even though the spouse did not intend to be cruel. If, regardless of intent, one spouse's conduct makes living together intolerable, then the court will grant a divorce on grounds of cruelty.

A divorce may be granted to a husband and wife who have been separated for three or five years. The couple must be legally separated and must continue for at least three years. The deserting spouse, on the other hand, must wait for five years before he or she can seek a divorce. The spouse who leaves the matrimonial home is not always the deserting party. One spouse may be forced to leave by the other spouse's misconduct. This is to lessen the chance of a constructive desertion. For example, the husband's conduct may be so intolerable as to force his wife to leave the home. This is generally done by deserting the home, the husband may be the deserting party. In this situation, the wife can apply for divorce after three years. Courts have held that a legal separation must not be no more than a "paper" separation, that is, not a formal separation, but a separation in fact.

In divorce proceedings, the court will consider the arrangement for child support, or where it would be unduly harsh or unjust to either spouse.

In divorce proceedings, the court will consider the arrangement for child support, or where it would be unduly harsh or unjust to either spouse. The court will also refuse a divorce if there is evidence of collusion. Collusion is a conspiratorial agreement between the parties to the divorce, usually by fabricating or suppressing evidence. Commotion or connivance will also justly the court's refusal. Conniving refers to one party giving the other's effective conduct. Connivance occurs when one spouse consents to or contributes to the other's marital offence. In both these cases, the connoising or conniving party may not later complain of that connivance. However, the court may still grant the divorce if it is in the public interest to do so.

Heads of the Judicial Panel of the Committee on Student Affairs are open unless otherwise noted. They are closed if it is decided the information being heard could be damaging to the case if heard by others outside the case, or could be damaging to the people involved in the case.

The following is a brief introduction to the law in regards to grounds for divorce.

For further information, one should consult a lawyer. If one wants a divorce but cannot afford a lawyer, they should apply for a legal aid certificate. A court-ordered divorce officially ends a legal marriage. Under present federal law, a divorce is granted to the parties, in the event of a serious marital offence or the permanent breakdown of a marriage. Most provinces include adultery, any form of marriage to another person, and physical or mental cruelty which makes living together intolerable. A spouse who is a refusee, an illegal immigrant, or a foreigner, or who has engaged in a homosexual act, has also committed a marital offence.

Roughing it the bourgeoisie way at Sugarbush

by Debbi Kennedy

It all began last October when the eight of us got this notion into our heads to try it. The price seemed reasonable enough and, of course, it was a chance to get away from this "sleuth of Detroit".

What am I talking about?

Skiing! You know— that's the sport where you pay real money (not Canadian) to kill yourself and freeze to death simultaneously. Why waste time? If you do live, "a millionaires" can give you "bourgeoisie" status. They were right— we brought them with us.

"Comfort" is another one of those pleasant words that brochures use to deceive the naive idealist. "Comfort" was "just over the hill", so we were told in Vermont, "hill" obviously means "cliff". The hike to "comfort" is a story in and of itself. We later learned that the trail to our condo was to be used at "one's own risk". We were probably supposed to be flown in by Coast Guard helicopter (in Vermont?). With ski poles, skis, and luggage firmly wrapped around our necks, we reached "comfort" at 11:15 p.m.

"Comfort" or Condo 52 was 58 degrees F when we arrived. After repairing the thermostat, we surveyed our accommodations. Our dilemma was obvious. Six beds, one in the bathroom (—50°F). You might ask if we had a tour guide. Yeah, if you can call him that. This guy had so much spare room in his cranium, they filmed Star Wars between his ears.

Realizing the situation, he immediately took control. I don't know where he took it, but we didn't see him for another three hours. In an effort to keep on top occupied, he introduced us to a roomful of the opposite sex who were only interested in keeping warm (in pairs). At the onset of bed-making, we existed, freezing or not freezing. By this time, our fearless leader had found our condo or key or whatever. "Comfort at last", we thought.

"Comfort" was definitely upper class! Our living room, dining area and "full recreational area" (brochure again) measured 18 feet X 24 feet. Our kitchen was no less well-equipped. Our dishes loved dirty dishes to such an extent that they only emerged clean after two washings. If we'd brought anything of value with us, our room-occupant would have provided us with a perfect vault (it was permanently sealed). Who knows what relics of former inhabitants lay entombed within. Our washer-dryer required a babysitter to hold its hand while it went through the cycles. Our vacuum decided to defy the laws of physics. It blew out! I must say we were impressed with the fridge and stove—they worked. So much for "wall to wall expensive".

But did we come here to play house? Did we come here to sleep? Did we come here to kill time? Kill our tour guide? Maybe, but not time—it's too expensive. No, we came here to "kill ourselves and freeze to death simultaneously"—remember—we gathered outside courage and ventured forth into the unknown. Talk about the runs! (no, not the ones we contracted from the contaminated water.) The slopes were fantastic; if you knew how to ski—otherwise! Where's the Coast Guard when you need them?

We immediately proceeded to the "Bunny Hill" (the bunnies in Vermont must be huge). Removing oneself from the chairlift always proves to be a problem for the amateur skier (oh dear!) Skis are not round trip, though. Many attempt the return (lifts are programmed to catapult anyone or anything remaining on the way down), knowing all these tidbits of "ski lore" we got off the chair anyway we could, usually on our faces. Down was always harder than up, and usually more painful, and we didn't get "blue-larv" from the cold. Our house contest was a complete success, but the reigning champion is reluctant to be specific concerning the location of the contest.

We may not have learned to ski that week (someone is still looking for our lesson tickets), but we did learn the "art of après-ski". So much for this year's week of R and R. Next year it's off to Grandma's (no brochures).

Student senators retreat on tenure issue.

In a notice of motion date January 23, 1981, David Simmons, Students' Administrative Council (SAC) President and Eric Dixon, Student Senator and SAC Representative, called for the "University Government Committee to study post-tenure review for all tenured faculty at the University of Windsor and present a Bill-Law establishing post-tenure review for approval by Senate by May, 1981."

Bravo. It is certainly long past the time that tenure carved in granite became a thing of the past, and it certainly looked like Dixon and Simmons were going to do all they could to ensure that it did.

On February 10, naturally enough, the Faculty Association, in a letter addressed "to the membership" (of the Senate), called for the Senate to give this motion the unequivocal rejection that it deserves.

Unfortunately for the students, Dixon and Simmons backed right down. Amending their motion to read "that the Senate establish an ad hoc committee of five individuals, including one student, to study methods of maintaining and improving academic excellence in both teaching and research ... " Dixon and Simmons effectively ended any hope for tenure review this year although one method listed for maintaining this "academic excellence" was post-tenure review.

It is almost certain that Dixon and Simmons' motion calling for post-tenure review would have been defeated. But it would at least, have been a Pyrrhic victory. Opening the floor to debate and airing the concerns of the students that they represented would have been admirable, backing down in the face of opposition certainly was not. And like it or not, that is what they appear to have done.

Tenure is one of the last bastions of the "University as an archaic institution." It appears as though once one has hung around long enough, one gets tenure, whether or not one teaches well. Although the Faculty Association and the University Administration would claim that there are sufficient safeguards in the system such that if a professor is not capable, he will be fired, Dixon and Simmons do not agree. And neither do most of the students attending this university.

As the cost of university education goes up, students have an increasingly difficult time rationalizing continuing to pay some of the faculty they see as being poor instructors. The most common complaint is the "you're interrupting my research" professor. Students increasingly view getting an education as purchasing something. And if one is purchasing a service, one should have the opportunity to, have some ability to review the one doing the job. Dixon and Simmons would indirectly prevent students from firing professors, simply that they should have the ability for a more exact review. And that is exactly what they are reflecting the views of the students who elected them.

Perhaps they thought they should salvage what they could do out of a debate which they would inevitably have lost. We feel they should have pushed the mandatory review committee. Besides, if the Faculty Association represents the calibre of professor they claim to, why should they be apprehensive about mandatory post-tenure review? It would appear that a) students would be happy with it; b) the University Administration would have the opportunity to be more progressive and democratic; and c) the Faculty Association would be vindicated. The university, at the moment, is doing everything it can to maximize student employment. Next year, the university community.

Whoever works knows of the bonds that form while working with someone else. It is that "team spirit" effect (some people who share similar pressures are drawn together)."

Many benefits come from group. Students who work are more self-confident. Future employers are impressed and you get a lot of Saturday night pocket change. When you are as poor as a student, it is easy to double and triple your spending money.

Working on campus is better simply because it is closer and you tend to get more involved with the university community. The university at the moment, is doing everything it can to maximize student employment. Next year, the university will be instituting a student security force. The force will be used at student parties and at football games (full details will be out later in the year).

So, if you're thinking of working, go for it! The results are positive: more efficient use of study time and spare time, improved social life and self esteem and the assurance that you can rely on yourself. Besides, it keeps the green staff their view that the University of Windsor has the finest teaching staff in the Province.

It appears as though as no one would lose.
Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to D. Oddel's letter of February 18th entitled "Picture I.D. not fair". Mr. Oddel seems to ignore the overall needs of the student concerning pictorial I.D. cards. He refers to the public's right to use the university library, but what about the student's right to protection if one's I.D. card is lost or stolen? A story in The Lance, "Theft and mutilation all in the life of a library book" indicated that "many people use stolen or lost I.D. cards at the library. Pictorial I.D. cards would protect students from the situation of having to get another card and provide the needed added security at the library. Since the public has the right to use the university library, I do not see how internal theft or vandalism infringe on this right. An I.D. card is not required to come into the library. My letter would not put a lot of emphasis on how the university is maintained by the taxpayers contribution to the library, though. The Pugwash concept is not one afflicted with the support of the senior Pugwash organization. Since then this informal movement has grown world wide, and its perspective has broadened to include the international conflict and the responsibilities of scientists in society.

In June 1979, the first Student Pugwash Conference on Science and Ethical Responsibility was held in San Diego. Many of the participants at this excellent conference were spurred to establish student Pugwash organisations at both the national and international levels. As part of this effort, and with the support of the senior Pugwash organisation in Canada, Canadian Student Pugwash was founded in the fall of 1979.

Dear Editor,

The goals of Canadian Student Pugwash are:
- to establish a network of young social and natural scientists across Canada who are concerned about the ethical issues relevant to their work;
- to promote an educational discussion of these issues between young and older scientists; and
- to encourage scientists outside the administration to question the ethical implications of their work.

The conference will bring together 30 university students and 25 participants from the public. The programme for the conference will be presented in a poster session and will be available to all the participants. The conference will be held in the month of February in the city of Ottawa.

Law examinations undergo a close scrutiny

by Peter Ore
The McGill Daily

Forty-three law students at McGill University in Montreal have signed a letter protesting an exam given last semester in Family Law.

The letter, addressed to the Dean of Law, John Brierley, says the examination was "too long," and alleges that "particular passages were ambiguously worded and the questions require the same points to be expounded upon over and over again."

The letter, signed by two-thirds of the students in Family Law 1, a second-year course, expresses dissatisfaction with "the examiner's failure to appear in the room where they were writing to answer questions during the exam held in December."

"This arose on the nineteenth of December, right after the exam," said Mark Nitoslawski, class representative for Family Law.

Nitoslawski said the letter was drafted before examination marks came out. "It shows it was the exam and not the marks we object to."

Dean Brierley told the Daily the matter of the examination was given to Law Fellow K. Connell-Thoues "as being studied."

Brierley, who has taught family law himself, will "look at the exam to see if the claims are founded."

Referring to the charge that the professor failed to attend the exam, Brierley said, "I have to ascertain the facts first."

"If the exam is considered unreasonable then the students would have to re-examine the third world countries."

Every fall WUSC chooses a site for its seminars, and then pick university students to attend. Thirty students are chosen from 23 universities across Canada. These students are required to make a report on the hosting country about anything they wish and then write publishes them.

"It's a great way to learn," says Dr. Lloyd Brown-John, professor of Political Science at the University of Windsor, and WUSC's liaison person on campus. "Any opportunity to explore a country unlike yours is a great learning experience," he added.

The problem, according to

WUSC in Ecuador this year

The World University Services of Canada is a non-profit organization, run by students, which is aimed at getting students interested in developing third world countries.

Every fall WUSC chooses a site for its seminars, and then pick university students to attend. Thirty students are chosen from 23 universities across Canada. These students are required to make a report on the hosting country about anything they wish and then write publishes them.

"It's a great way to learn," says Dr. Lloyd Brown-John, professor of Political Science at the University of Windsor, and WUSC's liaison person on campus. "Any opportunity to explore a country unlike yours is a great learning experience," he added.

The problem, according to

Brown-John, is trying to get people interested in going. "People," he said, "always think it's some kind of freaky religious thing, and they refuse themselves a great opportunity."

The chosen student is called a "WUSC Scholar" and receives a free year's tuition as well as the trip, and is also paid for the six weeks of summer he is abroad. Brown-John also stated any faculty may apply. Usually students who have never traveled before are the ones WUSC chooses.

This year the site is Ecuador and two students from the university have been chosen - Patricia Boyco and Collin Beckingham.

The entire trip will cost between $7000 and $8000, and the money will have to be raised somehow. "We usually beg, borrow, and steal, and hope for grants from the Canadian International Development Agency, Students' Administrative Council, and local industries like Hiram Walker's," re- placed Brown-John, "and we usually manage to raise the money!"

Besides the financial benefits for participating in the project, the educational benefits are even more rewarding.

Queen's law plant. According to Dr. Adel, "it will merely narrow the gap in standards we apply to the two categories of second-year students, and upper year students. As Board members declined to specify a number for the percentage of second-year students to be admitted, interpretation of the policy — and the fate of many aspirants from Queen's — will be in the admissions committee's hands.

MISSA Nite just full of food and fandomgoes

by Rosemary A. Breusch

February is certainly a banner month for cultural events on this campus. This Saturday evening, February 21, the Malaysian/Indonesian/Singaporean Students Association presents MISSA Nite '81, in Ambassador Auditorium.

One common error made by North Americans is to classify all Oriental and Asian students as "Chinese." Not only does this reflect a pervasive ignorance, but it is something of an insult to the individual who takes pride in his identity as a Japanese, Indonesian, Singaporean or Malaysian Chinese. According to MISSA, there are approximately 530 Malaysian, 80 Singaporean and 10 Indonesian students on our campus.

In a concerted effort to better acquaint the public with their particular cultures, the members of MISSA are holding a South East Asian banquet and cultural show, with a disco dance to follow. The banquet will feature a variety of dishes prepared by the students. Promising to be a palatable adventure, the bill of fare includes rendang (a well marinated beef dish), curried chicken, gado-gado (an Indonesian vegetable salad with peanut sauce) and fried rice.

The entertainment portion of the evening will highlight a guest dancing troupe from Detroit. A disco dance tops the evening, where prizes will be awarded during the spot dance.

"MISSA Nite '81 is for both the members and the community, so they can come to learn about our various cultures and share in them," says Mr. Woon. Tickets, sold in advance, are available from the I.S.O. secretary (Cody Hall) and from I.S.O. executives. The prices are $3.00 for members, $5.00 for non-members. During the evening, there will be a lucky draw for a round trip to New York.

Hey, el blimpoo

Come on everybody, the Department of Home Economics will have a display in the University Centre on March 4 and 5, 1981 from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

According to studies conduc-

$3.00 for members, $5.00 for non-members. During the evening, there will be a lucky draw for a round trip to New York.

Therefore, we are bringing to your attention the fact that energy balance requires a wise choice of food intake from the Canada Food Guide and adequate physical activity.

So be at the University Centre on March 4 and 5. We have lots of good news for you.

Odd jobs

If you need something done around your house or have the skill to do something for someone else, there are many employment offices in Windsor which arrange such "job-bartering."

The federal Canada Development Program has been offering funding to establish "The Trading Post," an office which co-ordinates the trade of "service and I'll do you one." A spokesman for the office said in a phone interview that "odd jobs around the house are the most common exchange: repair, plumbing, etc."

Students are invited to participate in this exchange program. It is chiefly designed for fixed income families, the unemployed, and single people. Remember — there's no money involved in this, merely an exchange of services.

"The Trading Post" is located at 1511 University Ave. W. (phone 254-2851).
Who will control us?

David MacDonald, former secretary of state and minister of communications in the Joe Clark government and columnist for the United Church Observer will discuss "Canadian Cultural Policy: Options and Implications" at 7:30 p.m. public lecture at Iona College on Tuesday, March 3, 1981. Mr. MacDonald is presently a Fellow in Residence at the Institute for Research on Public Policy. He is currently researching, lecturing and writing on issues related to communications and cultural policy.

Canadian artists are at the forefront of the development of communications technologies. The use of this technology in our society raises many issues. Who will control it? How should it be used, and what will be its impact? The arts and arts organizations struggle with shortages of funds. How should they be maintained? The lecture by Mr. MacDonald will deal with many of these questions. Admission is free.

T-4's get you down?

"Tax. If anything deserves to be a four-letter word, that does." Yes, boys and girls, it's income tax time — when the federal government grabs you by your ankles, flips you upside-down, and shakes the coffee money out of your pockets.

Your non-taxing Students' Income Tax Service can help you and, hence, has introduced the new SAC Income Tax Service.

Ancillary Affairs Commissioner Rick "H.R. Block" Zago has announced that financially capable students will be offered to offer assistance in filling out your income tax forms. They will not fill out your form, but simply assist you in doing this, he said with emphatic redundancy. The service will be operating out of the SAC Office on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays for the first week of March. The cost of the service is one dollar (not tax-deductible).

The Faculty of Visual Arts is one of many faculties at the University of Windsor. Although it is part of our campus, a number of students overlook the many talents we have in that part of our community.

Many different kinds of people make up those registered in art. They all have different backgrounds and come from various parts of Windsor and beyond. But they all have one thing in common; they can create an original piece of art for our enjoyment.

I asked some of the art students what they're aiming for when inventing new work. They answered that art students go through three years of working hard, finding out what the techniques are and putting them to use. By doing so, the artists find which field they're better at (i.e. painting, sculpture, etc.); then, in the fourth year, they work in that area and improve their methods. They also say that an artist begins with a theme or an idea and creates a first piece. They pick out the good and bad points in the piece, improve on the bad points and add more value to the good points. By doing this, the artist forms new and better pieces.

Many of you may already know about the "Annual Student Show", presented by the school of Visual Arts, For those who don’t, it runs from March 13 to March 5 at the Lebel Building Gallery.

The art department also sponsors "South West 41", which was shown at the University Centre. Therefore, he saw the piece without bias. As I mentioned before, it is located in two places. The gallery at Fanshawe College in London is one of its stops. He was chosen for the show out of town and doesn’t know who the artists are. The art department is located in two places. This year, there are two university still has a great collection of art from all over the world and still has a great collection of art from all over the world. The art itself was very good. It could talk about one piece. There was a wide variety of pieces, made of plaster, wood, etc.
Artists display today is being held from February 16-20 at the University Centre and the University Centre Auditorium. Patrick Theibert, from the university, to come and judge the six task because he's from any of the art students for the first time, not those, and selected those for the first time, not contact with the art world. Strange things are happening at the pub. One week we get a heavy metal band that requires that you wear a hearing aid just to hear them, the next week we get a pop group who try to blow the roof off.

Yes, this week's band, Photograph, is loud. But they are also pretty good. The four-member group consisting of guitar, bass, drums and vocals made an appearance here earlier this year, back in the second week of November, and not much has changed since that time.

Except maybe that the lead singer is more emphatic in his reminder that the group's first album is coming out. That disc, titled "Photograph," strangely enough, was to be released Thursday. Much of the group's material is based on the promotion of this big step in their promising career, but you're not likely to find much to interest you among the original tunes.

Photograph's forte lies in its ability to play old classics and new favorites with a great deal of precision and skill. The presentation of "Lola" by The Kinks and "Out on the Street" from Bruce Springsteen's new album, The River, were well-received and well-performed.

Or should I say, well-played. Because if anything is lacking in Photograph's act, it is performance. The guitarists attack the music with all the fervor of morticians, apparently content to rely on the lead vocalist's occasional hip-swinging and hopping to entertain the crowd. The lighting reminds me of some high school plays I've seen.

It is unfortunate that a band that plays so loud to get your attention, to the point where other social activity is severely impaired, offers little for your visual entertainment. Perhaps this was the inspiration for the name Photograph. You'd almost believe you were looking at a very large one when watching the group play.

If you have a mind to head to the pub this weekend, plan to play a little pinball. At least the blips move and don't worry — you can hear the band way back in that corner.

Shakespearian music 'as he liked it'

by Catherine M. Wilson

The Art Gallery of Windsor was host last evening to an attractive and quite interesting program of Shakespearian music presented by the University Singers under the direction of Richard Householder. The songs each told their own story, based on the plot of their respective plays. Commentary by Dr. Janzen of the English Department provided the background information necessary for complete enjoyment of the program. The first two pieces are from

"As You Like It. The lyrics praise life in the natural world. They are song by the courtier Amiens and contrast good life in nature with corruptions of the Court; "Under the Greenwood Tree", and "Blow, blow, thou winter wind".

Again from "As You Like It", it is "It was a love and his law", a song of love in springtime sung by two pages. The madrigal "Tell me where is fancy bred" is the story of young Bassanio from The Merchant of Venice and his decision concerning his lady love, Portia. The correct decision will win her hand in marriage.

"Hark, hark, the lark" is in Cymbeline by Cloten, son of the Queen, to the heroine of the play. Imogen. From The Two Gentlemen of Verona, we hear a young singer woo Sylvia, beloved of Valentine with "Who is Sylvia?"

Both MARIANS in Measure for Measure and Duke Orsino in Twelfth Night, however, are recipients of unrequited love and have been jilted by their loves. "Take, oh take, those lips away", is sung to Mariana and the extremely moving "Come away, come away death" to Duke Orsino.

But the concert concluded on a bright note. Once again from Twelfth Night is "O mistress mine", sung by the clown Feste to the two drunks, Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Aguecheek. "Sigh no more, ladies" is a delightful tune advising women to take their loving less seriously and be as carefree in that respect as men are. It is sung by the courtier Balthasar in Much Ado About Nothing. The choir told beautiful stories through lyrics and melodies their ability to change mood through well-chosen interpretations. The concert program was quite delightful and enjoyable.

School of Music

Artist Series

by Catherine M. Wilson

Last Friday, Steven Henrickson and Gregory Butler presented an evening of twentieth-century vocal compositions in cooperation with members of the Windsor Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Henrickson is a baritone and assistant professor of music at the University's School of Music and Dr. Butler is a professor of piano at the School. The evening was quite an interesting variety of pieces, ranging from "Le Bestiaire" by Francis Poulenc, to "Three Love Songs" by D. Milhaud, to the madrigal "Tell me where is fancy bred" from The Merchant of Venice.

Dr. Hanson’s musical images of the moon and being in love were very well received. The music was freely composed and sounded quite contemporary. Poulsen's "The Bestiary" described the movement of various animals through both lyrics and melody. The mood that was created paints a vivid picture in the listener’s mind.

"Poems Juifs" by I. Kozsnyai of music for bassoon and clarinet was also present for a performance by Paul Garson and Imre Wick, clarinetist Murray Dresser, accompanied in their presentation by pianist Virginia Thompson, noted English literary expert and composer. The composition he has written upon his hope is in selecting the poems to give a compact but complete view of Blake’s human philosophy. I did attempt to include his prophetic ideas, as expounded in the hermetic writings.

The choir told beautiful stories through melodies. The annual Student Art Show is on display through March 5 in the University Centre and the Label Gallery.

Virgin Thomson: One of America's first great musicians

by Robert Brown

The eminent American critic and composer Virgil Thomson, remembered among some of the greatest cultural figures of the century during a talk given in the Music Department of St. Mark's School in 1980.

The 84-year-old Thomson, principal speaker of the University Music Society, addressing the audience in a conference, spoke about his memories of Paris in the Roaring Twenties. "Paris," he said, "was a thriving center of cultural activity when Thomson arrived in 1918.

Lance staffer Robert Brown was curious to see how much television would utilize the original source material which had been taken for granted since the 60's, when it became fashionable for movie studios to include swearwords and suggestive nudity in their products. (Violence, being traditional, is O.K.)

most of this comes across in satire of one kind or another, there might be something to be said for it. But the insensitive clipping found in television (or in film) is intolerable because of its ineptitude. The heavy handed restrictions on film and print in the early twentieth century were at least reasonaibly consistent, and grounded in an identifiable tradition. What we have today is a clumsy and morosely ambiguous intolerance which is infuriating but ultimately useless.

Those people who would be preserved in this country's present form of "Animal House" were probably appalled by the rest of the movie anyway... If censorship is used, it should have a consistent framework. It should not be determind by the deeply perceived objections of Des Moines and Elmina.

Is television censorship a real problem?

Caribbean getaway a success

by Brenda Brown

The word "Caribbean" conjures images of a get-away paradise, a place of contrasts, the pleasures of the sun, sand and sea.

Such was the impression graphically captured during the Caribbean Cultural night, which depicted a joyful people whose way of life is uniquely characterized by love, smiles and fun. The students from the islands in the sun managed to arrest the attention of the audience for more than two hours. If the thunderous applause were any indication, the performance of "The General Night" was a remarkable success.

The cultural showcas includ ed dozens, poems and dances. The celebration began with a display of the islands' flags followed by a description of each island. The object was to capture the scenic diversity of the islands.

Lily Tomlin is not what you’d call “hilarious” and yet, her triple role as Pat Kramer, neighbor Judith, and Emmeline, (from Ma Bell), are as distinctive as if they were played by three different women. Tomlin is getting to be a wonderful comedic actress. Charles Grodin has a sophisticated style which makes even the dullest scenes sparkle. And yet, who can resist when a six-inch Tomlin turns to a six foot gorilla (Sydney, who has a habit of resusz) and makes even the dullest scenes sparkle.

The end result was that Chayefsky quit and took his name out of the credits. It is truly a shame that we are otherwise closed off from him, hence, the name Altered States.

In the last regular season league game to be played in St. Denis Hall, the University of Windsor Lancers defeated the University of Western Ontario Mustangs 77-67. Although last Wednesday's game will not be the last game to be played in the old gym, it will go down as the last one.

The game was marked by the return of many former coaches, players, and managers of the lancer teams which played many a championship game in St. Denis.

The Lance joins the Students' Administrative Council, and the University of Windsor Faculty and Administration in saluting athletes past and present who have plied the floorboards in St. Denis Hall.

We look forward to joining you and serving you well in the new facility.

I believe...

Lancer Sports Editor

Winners and losers sometimes...

Teams come and go around the university circle. The University of Windsor has seen its share of winners down through the years, with basketball being the most consistent winner of provincial and national championships. As a result, Windsor has come to be known as a basketball stronghold.

Little attention is given to other teams around campus unfortunately because winning is such an attrative characteristic to human society. Rarely does a team attract attention to itself or the school by means of any other factor.

But when a team displays all the qualities of sportmanship, fair play, perseverance and a love of sport, though not necessarily a winner, it deserves recognition. This University does not give awards for effort, but only for the year. Only individuals are so honored.

But if ever there was a collection of athletes who deserved to be

With only one game left in the year and were outrebounded in the first time this season, but still managed to defeat Waterloo Warriors 72-61 in Waterloo's Physical Activities Complex, site of this year's OUAU championships.

Lancers hit on just 27 of 61 attempts at the hoop and were outrebounded 35-27, their lowest rebound total on the season. Fortunately, Warriors were even less successful in finding the basket with 28% on 67 attempts.

Windsor held a decisive edge in the free throw department with 14 of 22 compared to 5 of 7 for Waterloo.

Lancerette spikers end season, look to next year

by Chris Legebok

The Lancerette volleyball team finished their season by going down to defeat at the OWAA pre-final tournament at Western Laurier University in Waterloo Friday and Saturday.

The team went into the four-team divisional tournament, won by Western Mustangs, short their two veteran setters and two spikers.

Coach Jean Brien was quite pleased with the play of the team over the weekend, adding that the McMaster coach had complimented the play of Windsor's rookie setters, Roseanne Pomerleau and Marielea "Mud" Marigiani.

The Lancerettes were beaten 8-15, 5-15, 8-15 by Queen's, 3-15, 3-15, 5-15 by McMaster and 5-15, 10-15 by Western in round robin play.

Play good overall

Overall the play was good and the attack effective. There was some problem when opponents got leads of more than a few points, but Windsor fought back hard with strong spiking and tight defense.

There was no problem with a loss of determination throughout the weekend of play as the Lancerettes remained in high spirits and gave every ounce of their will to the effort.

It was a learning year as far as Brien was concerned with a large number of young players on the squad. She was pleased with the performance of the team during the year and looks to better things next year when all 32 players return to action.

The 1980-81 Lancerettes were: Rita O'Reilly, Janis Pomerleau, Monique Pomerleau, Renée Sequin, Mary Burford, Gail Hanley, Franz Armaly, Elaine Daniel, Cherone Morgan and Marielea "Mud" Marigiani.

Track team on record-setting rampage

by Scott McCulloch

Nine new University of Windsor records were set by the track team last Saturday at the Eastern Michigan University Track Classic. The team was not in London, as was reported in last week's Lance. No one was more chagrined by the error than sports editor Steve Rice, who could be seen wandering around the University of Western Ontario last Saturday morning, camera in hand, vainly searching for Lancer athletes to photograph.

Linda Staats set new records in both the women's mile and two mile events, setting a new field house record in the latter. Her third-place, 5:08.8 finish in the mile beat her own record by 6.7 seconds, while her 16:37 two mile time earned her second place and shattered the old mark of 11:46-1. Kathy Ricela also beat the old record by a tenth of a second. She was seventh in the mile in 5:32.9.

Andy Buckstein kept his record-setting streak going by setting new records in the 300 yard (32.1 for third place), and the 440 yards (50.9 for fourth place). Buckstein was also a member of the 880-yard relay team along with George Henry, John Key and Kevin Coughlan that set a new record of 1:33.6 in the event. The team was second in its section and sixth overall.

A new women's high jump record was set by Sandee Carson, who leaped 1.67 metres. Carson's 1.70 metre jump (about 5'7") last week in Toronto, incidentally, met the CIAU qualifying standard. It was erroneously reported in The Lance last week that Sandee jumped only 1.65 metres. Buckstein's 300 yard time at the EMU classic also meets the CIAU standard.

Other University of Windsor athletes setting new records were Ray Holland, who ran 2:01.4 for fifth place in the 880 yards. Paul Roberts, whose second-place 3:59.8 finish in the 1,500 metres broke the old record by 3.4 seconds, and Coughlan, who jumped 13.36 metres in the triple jump, placing fifth.

Two other performances earned medals, although they did not set records. Sandee Carson's 4.90 metre long jump earned her second place, while shot-putter Jenny Pace snugged third in her event with a throw of 11.48 metres.

Holland placed fourth in the 60 yard dash running 6.51 in the semi-final and 6.54 in the final. Steve Thatcher ran 6.9 in the same event, while in the 60 yard hurdles, Ray ran a time of 7.87.

Thatcher also competed in the shot put, throwing 13.10 metres. In the same event, newcomer Wyatt Clark threw 12.04 metres.

Ray Holland, competing in the mile event, ran 4:39.4. Paul Kosick ran 55.7 in the 440 yards and 1:20.2 in the 600 yards. Also competing for Windsor were Leslie Yee (2:41.2 for 880 yards), Mike Boudy (2:14.3 in the 880 yards), and Dave Dempsey (1.88 metres in the high jump).

Just say oY, oHRA!
A dog fight is expected in Division A B-ball.

Exciting hockey

This week's hockey action saw the H.K. Blades and Humkn Hackins game postponed due to bad weather. It has been re-scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 26 at 7:30 p.m. The Tercehums ended Commerce B's underdressed streak as they beat them 5-2. Ken Semenks's last minute goal gave the Bulls an exciting 2-1 win over the winless Exiles. With only a few games remaining for each team, there are some fierce battles for the final playoff spots in all three divisions. Division A sees the Screaming Eagles and Law A tied for the third and final playoff position. Only two games remain for both teams so it should be exciting.

Jammers win

The CJAM Jammers and the CKWJ All-Stars squared off last Sunday evening in St. Denis Hall in what was to be the athletic event of 1981. After 40 minutes of end to end action, the score was tied at 58. With both centres Dean Zurr (6'7''), who was allowed to play due to a loophole in his contract with the intramural Carver High team, and Jim (call me Fred) Roser (6'3'') out of the game with five fouls, team spirit and the shooting of Jerry Tymrnta carried the Jammers to a 68-64 overtime victory. All proceeds from the gate went to the Windsor Hospice.

The Windsor Lacrosse swim team concluded the season by finishing 10th among 18 teams competing at the OWIAA championships in Guelph Saturday. The very strong University of Toronto team dominated almost all events and won the meet by over 100 points, while the host team Guelph was second. Of the 61 women that started the year, only six had the perseverance and determination to go on to the championships. Top Lacrosse players were Gill Smothers who won the 100 butterfly in a time of 1:09.0. She also placed sixth in the 200 butter­fly and eighth in the 100 free-style.

Jenny Agnew proved to be the toughest freshman on the team, finishing 10th in the 100 butterfly and ninth in the 200 breaststroke. Patti Roy performed well in the 100 breaststroke with a ninth­place finish. Megan Bomer, while just missing the consolation finals in both the 100 and 200 freestyle, was placed 13th in both.

The remaining two swimmers, Kathy Sansom and Anne Friers­inger, gave superb efforts in their events which proved to be highly competitive in comparison to other events in the meet. Petra Uhlig done well on both the one metre and three metre boards with placings of 11th and ninth respectively.

Both coaches, Paul Laing (diving) and Don Wilson (swimming), extremely happy with their respective athletes' individual performances. It was noted, however, that due to unforeseen circumstances the final team performance was somewhat lower than had been anticipated in the early part of the year.

Finally, both coaches would like to thank all of the athletes for their participation throughout the year and wish continued good luck to Gill and Petra who will compete at the national championships in Toronto March 4-6.
Students help Windsor's troubled small business

An economic slowdown in Windsor coupled with high interest rates have created many business problems particularly for the small business owner. Some of these problems are declining profits, increasing bad debts and insolvency. Many businesses feel helpless when they face these problems and they often wait until they nearly go out of business.

These businesses could survive if they sought adequate business counselling. Professional consultants are generally too expensive to afford, but there is good consulting help available at an affordable cost (in some cases, at no cost) in the Windsor area. This service is provided by the Small Business Assistance Centre of the University of Windsor.

Senior student consultants provide year-round assistance to the small business by providing solutions to accounting, finance, marketing, and other business related problems in the strictest confidence.

Located in the Business Administration Building, the centre operates Monday through Friday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. and can be reached by calling 256-5892.

At this time of year, many businessmen are most concerned with the amount of taxes they have to pay, especially with the April 30 deadline quickly approaching. Of special interest to these small businesses would be professional advice on how to reduce these taxes.

In response to this, the Small Business Assistance Centre will be presenting a seminar on "Tax Considerations for the Profit Conscious Businessman." The guest speaker, Jim Mechi, C.A.-Tax Specialist and Glen Ladouceur, C.A., will be discussing such topics as tax planning for the small business, investment tax credits, capital cost allowances and many more topics.

It will take place at the University of Windsor on Tuesday, February 24, from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. in the Library Building. For reservations and more information, phone 256-5892.
Dr. Franklin tells very small crowd not to worry

by E.P. Chant

A less-than-overflow crowd of approximately 60 people, many of them administrators, showed up at the University Centre's Speaker's Pit on Monday afternoon to question university president Dr. Mervyn Franklin about tuition increases. The president consistently stated that, even if the province would increase tuition fees 10 percent of the time, he would base the option (by the government) of tuitions on up to another 10 percent, but the president said the board would be taken into consideration. He added that it would probably hold any such announcement until after the provincial election scheduled for March 19.

Franklin seemed genuinely reluctant of such a plan. "I think Canada has an obligation to third world countries, to help educate the future leaders of the third world so they can help themselves because, make no mistake about it, the greatest investment in any country is its people and the education of its people," he said, but admitting that this may take "a little while" at the whim of the provincial government.

Chemical engineering student John Rizopoulos asked Franklin what he planned to do about the "passing of the buck" - with the universities blaming the provincial government and the students blaming the university administrators.

The president replied that it boil downs to a question of public belief - that the people of the province must be convinced that the university concept and system is one which should be supported and that the people must decide whether they still think students should pay for their education and, if so, what.

Everybody wants some

At the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) meeting on February 19 - a meeting cut short when quorum was lost - a motion which would have council urge the university's Board of Governors meeting dealing with the tuition increase, "whether that meeting was open to the public or not."

Voting on a motion which would have council urge the university's Board of Governors not to increase tuition next year above the province's mandatory 10 percent increase, Simmons told the members they were the representatives of students and might have to force their way into the traditionally closed Board meetings to tell the administration how the students feel.

In his speech, which followed, SAC member Eric Dixon placed some of the blame for university costs, saying, "The faculty (here) has behaved totally irresponsibly in the past few years in raising tuition and costs via increased salaries go."

At the meeting, SAC approved the purchase of a special Polaroid camera (for $700) to produce Association of Students Councils student discount cards. The cards can be used nation-wide to buy clothing and other goods at reduced prices. The card will cost students $1.25. said Vice-President Jim Shaban, and the possibility exists for the camera to be used by (and rented to) the university administration to take pictures for the new pictorial ID cards which are to be introduced next year.

Several other minor matters were discussed and tabled before a couple members left and quorum was lost. Those that remained, however, were treated to a brief address by Karen Dubinsky, the current chairperson of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS).

After outlining OFS' services (education and student aid research, protest, and government lobbying), Dubinsky passed on to more crass matters. The proposed OFS fee doubling (by $1.25 per student to three dollars) and the fee for the new student organization, the National Canadian Federation of Students (seven dollars per student).

It is likely that a referendum dealing with one or both of these fee matters will be held in September of this year. Dubinsky expects to be back on campus here before the end of this semester.
Games room tournament was out of this world

by Wendy Coonber

Sweaty palms and unnatural heart palpitations, interloids of disbelief and of festration, accompanied this year’s annual snooker/video tournament held last weekend in the games room (now, the “Lites and Levers” Room).

With the sounds of Aznagarden coming from the doors of the video room, the last two contestants battled it out on the snooker greens, Chuck Church and Rick Fodor. Rick is the games room manager and one might suspect him of a little last minute heavy early morning practice, but that’s neither here nor there. “Nice try” and “damn you” and other thinly disguised compliments slid glubly through tight smiles. In a room that had last Thursday held 32 eager, competitive snookerers, the tension between the final two players was heavy.

But Rick knew. “I feel very confident today,” he said, watching Church and Ming Jun roll through the quarter finals. Fodor has been chasing the little coloured balls around the bumpers off and on for seven years, winning every game he had played in the tournament for the last 10 (since Thursday. Church had been at it for almost 15 years.

The video tournament, running concurrently with the snooker, was less auspensful to the spectator but death-defying to the players who had stared into the terrible faces of Asteroids, Crash and Space Encounters, where a slip of a nervous finger could mean the end of the earth, or worse. And just in case Space Encounters were to that big electrical outlet in the sky, there was of Antroids to take its place.

LaSalle countryside really nice this time of year

by Robert Brown

Last Friday a student hurrying to a morning lecture parked her car in the lot behind Essex Hall. When she returned from class an hour later the car was in LaSalle — not as a prank or due to theft, but as a result of university policy towards vehicles illegally using the campus parking lot.

The security head Grant Melver for reasons unknown. Shortly thereafter the then Vice-President of Administration, Dr. J. R. Allan, instituted a system of tendering for the towing contract.

But a year later, cars are still being taken to LaSalle by the same service. When contacted about this, the Security Office claimed that tendering was the responsibility of the Purchasing department. However, University Purchasing Agent Terry Crilley stated that while Purchasing investigated tenders and made suggestions, the ultimate decision was left to Security.

Rick Fodor has been chasing the bumper off and on for seven years. Winning every game he had played in the tournament for the last 10 (since Thursday. Church had been at it for almost 15 years.

So you want another 17 weeks vacation...

by Peter Hrastovec

Since 1970, a woman's right to a pregnancy leave of absence has been enshrined in provincial law. The Employment Standards Act protects qualifying individuals from dismissal from their employment due to a pregnancy condition by providing a flexible 17 week, unpaid pregnancy leave of absence followed by reinstatement in their same position or other comparable work.

An employee qualifies when she has worked full-time for a period of not less than 13 months within 11 weeks before the estimated date of delivery. Reasonable and usual absences such as sick days and vacation do not take away from the time of employment. In addition, an employer is not to take into account the employee's marital status, and women who have met the time qualifications are entitled to the leave.

Regular part-time employees are covered by the law, provided the arranged working schedule has been maintained for at least a year. For example, if an employee works in a recall store on Fridays and Saturdays only, she will be entitled to a pregnancy leave after having worked in this fashion for one year.

In order to apply for a leave, the employee is required to give two weeks' written notice to her employer, accompanied by a medical certificate estimating the date of delivery. If an employee qualifies and has not applied, she shall be granted a leave if, before the expiry of two weeks after ceasing to work, she provides her employer with the medical certificate and the estimated or actual date of delivery.

The 17 week period includes a mandatory six weeks' post-natal leave. Regardless of when the pregnancy leave was taken, each employee must take six weeks' leave of absence after giving birth. In cases of late delivery, the six weeks' period will commence at the time of delivery.

An employee may take less than six weeks' post-natal leave, provided she obtains a doctor's certificate of good health. Also, she must come to mutual agreement with her employer as to when she will return work.

If the employee's pregnancy interferes with her duties, the employer may ask that the employee begin her leave earlier than expected. In this situation, the employee is entitled to the maximum six weeks' post-natal leave despite the fact that she may accumulate more than 17 weeks on leave.

Usually, an employee will be reinstated to the same position or in work comparable to that which she held prior to her leave, at the same salary, and with no loss of benefits or seniority accrued to the start of a leave.

At times, an employer may be faced with a temporary work-stoppage calling for employee layoffs. A pregnant employee on leave affected by the layoff would be reinstated when operations are resumed with all her seniority rights intact. If the job she held prior to her leave has been discontinued, the employer must give her alternate work which is of a comparable nature.

An employer is not required to pay wages to fringe benefits while the employee is on pregnancy leave. But a pregnant employee may be entitled to up to 15 consecutive weeks of Unemployment Insurance Maternity Benefits. These benefits can be taken at any time between the tenth week before the expected date of delivery and the seventeenth week after. To qualify, the employee must have worked 20 weeks of insurable employment in the last 52. Or, if the employee was the recipient of unemployment insurance within the past year, she must have worked 20 weeks since the claim started.

If the employer requests that the employee take an earlier leave than expected, the employee may be eligible for further benefits available through the Unemployment Insurance Commission. For further information regarding these maternity benefits, employers and employees can contact their local Employment and Immigration Canada Office.

For information and consultations regarding the 17 week unpaid pregnancy leave of absence, employers and employees must contact the nearest Employment Standards Branch of the Ontario Ministry of Labour.

The only good provincial government is a dead one

by Wendy Coomber

"I'd like to give you a chance to tear me to pieces," said the Honorable Paul Martin, addressing a small group of students and faculty last Monday.

The topic for discussion was problems with the Canadian constitution, more specifically, "about the disposition of Canada's constitution," said the Liberal senator. The problem began, he said, when it was agreed on to leave the constitution in the hands of the British parliament so as to give Quebec another level of appeal should it disagree with the Canadian government.

Now the problem is, said Martin, trying to get all the provinces to agree on the same thing, or, "should the federal government even have to consult with the provincial governments in this matter?" The constitutional issue is between the government in Ottawa and one at Westminster (London), he said. As far as England is concerned, there is an existing Canadian government and that is in Ottawa -- there is no recognition of provincial governments.

If there must be any communication between the British parliament and one of the Canadian provinces, it usually goes through the High Commissioner, a post from which Martin recently retired.

The constitution has been amended many times since 1867 according to Martin, "at the behest of the Canadian government -- sometimes with consultations with the provinces," but usually without any at all. He remembers one day in 1949 when then Prime Minister St. Laurent, walked into the Cabinet, of which Martin was a member, and told it to petition the Monarch to turn the constitution back to Canada. "Forthwith!" Martin recalls he was shocked. The Prime Minister would take such action without consulting the provinces first.

Now, he says, "If you reach a point where you are disabled at every turn, at every point in the year, you must do it!" According to the British North America Act, the provinces are free to amend their own constitutions without going to London.

The senator also criticized the press for making it a game and blowing little points out of proportion. He also berated the members of parliament for not asking pertinent questions. "Not one MP," he said, "has said it wasn't constitutional for the government to proceed as it was. "The implications for the Commonwealth, I think, are greatly exaggerated." Canada and Britain have had incidents before but no one wants to interfere with relations with Britain because they are too important and too valuable," he explained.

He said if all goes well next month, the Canadian government will petition London to amend the BNA Act in accordance with the wishes of the Canadian government. Then, he said, the Prime Minister (Thatcher) will do what every Prime Minister has done for the past 53 years," she will do with our constitution as we ask.

Editorial

If it's so important, why was no one there?

Compared to Monday's turnout at University of Windsor President Dr. Mervyn Franklin's question and answer period, Dr. Bette Stephenson was greeted by an enthusiastic throng simply busting down the doors to ask intelligent questions.

While Student Council is well within its limits to complain about closed Board of Governors' meetings, the fact remains that their greed, apparently, mass up the proverbial one car funeral; Monday's event, although well planned, was not a masterpiece of hype. Although SAC may have felt that the involvement of Student Affairs absolved them of the responsibility to advertise, or to attend, such an event.

The sixty persons mentioned in the story on page one of The Lance is what would be called, in most liberal estimate. It also appeared that about 20-25 of those who attended were not students, even if they have the capacity to attend. And, although they certainly have the right to attend, it was not necessarily the smartest thing to do. Of course, it at least wasn't supposed to be. SAC is composed of approximately 35 members. Ordinarily, if such a disaster as only 60 people turning up to hear the University President speak were to take place, and if SAC members were administrators, one would hope that the other 35 or so were SAC members. Also, one would hope not to be the case. Consiprocious in their absence were almost all SAC members in the Executive. Truly a sad state of affairs.

Also conspicuous in their absence were also members of the Board of Governors save Dr. Franklin. Surely the least some of these distinguished halls of the academic community could have could done was have shaken themselves loose to listen to the concerns of the students in whose best interests they supposedly work.

Although Board of Governors members were not in attendance, it would have been impossible for SAC to criticize them for their absence. After all, SAC has a difficult time coming up with quorum these days.

And Dr. Franklin's attempt Monday evening, though it may seem to some, to make this university a bit more democratic was a dismal failure.

That failure rests jointly with the Office of Student Affairs, the Students' Administrative Council, and most of all, with individual students.

Looking ahead to the summer - unhappily

The tuition. Bogy Man has come out of the dark closet, kiddles, and he's come out a little sooner than any of us expected.

At Tuesday's Board of Governors' meeting, a motion was passed which will raise tuition fees for Intermediate and Summer School, effective May 1.

Courses during the summer session will cost Canadian undergraduate students $91 each (up 10 percent from last year's $82.50), Cana- dian graduate students $116 (up 10 percent from last year's $105), and foreign undergraduates $196 (up 14.7 percent from last year's $137), and foreign graduate students $220 (up 29.4 percent from last year's $170).

SAC President and student representatives at the meeting Monday, David Simmons was quite hot - under-the-collar about this on Wednesday because President Franklin had not mentioned it at the above discussion. His comments were open forum on tuition which took place Monday. Simmons, in a news release to this paper, accused Franklin and Vice-President Academic Paul Cassano of deliberately withholding the news of the impending summer tuition increase.

Be that as it is or isn't (actually, no one asked Franklin about summer fees at the forum - The Lance asked him a month or so ago and he said it was probable there would be an increase in summer course fees), the simple fact of the matter is that the board had no other choice but to raise the Canadian student rates by 10 percent because the Conservatives' mandatory 10 percent tuition increase was ordered to take effect on May 1.

The tuition increases however, were suggested by this university's finance committee. Reasoning (according to Franklin) to get more money out of the sector since the university has to get more money out of the sector since the university has to end the foreign nationals who have the full foreign nationals in the creation of the Board of Governors save Dr. Franklin. Surely the least some of these students would have known this. Why do you suppose could have done was have shaken themselves loose to listen to the concern of the students in whose best interests they supposedly work.

Although Board of Governors members were not in attendance, it would have been impossible for SAC to criticize them for their absence. After all, SAC has a difficult time coming up with quorum these days.

And Dr. Franklin's attempt Monday evening, though it may seem to some, to make this university a bit more democratic was a dismal failure.

That failure rests jointly with the Office of Student Affairs, the Students' Administrative Council, and most of all, with individual students.

Can't afford that much support

Dear Editor:

Last Wednesday, Windsor played its final home game of the regular season in St. Denis. Along with many other students, I have a night class but usually attempt to make the second half of the game. I realize the team needs support, but it seems that for this game some dimwit who probably doesn't have a good damn clue about athletics decided that even latecomers should pay $2.00 to support the team.

That's just great, considering students have only been required to pay one dollar for athletics. It seems that for this reason, students have decided that even when people are overcharged, they certainly won't come back.

With the Lancers definitely in the playoffs, we need support, but we can't afford mistakes like this in our athletic system.

Doug Finch

'Em-Pyrrhicism' dead

Dear Editor:

In the last issue of The Lance, February 20th, you vehemently criticized Eric Dixon and myself for "renewing on tenure issue". It is one thing to be criticized and opposed by the Faculty Association with misplaced active glands, but also highly unfair to the student body. From your analysis, it is very apparent that you misunderstood the intention of our motion. Fortunately, unlike the Faculty Association, you supported the motion.

Our intention was not, and will not be "a Pyrrhic victory". Our intention was to ensure that academic quality be pursued. It was never my intention and Eric's intention to provide the administration with a cause for dismissal of professors. No doubt, you are well aware that there are many professors whose productivity, both in and out of the classroom, have not gone in the same direction as their salaries. This gives me great worry. However, I do not believe those individuals are totally incapable of continuing to be good teachers or researchers.

My intention is to convince both the Faculty Association and the members of the Senate that what we seek is the mechanism that will spur the individual professors to continue producing, as is required, with the same intensity and enthusiasm prior to the conferring of tenure.

This is why I feel it is important that any attempt to focus on the more lethargic should just as well adequately recognize the contributions of the more dutiful ones.

You were a little hasty Mr. Editor, in accusing Eric and I of cowardice. Obviously from your position, it would have been a more interesting piece of news to report "Faculty oppose Post-Tenure Review". However, unlike your newspaper, we have a responsibility to the students, and our concern for the students makes it imperative that we exhaust all possible means to ensure that the quality of education is pursued instead of "Pyrrhic Victory" void of any substance and changing nothing.

David A. Simmons, President, SAC

Call in the troops

Dear Editor:

I would like to strenuously object to the editorial in The Lance on February 20.

In the article, it is claimed that "not going ahead with a motion asking specifically for post-tenure review I somehow let the students down. However, I do not believe that by submitting a much superior motion (a motion for a committee to study methods of maintaining and improving academic excellence in both teaching and research) the students' interests were not served.

It is true, as you indicated in your editorial, that there are many serious academic problems facing students at the University of Windsor. I feel these problems must be debated. How ever, in order to address only post-tenure review as a means of maintaining and improving academic quality, I took a much broader approach.

I do not believe that post-tenure review would be a cure all, nor was my motion on post-tenure review ever intended to be such a solution. Further, I do not believe it beneficial or productive to antagonize, any group on campus (i.e., The Faculty Association) simply for a "Pyrrhic victory". Instead, as I stated above, I wish to improve the academic quality of this institution - not win hollow moral victories.

When the Senate establishes the ad hoc committee I envisaged, I hope all groups on campus (students, faculty and administration) will contribute to seeking ways to maintain and improve academic excellence (this may include post-tenure review). Only through cooperation, not Pyrrhic victories, will such solutions be achieved.

Eric Dixon, Undergraduate Rep, Senate

Funding stash is slashed again

VANCOUVER (CUP) - A federal government decision to slash funding to colleges and universities would have a disastrous effect on Canada's development, says York University president H. Ian Macdonald.

"The financial outlay needed for maintaining a high quality education system in Canada will, I am sure, be worth every penny we are willing to invest," Macdonald told 200 people at a national symposium on federal-provincial relations in education on February 12.

Macdonald said the federal government is "critically involved" in financing higher education through the Established Program Funding plan, which provides about $3 billion annually to the provinces for education.

Any decision by the federal government to cut back on this financing, as has been threatened by Secretary of State for Employment Franklin Fox, would be "in its own worst interests," he said.

"Such a policy will only exacerbate and not relieve their real problems. Enhanced educational opportunities in the 1980's and 1990's are a prerequisite to the future growth and development of the Canadian economy."

Failure to provide adequate resources places Canada's future at a peril and inhibits the development of the essential responses to the changing requirements of our society and economy at a critical period of Canada's development."

The Ontario Federation of Labour preferred an increase to $5.00 per hour, to be indexed to inflation. Analysts claim the Ontario Conservatives are "politically cautious" in taking into consideration the interests of employers as well as employees.

Franklin talks percentage (currently, students pay for between 15 to 20 percent of their education).

Franklin added that he speaks about this problem "whenever I get the chance" and that students should be going to the NDP, Liberals, and Conservatives to get university-funding campaign promises.

The Lance asked President Franklin when he expected the board to get around to the tuition-increase discussion. He said the discussion could take place in March, but might have to wait until April.

All in fun

Dear Editor,

Tournaments, as you all know, are not the products of one individual's effort. Hence, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the award winner in both competitions and to thank all of the people who assisted us in making this year's Snooker and Video Tournaments an outstanding success.

Initially, I would like to thank the administrative staff, the University Centre management and support staff who provided us with the facilities, materials and assistance necessary to run the competition smoothly. As well, I want to thank the management of Jupiters Amusements for their generous contribution of awards.

Those who assisted in coordinating, refereeing and scoring are to be congratulated for their first class efforts and for their diligence. The Games Area staff are certainly among those who assisted us greatly in this undertaking.

Thanks to the ranks of the competitors — good sportsmanship is alive and well at the University of Windsor.

I would be somewhat remiss in not thanking the spectators for their ongoing support, and The Lance staff for their excellent coverage of the tournaments.

Last, but certainly not least, I would like to thank the entire Games Area staff for their patience in awaiting the conclusion of the tournaments and for their cooperation during the competition. We could not have done it without you. Once again, deepest gratitude.

Early week slugfest attracts slimy crowd to SAC's

by Wendy Coomber

It's interesting to note that gardening books tell you beer will attract slugs. The books must be right 'cause there were slugs all over the pub last Monday night.

Unfortunately, the beer attracts them, but it's hoped that the dumb little animal will git out on the alcohol and literally drown himself in it. I wonder if Doug Bennett has ever heard of that. I wonder if he had his own bout with the demon Molson's before he reached the pub last week.

Doug and the Slugs weren't actually dead, it was just hard to think of them as alive. The show started quite slow, I guess in keeping with their "slug" image. And "fat man" Bennett wasn't apt to move too quickly with his punch line (it takes a dog a long time to crawl from one watering hole to the next so they have to carry a three day's beer supply around with them at all times).

Still, about 400 of us packed into the pub tight as a roll of pennies, were expecting a little more, I think. Close to one third of the audience left during the second set, seemingly unsure of what they wanted from the Slugs but knowing that they weren't getting it.

The problem wasn't with the band, who played excellently despite being in a room that wasn't suited to them. Sadly, much of Doug Bennett's taunts and gib insults were lost on his microphone. However, they weren't punk and they weren't rock 'n' roll. See, the 'in' thing now is to play the 'out' songs, the tunes that the listening populace grew up with, a musical deja vu with a few twists.

The five member band stood twinkling under the stage lights, one looking like some staid organist, another holding a guitar while his cigarette dangled inconspicuously from his lips. Then Bennett walked on, full of smug quips. He swung into the beat of his band with his smooth, even sensual, voice, saying, "This is the nice part of the evening because you don't know me from shit". Such was the established carte of the night - Bennett, and all the rest of us.

He talked more than they played which was all right. His quips had more originality than most of the songs they played, with perhaps a few exceptions. Getting into the mood of the first strains of Roy Orbison's "Pretty Woman" was rather commonplace but when Bennett finally reached his chorus with "Pretty Man" I think it's safe to say he woke up half his audience. His suggestive gutteral growls were received by his listeners with a depraved admiration.

They also ran through "No-No", "Ninety-Six Tears", "Wasted on You", "River 63", and a few other old standbys, some with slightly altered lyrics to keep the audience singing it twice, we got it the first time.

Jody Stanton, SAC's manager, said she was quite pleased with the concert's results which she said were to break even and provide everyone with an entertaining night.

Well, it was entertaining. I never have seen singing slugs before, and ones of that size, to boot. I still think they were attracted by all that beer. Hope the Slugs: An indigent's form of escargot?

Can't keep them down

I wonder how many people realize the "goldmine" which visited our campus on Monday night.

Doug and the Slugs are proud owners of three Canadian Juno Awards - that means the band has conquered the bigtime! Since signing with RCA records last August, the band has turned Cognac and Bologna, into a gold album. Their single "Foo Bad" which they signed with RCA records last August, the band has turned Cognac and Bologna into a gold album. Their single "Foo Bad" which they

Their pseudo-intellectual image has charmed audiences across North America. However, these audiences still remain in pockets of the central regions.

Although the group is definitely more popular in Canada, it suffers from regional differences here as well. Toronto audiences love the Slugs yet Toronto sales are still not what they could be.

Whitman doesn't seem too worried about this problem; the Toronto situation may be a special one. "The areas with the best sales are the ones the group has played. As they tour more extensively look for better results in the States."

Well, now you've seen them. Just remember they leave a slimy trail of success in their wake.

Lancers down to business now

by Steve Rice

Windsor Lancers, having now dispensed with the pretense of the league, Laurier Golden Hawks, 101-84 in the first round of the playoffs Tuesday, are now head to Guelph for the four team OUAA west final tournament.

Lancers will face McMaster Marauders, 79-66 victors in their first round match with Brock, at 7 p.m. Friday. In the other semifinal, Guelph Gryphons will meet Western Mustangs, who upset Waterloo 67-65 in an overtime game in Waterloo, at 9 p.m. The consolation final will go at 7 p.m. Saturday with the championship final slated for 9 p.m. that day.

Tuesday’s win was not the biggest news of the day. Rather, it was the placing of three Lancers on the west division all-star team. Stan Korosec retained his first team honors as well as Lancer MVP.

7. T. Francis Xavier V. Men (5)
8. Connie Corcella Stinger (9)
9. Saskatchewan Hossin (10)

As being named the most valuable player in the division, while Phil Hermanutz and Jim Molyneux, had been listed in the first and second team respectively.

Also receiving honors was first-year head coach Nick Grabowski who was named the west’s coach of the year along with Bob Chapman of Guelph, last year’s winner.

While it is true the Lancers entered the game early in second half to hit the last field goals that ultimately buried the Waterloo team.

Buttery finished with 16 points while Hunt Hool and Molyneux added 11 each.

The Lancers forth right disappointing backcourt effort in Weekes’ 108-79 win Saturday in Waterloo.

Laurier apparently felt nothing was to be gained from an all-out effort, but one would have expected something more in a light of a touting by the Lancers earlier in the season and the fact that the two teams would meet just days later in the playoffs.

As Laurier had a hand in the scoring, Phil Hermanutz led all scorers with 26 points. Stan Korosec added 21, adding one point short of a 20 PPG average, while Jim Molyneux added 17 and John Ritchie 10.

Bob Fitzgerald answered for Laurier with 23 and Paul Flack with 17.

Lancers were 48 of 88 from the field for a 54.5 percent shooting night.

Brannagan second

Dan Brannagan of Windsor took second place in the 82 kilogram weight class at the OUAA west championships held at Western Saturday.

Brannagan, who was a starting member of the Lancer hockey team this year, was the only Windsor wrestler to place in the top three of any of the 12 weight divisions.

Lansdowne have placed fifth with 1.85 metre high jump, Dempsey tied the school record.

Aperado and Dave Dempsey also competed in the 50 metres, but both failed to make the final. Aperado recorded times of 6.0 in his heat and 6.1 in this semifinal, while Dempsey ran 6.6 in his heat.

In the high jump, Dempsey placed fifth with a 1.85 metres leap. Other fifth went to Kathy Rickel in the 1000 metres in 3:40.37, and Sandra Caron in the long jump, with a 5.00 metre jump.

In the 1000 metres, Ray Holland ran 2:18.8 and Mike Boudy ran 2:25.8, while the 600 metres saw Paul Kozak run 1:10.7 and newcomer George Dionne run 1:12.1.

Track team continues assault on record books

by Scott McColloch

The University of Windsor track team set three school records last Dowling in the high jump, whose 1.90 metre jump tied the school record, and George Henry, who ran 1:23.3 for 400 metres. This marks a departure for Henry, who until now has concentrated mainly on the shorter distances.

Henry pulled a muscle with about two feet to go in his heat of the 50 metres. He managed to qualify for the semifinal with a 5.9 time, but was unable to continue. Coughlan met a similar fate in a semifinal of the same event.

Aperado and Dave Dempsey also competed in the 50 metres, but both failed to make the final. Aperado recorded times of 6.0 in his heat and 6.1 in this semifinal, while Dempsey ran 6.6 in his heat.

In the high jump, Dempsey placed fifth with a 1.85 metres leap. Other fifth went to Kathy Rickel in the 1000 metres in 3:40.37, and Sandra Caron in the long jump, with a 5.00 metre jump.

Campus Rec roundup

Men's intramural ball hockey is now midway through in season with no clear-cut leaders to date. In division 1, Canadian Hostages hold a narrow three-point edge over Big Daddy's, Jen and the Knights, while in division 2, the Art-Hawks hold a two-point lead over Panama Red Army. Action is very intense and the play is getting better.

Biz boys on top

Commerce A and Eng. Soc. A hooked up this week for a first-place showdown and the biz boys made it look easy with a 7-0 victory. Meanwhile, the Rockers kept pace with a hard-fought 3-2 win over the Screamin' Eagles. Bobby Mellon had the hat trick for the Rockers who are now in second place. B division play saw last year's finalists, the Huron Hall Red Wings, play like their NHL counterparts as they dropped two games and fell from playoff contention. Commerce B dropped from first to third with their second loss of the season, a heartbreaking 2-1 failing to MBB. Geography jumped to first place in division B2 as they defeated Eng. Soc. B 8-2 in another close game.

COMPETITIVE URGES

After two and a half weeks of play, the league appears to be quite competitive. In the A division, there is going to be a close race between SACS pub and Techmash, while in the B division, the Thunderbirds from third floor Laurier seem to have a slight edge to date (or is that a slight edge to date?).

PC's unsure about...who was that again?

by Stephen Brooks, Ottawa Correspondent

In the wake of last weekend's national Conservative convention, the simple truth is that the jury is still out on the future of Joe Clark.

With one of every three voting delegates calling for a review of Clark's leadership, it is clear that neither the party nor Clark is willing to be stumped into a decision on the possibility of a leadership convention.

Under the hot glare of television lights at Ottawa's Civic Centre, the national leader of the PC Party delivered what may prove to be the most crucial speech of his political career.

Prior to Clark's address to the general meeting, MP Bob Jarvis told The Lance: "Hundreds of delegates are still undecided and everything hinges on Clark's performance at the general convention. He has his destiny in his own hands."

Clark's speech did not help his cause. It was unimpressed and run-of-the-mill in comparison to the enthusiastic reception Clark received the previous evening when he spoke to the Progressive Conservative Youth Federation.

In his address Clark made repeated use of the words "unity" and "build!". There was an obvious attempt to link unity within the Conservative Party with national unity. When the vote was finally tabulated, the result was 1,409 delegates in support of Clark's continued leadership (67%), and 714 delegates favouring a leadership review (33%).

The Lance found varied reaction to the fact that one in three delegates expressed dissatisfaction with Joe Clark's leadership:

David Cramb, MP and former mayor of Toronto: "I don't know how long the party can tolerate the situation."

Sinclair Stewart, MP and former cabinet minister in the Clark Government: "That over 30 percent of the delegates are calling for a leadership review indicates that support for Mr. Clark is not clear. Joe should consult with the new party executive in deciding how to interpret the vote. Yes, a leadership convention makes sense..."

Mike Longmoore thought there should be increased fund- Ontario universities and tuition increases should be halted until further student accessibility studies could show how much tuition fees increased affected students.

"Decisions made and facts determined behind closed doors!" are long past. Because of the secret ballot, the war between the pro- and anti-Clark forces was waged in the hospitality suites, in hotel corridors, and even by "working the lines" as delegates waited their turn to vote.

Because the vote on Joe Clark's leadership received the lion's share of media attention, the ideologically conservative tenor of the gathering has been given little notice.

Outgoing president of the PC party, Bob Coates, MP, received tremendous applause when he said: "The B and W convention was a curse because it gave us Anglophones and Francophones. These words divin- and should be eliminated from our national vocabulary.

Coates again hit a responsive chord when he said, "Our past need in this country is to build a property-owning democracy."

Debate reaction was rather cool when the former presi- dent of the party observed that this is a television age of instantaneous communication in which "the evil of the party leader has emerged. The PC party" said Coates, "must either follow the tune or forever re- main in opposition."

Candidates candidly converse

by Wendy Coulter

The smell of blood was still appropriately in the air from the group of about 40 students. But the toughest questions did not come from the students -- they came from the candidates themselves.

Bill Wrye, Liberal; Tony Brechelow, Conservative; Dr. Ted Bounsall, New Democratic Party; and Mike Longmoore, Communist talked for two hours, mostly on topics of economics, unemployment, and university funding.

"University funding is not being cut back," said Brechelow, asserting that it costs less to attend university these days. He emphasized the generosity of the OSAP grants and cited studies that showed tuition fees rarely deterred a student from attending post-secondary school. Yet, according to Dr. Boun- sall, the provincial government is doing nothing but systematically destroying education by its gross underfunding of universities.

He said he would like to see tuition fees lowered to the point where they would not hamper a student's accessibility to a univer- sity education, even if it meant lowering them to zero. Bounsall also cited accessibility studies from Queen's and Carle- ton which showed fee increases severely hampered student acces- sibility to university.

Bill Wrye's speech mainly concerned the student's search for a job after university. How- ever, he added he thought spec- ific grants should be made to

The men who would be King.

Bill Wrye, Liberal; Tony Brechelow, Conservative; Dr. Ted Bounsall, New Democratic Party; and Mike Longmoore, Communist talked for two hours, mostly on topics of economics, unemployment, and university funding.

"University funding is not being cut back," said Brechelow, asserting that it costs less to attend university these days. He emphasized the generosity of the OSAP grants and cited studies that showed tuition fees rarely deterred a student from attending post-secondary school. Yet, according to Dr. Bounsall, the provincial government is doing nothing but systematically destroying education by its gross underfunding of universities.

He said he would like to see tuition fees lowered to the point where they would not hamper a student's accessibility to a university education, even if it meant lowering them to zero. Bounsall also cited accessibility studies from Queen's and Carleton which showed fee increases severely hampered student accessibility to university.

Bill Wrye's speech mainly concerned the student's search for a job after university. However, he added he thought specific grants should be made to Ontario universities and tuition increases should be halted until further student accessibility studies could show how much tuition fee increases affected students.

Mike Longmoore thought there should be increased funding to universities. He also stated he would like to see Chrysler turned over to the Onta- rio government.

It doesn't have to make a profit, he said, and it could be used to provide jobs to Windsor's unemployed. It could also provide training for those students who had finished school, and it could be useful in providing research and development for other areas.

Candidates candidly converse

by Wendy Coulter

The smell of blood was still appropriately in the air from the group of about 40 students. But the toughest questions did not come from the students -- they came from the candidates themselves.

Bill Wrye, Liberal; Tony Brechelow, Conservative; Dr. Ted Bounsall, New Democratic Party; and Mike Longmoore, Communist talked for two hours, mostly on topics of economics, unemployment, and university funding.

African Cultural Week will live on in history

by Brenda Brown

This year's celebration of the African cultural week at my University of Windsor will always be remembered.

The journey to Africa featured the display of cultural artifacts showing the technical expertise of Africans, an educational seminar, and a cultural extravaganza.

The object of the celebration was to stress the positive aspects of Africa's history and culture. It is the opinion of all Africans that the traditional Western perspective of their continent does not accord with reality.

For reasons of time and space, this report will focus mainly on the educational seminar. This event featured prominent and able personalities that came from such organizations as the United Nations.

The three topics for discussions covered a wide range of issues: (1) The Socio-Economic and Political Problems of the African World, (2) The "Threat" from the Right, and (3) The Crisis of the African Identity.

The speakers for the first topic were Salimatu Diallo, the Overseas Association (OSA).

Diallo focused on the OAU's effort to enhance economic development and pan-Africanism.

The OAU is concerned with the security of members because Africa does not consider it safe to rely on the assurances of Western or other powers. At the U.N., the OAU has had considerable impact on the new economic order. The organization, Diallo maintained, far from being of circumscripted scope like the OSA, takes a position of nonalignment, projects a limited front, and intends to restructure Africa's dignity. He touched on the economic aspects and outlined the efforts of Afro-Americans to assist the motherland.

As a member of the International Association for the Advancement of Appropriate Technology for Developing Countries, he helps to promote trade missions to Africa.

The next topic, "The Threat" from the Right, was addressed by Dr. Howard McCurdy, a University of Windsor biologist and member of the National Black Coalition of Canada. This threat from the right is characterized by the new upsurge of conservatism which almost resembed a lay religion. The "wrong" of the right are mainly fested in the activities ofKKK, the Reagans, and the Thatchers.

McCurdy said that the United States now holds its ambition towards South Africa (Reagan has promised to increase aid to apartheid-stricken South Africa). It is by no accident that the Reagan administration has made it unambiguously clear that it supports the regimes in El Salvador and South Korea.

McCurdy maintains that the "threat" from the right is real. It is not only blacks but other minority groups and people struggling for national self-assessment.

The final topic to be addressed was "The Crisis of the African Identity." Val Cruz, a professor of Social Work, was rather anecdotally in his approach to the problem.

His extensive work in the West Indies of America, has given him added insight into the black problem. He noted that, to overcome the identity problem, there must be pride of self. He further commented that race-consciousness is not racism.

Gowald Murray, the Jamaican Consul-General to Canada referred the Caribbean perspective, his approach being both contemporary and historical. He stated that black consciousness is written on the faces of 95 percent of Jamaicans. To attest to this, he cites such Caribbean notables as Marcus Garvey and Stokely Carmichael. Mention was also made of the moroons and the Rastafarians. He stated that when Haile Selassie visited Jamaica (the former Ethiopian Emperor is regarded as a god by the Rastafarians), the Rastafarian movement was given universal attention.

The educational seminar was very informative in that it addressed the immediate problems which concern blacks. It also gave somewhat of an insight into the state of the race.

Closed board meetings not law...just tradition

by E.F. Chant

Public accountability has caught up to this university's Board of Governors — or it will be by the end of this month.

Since the University of Windsor (as such) was incorporated by the provincial government via the 1964-65 University of Windsor Act, the Board of Governors has lacked a board meeting (holding the budgetary pursestrings), has made its powerful decisions in meetings closed to the taxpayers who alone pay for the institution. Furthermore, no one, save the occasional student protestor, ever tried to force their way into a board meeting by using the defense that there was no legal regulation which had established the practice of closed meetings. Perhaps open meetings, just which are now considered meri, would have come about sooner if someone (a reporter, for instance) had tried to establish such a precedent.

At the board of Governors will likely be opening its meetings on its own initiative at the end of this month. At the February meeting, the board voted, in open session, to present a "Festival of Films on the Arts" featuring two films: "A Whisper from Space" and "The Black Holes of Gravity" at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday, March 19, in Room 11025 Mathematics Building, University of Windsor.

It is also not known, at this point, whether the secety of Board-Senate search committees will be lifted by the near-law known as the Open Meetings Law. It remains to see how the board members will behave as they test the law's boundaries.

Some other universities, when searching for administrative personnel, are very open about the people they are interviewing. Where Dr. John McGivney (lawer and secretary of the University of Windsor) is keeping things confidential (personnel matters), refused to discuss the various factors that led to his decision to open the meetings.)

He added, "I don't want to discuss how I voted."

The major problem cited was that some areas of board dis­

The last meeting of the Board of Governors, which was held in the Senate chambers in Windsor Hall and closed to the public, ended with a search for a bigger working room and a promise to open the meetings closed. If you’ve got the time, we’ve got the money

by Ed McMahon

"We have, available at this time, $614,000 for the three Federal constituencies of Essex-Windsor, Windsor-Walkerville, and Windsor-West", said Al Dumouchelle of the Windsor office of the Federal Government’s Job Creation Branch.

"I must emphasize, however, that that money is what is available at this time," Dumouchelle went on.

The Summer Canada Student Employment Program for 1981 is currently accepting applications for projects which will "increase students' work skills as they carry out activities of lasting community value."

According to Dumouchelle, the possibilities for funding are almost limitless. The program aims for short term employment involving students and the areas which will be given preference in the assessment and selection of projects under the program are:

1) Parks, recreational and day camp activities,
2) Health and social services,
3) Energy conservation and renewable resources,
4) Tourism development,
5) Artistic and cultural development (including historical research),
6) Projects improving services to the handicapped.

Any funding involves a project and a sponsor, usually a firm or sometimes a department at a university.

According to the brochures advertising the program, it provides, for the sponsoring firm, a contribution towards students’ wages, and a contribution towards project overhead costs, up to a maximum of $50,000.

In return for federal funds, the sponsoring organization is expected to develop a proposal that would employ at least three local students for a period of six to eighteen weeks in "useful and productive work of benefit to the community."

Dumouchelle elaborated that the project should also meet the following criteria, which he considers essential. "The project should develop skills for the student working on it, hopefully in the field in which the student is studying. It must also be of long-term benefit to the community", he said.

Any secondary or post-secondary students intending to return to school in the fall, who are Canadian citizens or permanent residents legally entitled to work in Canada are eligible as employees.

However, students must be referred to the project by the Canada Employment Centre, located at 267 University Avenue West, or the Canada Employment Centre for Students which is located at the same address but which will be moving to 85 Pitt Street East next week.

"The exciting thing about the project", said Dumouchelle, "is that students can, under the right circumstances, create a job for themselves."

"The job must be within the criteria already mentioned, but if a student has an idea for a project, he or she can write it up and try to find a sponsor. In those cases where a sponsor cannot be found, we can sometimes find one, although we can’t guarantee anything", Dumouchelle said.

"There were a few projects sponsored by various departments at the University of Windsor last year," he went on.

Although the minimum number of employees for a project is three, Dumouchelle stresses that three is by no means the only number of employees.

"A project can have up to eighteen employees and still..."
No line drawn between men and women's wages

by Peter Bratcev

With ever increasing numbers, women are entering the work force, occupying jobs in almost every walk of life. As a consequence, the "right to equal pay for equal work" has become a volatile issue, drawing stormy criticism from men and women alike.

Ironically, the right to equal pay has been part of statute law in the province of Ontario for nearly 30 years. The Female Employment Standards Renovation Act was implemented in 1951 and later incorporated into the Human Rights Code in 1962. The law as it stands today was the result of further amendments leading up to the Employment Standards Act in 1969.

Simply stated, the law draws no distinction between male and female employees who perform substantially the same work under similar working conditions. Any differentiation in pay would have to result from adherence to a system, or a system of systems, that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production. In short, the difference in pay rates can be based on any factors other than sex. The onus lies with the employer to explain the reasons for any differentiation.

When filing a claim for discrimination in pay with the Employment Standards Branch, it is necessary to identify the job as a whole and to look at the characteristics of the job being compared over a full work cycle. The determining factor is the actual work performed. If a man and a woman both operated a punch press in a machine shop, they should be paid the same rate of pay as they are doing "substantially the same kind of work".

Similarly, if male and female salespersons are each given an individual sales region, they are still doing substantially the same work and, as a consequence, should receive the same rate of salary and commission.

The mere fact that jobs are in different departments of an establishment will not necessarily mean that the jobs are performed under dissimilar working conditions. However, if two individuals are doing the same work and one of them has some additional duties other than the normal work required, then the employee with the greater responsibility will be entitled to the greater remuneration.

The "equal pay for equal work" conditions do not affect "red circle rates". These are paid to employees who are transferred from their highly skilled jobs to lesser skilled jobs due to sickness, injury or some other emergency situation. The transferred employee receives the same rate of pay as if performing the higher-skilled job.

A person who files a claim with the Employment Standards Branch is guaranteed anonymity. Moreover, an employer cannot fire an employee because of a claim filed for equal pay.

If a person is successful with his/her claim, the employer cannot reduce the wages of higher-rated persons of the opposite sex in order to comply with the legislation. The employer must give the lower-rated person a pay raise.

The equal pay provisions apply to part-time and full-time employees.

Open the Board - and not halfway

Judging from the results of a Lance poll taken this week, Board of Governors’ meetings are likely to be open to both the students and the public. It appears as though the board will be reversing a 10-year-old policy of secrecy when dealing with matters of policy concerning the university. Such a move is to be applauded.

Most members of the Board of Governors of this week maintain their policy of keeping the exact day of the board confidential, although most of them indicated that they approved of the opening of the meetings “in principle.”

Indications are that the meetings of the board will be open, but most board members expressed some concern about matters that they considered mattered to be “highly confidential.” These matters include finances and personnel.

Unfortunately, those matters are major concerns of most students who have not had to meet the board opened. Having the Board of Governors’ meetings open, “in principle,” but keeping “financial and personnel” matters confidential is rather a futile financial gesture.

The financial matter of most concern to economically-interested students is, of course, the “general fund,” which is a part of the budget with a large amount of money and a modicum of explanation. Rumors running apace are that the general fund is parking funds, the administration’s take from the game rooms, any profit from services and residences, towing profits, and any monies accrued from the university’s land holdings.

What the Board of Governors has realized is that students who attend this institution have the right to express their views in the policy that will ultimately affect the acquisition of the education for which they pay so dearly.

What the Board of Governors fails to realize is that students feel they are entitled to the right to financial goings of the university. All of them.

The board appears to be heading towards a policy reminiscent of Professor J.T. Culifton’s paternalistic modernization to have students removed from promotion and tenure committees.

They have apparently decided that there are certain matters which either should not be the concern of the population of the university community or that these matters are sensitive to the point that they should be handled on a “need-to-know” basis.

The question, of course, is “Who needs to know?”

Most of the students at this institution believe that they have a need to know about the financial goings on of the university.

Most of the members of Board of Governors, however, would argue that that information is private.

Although the board appears to be moving in the right direction by opening the meetings to the public and the media, we must be emphasized that opening the meetings, with the exception of “financial and personnel” matters, may only be a halfway measure.

The by-law pertaining to the open- ing of board meetings is yet to be written, but, if the present board has its way, it appears as though it will contain provisions to keep those matters private.

The option remains open for the board, some time in the future, to decide what the definition of financial and personnel matters may be.

Until such time as the board meeting are open in all respects, student council and concerned students will feel that they have won any victory.

The real victory will come when the restrictions which will surely be part of the opening of the meetings are removed.

There’s not even room for a good headline here.

The Fortnighter

by John Mill

It was five years in the making, but it’s finally here: the S.O.T. proposal (Student Opinion Surveys of Teaching), which was first proposed in 1975 as the S.E. proposal (Student Evaluation Surveys of Teaching).

The committee has recommended that the Senate establish a university-wide component and a second set of meetings “in principle,” but keeping “financial and personnel” matters confidential is rather a futile financial gesture.

There’s not even room for a good headline here.

The boards, at some time in the future, to decide what the definition of financial and personnel goings on of the university.

Law Revue skit forced into oblivion

Dear Editor:

Recently, an act of censorship took place within the Law School which would shame all those who believe in a basic right of freedom of speech. During the performance of the law school No-Talent Night, an act entitled the "Austrian Bar Revue" was forced into cancelation.

The problem began when Brian Davies (Law III) objected to a homosexual character portrayed in the skit. Mr. Davies did not like the manner in which the homosexual was depicted. According to Mr. Davies, the homosexual was too stereotypical.

Mr. Davies made his views known prior to the performance and in an attempt to ease his ruffled feathers (and quite without any obligation to do so) the writers of the skit, Paul Vesa, Peter Whalen, and Catherine Curtis, amended their script. However, Mr. Davies was not to be satisfied and demanded that the act be further radically amended or canceled.

It should be noted at this point that all proposed acts for the show were pre-screened by Mr. Davies, Mel Raskin, Drashinsky and Mike Rosenberg.

The organizers thought changes should be made. So said. When Mel Raskin read the script for "Australian Bar Revue" he said it was funny and approved it. Even after Mr. Davies made his feelings known, he told the others that they did not find the skit objectionable and refused to cancel it.

When Mr. Davies realized that the act was not going to be canceled, he circulated among the crowd attempting to organize a demonstration. The disruption in the, quality of the show was threatened and at least one member of the cast was genuinely afraid for his safety should they appear on stage. It was in light of this that Vesa and Whalen decided to cancel the act.

It is fortunate, indeed, that the performance took place prior to the No-Talent Night. The skit objectionable and referred to the "Newies Jokes", or women objecting to the "Miss Ontario Law School Beauty Pageant", or ballet dancers objecting to the "Blue Danube", etc.

But these people take some sort of action as Mr. Davies, there would not have been a No-Talent Night. The irony is that the "Australian Bar Revue" was not even directed against homosexuals. The homosexual in the skit was only one of several characters. Mr. Davies simply objected to the manner in which the homosexual character was depicted.

I find this sort of censorship objectionable in any form, but when it is forced upon me in such a manner as this, I am outraged. The whole incident is all the more odious when one considers that it took place within a setting where an insitution which has traditionally been thought of, at least in the west, as the repository of free thought and expression.

It is important to understand that the issue here is censorship, not homo sexuality. I do not need anybody to decide for me that which I should and should not view. I particularly do not need the type of coercion practiced by a self-appointed censor at the No-Talent Night.

We have our own refugee now

Dear Editor:

A Refugee Student Program Committee is currently forming on campus under the auspices of SAC. We have received the names and transcripts of a student presently living underground in South Africa, who is in need of assistance. The application has been presented to the university administration and we are eagerly awaiting its decision on this matter.

The application was forwarded to us upon request by the University Service of Canada (USUC) affiliate. USUC was established in 1945 and is a member of World University Service, which has been operating since 1920.

Due to changes in the regulations surrounding the Canadian Immigration Act several years ago, USUC began the Refugee Student Program. The intention was to help students and faculty members continue their studies, which may have been interrupted by political events in their home countries.

This student, who is accepted into the program becomes a landed immigrant upon arrival in Canada. He/She will receive support in the form of food, clothing, and accommodation, from the sponsoring group for a period of one year.

The university has, so far, agreed to waive tuition fees for this student. It has also been stipulated that food and accommodation can be provided by securing a place in one of the university's residences.

Anyone interested in helping the committee, or who wishes to receive more information involving activities, is invited to contact Terry Buckland in the SAC office.

The organizers thought changes should be made. So said. When Mel Raskin read the script for "Australian Bar Revue" he said it was funny and approved it. Even after Mr. Davies made his feelings known, he told the others that they did not find the skit objectionable and refused to cancel it.

When Mr. Davies realized that the act was not going to be canceled, he circulated among the crowd attempting to organize a demonstration. The disruption in the, quality of the show was threatened and at least one member of the cast was genuinely afraid for his safety should they appear on stage. It was in light of this that Vesa and Whalen decided to cancel the act.

It is fortunate, indeed, that the performance took place prior to the No-Talent Night. The skit objectionable and referred to the "Newies Jokes", or women objecting to the "Miss Ontario Law School Beauty Pageant", or ballet dancers objecting to the "Blue Danube", etc.

But these people take some sort of action as Mr. Davies, there would not have been a No-Talent Night. The irony is that the "Australian Bar Revue" was not even directed against homosexuals. The homosexual in the skit was only one of several characters. Mr. Davies simply objected to the manner in which the homosexual character was depicted.

I find this sort of censorship objectionable in any form, but when it is forced upon me in such a manner as this, I am outraged. The whole incident is all the more odious when one considers that it took place within a setting where an institution which has traditionally been thought of, at least in the west, as the repository of free thought and expression.

It is important to understand that the issue here is censorship, not homosexuality. I do not need anybody to decide for me that which I should and should not view. I particularly do not need the type of coercion practiced by a self-appointed censor at the No-Talent Night.

To top the world's most beautiful hamburger you have to use the world's most beautiful condiments. And that means fresh tomatoes. Fresh onions. Fresh pickles. Mustard and relish. Everything has to be market fresh. And because beauty is in the eye of the beholder, you can have your hamburger any way you want it at Harvey's...loaded up, double pickles... however you want. And as much as you want, and no extra charge.

And that's how you top the world's most beautiful hamburger. And nobody can top that.

Harvey's makes a hamburger a beautiful thing.
Part-time problems and solutions aired at meeting

by Helen Allworth

The meeting was opened at 3:30 p.m. by Josie Jannetta, past vice-president, in the absence of our president Veronica Eldon.

Included in the Report of Events for the 1980-81 period was the establishment of the University of Windsor Centre for Part-time Studies. The office is currently open three afternoons a week: Monday through Wednesday, and the staff includes Nancy Mcmahon and Sheelagh Conway. The organization is looking for people to staff the office for two evenings a week and all interested parties should either call the office at 528-4687 or contact Josie Jannetta at the Student Affairs office 252-4232, ext. 333, 334.

According to the needs of the Campus, and expressed a hope to expand this organization according to the needs of the Campus, and expressed a hope to expand the Career Guidance Program: Discover your qualities. This was appointed representative on the University Government Committee.

There are two immediate goals that Dr. Booth has to achieve. The first is to achieve better counseling and, as a result, there is still room for improvement. The second is to achieve better counseling and, as a result, there is still room for improvement.

The first is to achieve better counseling and, as a result, there is still room for improvement.

Although the fall counseling session here in the University of Windsor was better, there is still room for improvement. The resultant self-esteem is definitely worth the effort.

The tests include personality, general occupation theme. A personal's ability to survey the individual's personal character, life goals, and survey of interest. The answer may be only a telephone call away. Take advantage of this free service if your career goals are in need of clarification.

The tests include personality, general occupation theme, mental ability, survey of interests, and personal values, life goals, diagnostic profile for survey of study habits and attitudes, as well as vocational interest survey.

What are the advantages of taking these tests, and how will they lessen confusion? Each will, in all likelihood, experience different specific advantages. However, generally, much self-insight will be gained. One will become acutely aware of such aspects as personal likes and dislikes, strengths and weaknesses, areas of ability and non-ability, matters of importance and non-importance, areas of high and low values. Such elements, once known, immediately assist one in career choice.

For instance, one with a strong dislike for travel would reject a career as a diplomat, while someone with a strong desire to improve the lot of humanity might wish to consider a career in the social sciences. Another example where testing may be helpful is in one's study habits. The success of ventures like these depends on participation.

Follow the question period, the election of the OPUS executive for 1981-82 took place. The office of president is now held by Walter Costa; our vice-president is Brenda Sweet; our secretary is Helen Allworth, and Carol Gill was elected treasurer. Those positions on committees without current representation will be filled at a later date. As it stands now, Sheelagh Conway is Senate representative, Walter and Carol are representatives on the Part-Time Studies Committee, and Brenda Sweet is appointed representative on the University Government Committee.

The meeting was closed and those in attendance were very pleased at the morning's session.

PART-TIME UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

by Veronica Eldon

It is not unusual for university students to experience bewilderment in the selection of an appropriate career. The budget crisis has led to the implementation of various programs to assist students in selecting their course of study. These programs are designed to ease the possibility of eradicating certain problems.

The second goal, one that sounds very encouraging indeed, is to provide greater flexibility in courses and the scheduled times of these courses. Depending on various contributing factors like financing and academic cooperation, Dr. Booth anticipates offering courses, for example, on a weekend basis to include as many as hours as would be required.

Wine and company heady

by Helen Allworth

At the OPUS wine and cheese part on February 5th, not only was the wine very potable, the cheese and fruit very tasty, but the company was fantastic! This was the perfect casual opportunity to meet our Director of Part-time Studies, Dr. Gerry Booth, and also many of the people from the various administrative offices, and, of course, our fellow part-time students. The deliciously enjoyable part of the occasion was the discovery of what's really going on with some part-time students at a grass roots level. People involved in less familiar programs had a chance to share their enthusiasm with others who were interested to hear -- a great interaction.

The third is the variety of the party: this is what is so marvelous about part-time students; they possess a wealth of experience that seldom allows for a luke warm opportunity to meet the conversation, and there were very few lulls!

Both the party organizers and members of OPUS would like to thank Dr. Booth, Mr. George McMahon, and all the members of the teaching and administrative staffs who helped make the evening a success.

For those who missed the event and for those who enjoyed themselves, OPUS is aiming for another in the fall, so watch for it and we'll see you there.

The answers to the various questions were collected and elaborated in a report which will be delivered to the university government committee.

The organization is looking for people to staff the office for two evenings a week and all interested parties should either call the office at 258-4687 or contact Josie Jannetta at the Student Affairs office 252-4232, ext. 333, 334.

Organizations are instrumental in convincing the Ontario Ministry of Education to conduct an in-depth survey into the problems and situations of part-time students. As a result, the Levy-Coughlin survey was instituted and, currently, interviews are being held with administrative personnel and eventually will be held with students themselves.

Next, Josie introduced Dr. Gerry Booth who was appointed Director of Part-Time Studies in September 1980. While Dr. Booth has plans for the future of part-time studies, he first discussed the levy-coughlin survey. Apparently, the government has gone to some length to ensure that the expenses and rather sophisticated questionnaire used in the survey gives an accurate picture as possible of the status of part-time students. One particular problem the survey shed light on was that the needs of the community that the university could possibly meet are not being met now because of a lack of awareness.

The second, one that sounds very encouraging indeed, is to provide greater flexibility in courses and the scheduled times of these courses. Depending on various contributing factors like financing and academic cooperation, Dr. Booth anticipates offering courses, for example, on a weekend basis to include as many as hours as would be required.

Raging Bull pulls no punches. As a result this movie is up for eight Academy Awards. The film follows the fighting career of Jake LaMotta, a middleweight champion in the mid-1940's. Robert De Niro turns in a powerful acting performance in playing LaMotta. He received an Academy Award Nomination for his effort.

Other nominations include Best Picture, Best Director - Martin Scorsese, Best Supporting Actor - Joe Pesci (for LaMotta's brother), and Best Supporting Actress - Cathy Moriarty (LaMotta's second wife).

The movie traces the fighter's days as a contender on through middle age. The fights are especially brutal. There is no scarcity of blood here. But the film is much more than the fighting career of LaMotta. It is the story of his life, from rags to riches to rags. We see his personality reflected in everything that he does. As the movie goes on LaMotta's suspicion that his wife is cheating on him grows. No one is above question, even his brother, who doubles as his manager. In the end the boxer finds that he has driven from his life anyone who ever loved him.

He finds himself in jail for having introduced a fourteen year old girl to a gentleman in his night club. When the reality of his position dawned on him he started pounding his head and fists against the stone wall of his cell asking himself "Why do you have to be so dumb'?"

So it was with most of his life. Not only was he a raging bull in the ring, but in everything that he did. Everything was either friend or foe, something he owned or sought to own, black or white. His personality reflected his outlook, he had a "show me something I can attack" mentality. He never did realize that he was his own worst enemy.

The film is almost entirely shot in black and white. I felt that it really added more than it took away from the movie. The sets are brilliant throughout the entire movie, right down to the grimy walls of LaMotta's tenement building. The acting is overall quite good. I can find very little wrong with the movie, but nonetheless it did not strike me as a truly "great" film. It is very good, though, and should be on your list of "must see" movies.

Zastrozzi even better than Venezzi

by Wendy Coonber

I love the Experimental Theatre in the Dramatic Arts Building. In the productions presented there the use of the imagination is prerequisite. Their plays are to television what books are to reality — only skeletons waiting to be wrapped up in creative human invention. Last Saturday's presentation of Zastrozzi, the audience had an abundance of imagination. The characters hid even more.

The small theatre has roughly 45 seats. The production was sold out a half hour before it began, disappointed patrons being turned away.

The cast of six involved their small audience in a bizarre melodrama of one man's obsessive desire for revenge enacted against a sparse backdrop of wooden beams, a set of steps, a couple of boxes as tables, and a bench. Yet once the actors were present force as revenge's unthinking tool.

Verezzi is the mad young painter chased by Zastrozzi, who committed the crime, so they killed Zastrozzi's mother. Zastrozzi, demanded attention ....

Production of Zastrozzi.

The vendetta has continued for the past three years. The painter, played by Andrew Wilmer, is a defrocked priest, ably by Lionel Walsh, Venezzi divulges, "Through devotion and regular prayer, I have attained a new position" — that of God's messenger on earth. Victor father to protect the boy, and has kept him from the sword of Zastrozzi for the past three years.

Ellen-Ray McMerikin portrays the sensuous Matilda, violent seductress and lover of Zastrozzi. "First I want to make one thing clear — I do not suffer from rapier envy," says, kissing her sword, "I just like to fight." She leaps at Zastrozzi in a perverse twist action, party, thrust, love-making ritual. At her opposite, yet by the same token somewhat alike to Matilda, is Lori Pumpuri as Julia, who is "a victim of bizarre circumstances thrown into a jungle of the dREAped". Everyone wants to either kill or marry her.

The only two characters with minds are Zastrozzi and Victor, the former bent on destroying everything he finds distasteful in the world, and the latter trying to save it. In the final confrontation between Zastrozzi and Venezzi, who has gone mad to forget he has murdered his enemy's mother, Victor fights to save his master, wielding a rapier for the first time. His opponent laughs at him and Victor admits, "I have an unorthodox style", perhaps alluding to his leaving his religious orders.

This last fight could be called a battle between good and evil except Victor dies as its result, taking his place with the rest of the dead cast on the floor. Zastrozzi finally faces Venezzi alone, the end of his obsession is within reach. He strips the artist of his mask of dementia and then tells him to begin running again because he will be close behind. Venezzi gives a bewildered look and Zastrozzi answers, "It will keep me occupied".

Revenge is the only meaning in Zastrozzi's life. When revenge is gained, life holds meaning for Zastrozzi no longer. And Zastrozzi is having too much fun suffering.

Lots of laughs at latest Law School Revue

by E. P. Chant

"Hi! It's manufacturing that makes the difference! Yes, I'm A. J. "Gus" Gervais and these two broods with me are really prospective members of the bar in drag."

The Law School Revue last Thursday was highlighted by a slide presentation appearance by Windsor's (perhaps the world's) most famous furrier, "Gus", at the School of Music.

German masters still appreciated

by Catherine M. Wilson

Last Sunday, in Moot Court, a small but appreciative audience enjoyed an evening of music presented by the University Symphony Orchestra and instructor of bassoon at the University's School of Music, Dr. Imre Rozsnyai is associate professor of music (clarinet) at the school. His wife, Alison Rozsnyai, accompanied on the piano. Rozsnyai is known to high fashion models and muskrat trappers alike.

"Gus" provided the minkly wardrobe for the contestants in the "Miss Ontario Law School Pageant", a slide presentation by Roger Wilco Productions (third year Law students) which was the "hit" of the three-hour long night of singing, music, comedy, dancing, and craziness that could have ended the careers of most of the law school participants before they began if it had not been restricted to a showbizzy presentation.

LAWYER'S REVIEW

The law school beauty pageant, possibly one of the funniest things ever put on slides (next to my summer vacation shots) included - aside from Gus' cameo - a baby suit competition, a talent question, and the exciting competition of the evening. Excellent singing. The audience. The program provided an interesting variety of music, from classical to contemporary. The evening began with a composition (by Gerhard Wuresch), rich with German flavor. Wuresch in 1948, the "Trio, Op. 1" maintained classic form and enabled the performers to demonstrate excellent technique of fingering and beautiful cooperation necessary for small ensemble work.

Ludwig von Beethoven's "Trio, Op. 38" showed even more expression and feeling from the musicians. The adagio was mellow and had a lilting, soft tone. Garson demonstrated his excellent fingerwork, intonation and lightness of touch, Michael Glinka's "Trio Pathetique" was created in such a way as to show the capability of each instrument and the unique sounds of the various combinations of the trio. Alison Rozsnyai's dexterity and lightness of touch beautifully brought out the soft, lilting melody and mellow tones. Dynamics were quite effective and contrasts of movements created a soothing atmosphere.

"Concertpiece No. 1, Op. 113" by Jacob Ludwig Felix Mendelssohn was quite obviously the most moving composition of the evening. Excellent coordination and precision of rhythms and tones of each of the performers was fully appreciated by the audience. The mood created was light and soothing, that's entertainment...

The next concert in the series will be presented by the University Concert Band, under the direction of James Tamburini, on April 5.

SOAPS-and we’re not talking ivory

Just the same, while others stared attentively I found myself squirming and grinning self-consciously when some character on the screen would utter desparately in half-breath things like “Larry, I want to be straight with you; I’m at the point where I want some self-respect,” or “Just because we made love last night . . .

But it’s just that sort of repetition of the same themes over and over again that makes the soaps inviting. “It’s the best thing” according to one viewer, “you won’t be lost even if you miss a week.”

So, strange as it may sound, it’s that element of tenuous predictability that gives the serials, and the characters who occupy them, an inviting mix—discretely different from other forms of television entertainment. “You hate the bad guys and follow the good ones” said one girl. But there are more than just stock characters on the screen. A villain may still be a villain, and viewers still get to live and die with every fantastic frivolity face down in the path of their hero or heroine, but the quasi-psychological complexities developed from day to day make for a more dimensional realism.

For those who stumble into Sudville, then, there are few places more appealing or more addictive. You can’t indulge safely in the soaps. They’re over-dramatic to the point where they force emotional involvement and then play stereotypically with the viewer’s cathartic highs and lows. But people keep on coming back because “you know those things will never really happen to you.”

At least not with the same intensity day after day after day.

DIGESTS AND FREE PRESS

Any TV “expert” or Communication Studies major would gladly tell you the soaps addicts are in for the vicarious experience, and that they like watching the emotional rollercoaster. Whatever the reason, Soaps are a big business that draw big audiences. There are special magazines—Soap Opera Digest—there are weekly roundups in newspapers (Detroit Free Press), and some American colleges even include soaps in the curriculum.

As such, the popularity of the daytime serial has swollen across the continent. Females still form the majority of the audience, but are no longer the only ones attracted. One of the growing number of male viewers I talked to in the lounge said it’s simple: “You get hooked, and it’s not so bad.” Indeed not. Compared to the steady flow of childishly disguised double-ended tendre jokes and insinuatingly thin plots found on prime-time TV, the melodramatics of the soaps do not appear quite as superficial.

Last-second shot by Molyneux sinks Guelph

by Steve Rice

Coach Nick Grabowski admitted that with 27 seconds left on the clock, Mike Sesto, an 80 percent free throw shooter on the line, he didn’t think the Lancers would win.

Doubtless, even the staunchest fan observing the championship game of the OUAA western division last Saturday at the University of Guelph questioned the Lancers’ chances at that point.

But, wonder of wonders, Sesto misses and the Windsor team moves up court. Five seconds left, the same 1,600 frenzied spectators on their feet screaming and Stan Korosec misses a shot from underneath the basket.

Two seconds left and Jim Molyneux finds himself with the ball 18 feet from the hoop on the left side. He shoots at the last second fades away on the clock, the ball touches high on the glass backboard and falls through.

The 1,600 Windsor fans seem to shout in unison, “No”, but it is too late as the trail official announced the basket good. Along with the title, Lancers win the right to face York Yeomen in the OUAA final, the third straight year those two teams have met to decide Ontario’s best. That game will be played in St. Denis Hall at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Regardless of the outcome of Saturday’s game, Windsor will travel to Waterloo for the national championships March 12-14.

“I don’t think anybody loses a game like this,” said an obviously disheartened Gib Chapman, Guelph coach, following the game. “But that’s life. I guess God didn’t want it for us two years in a row.”

Last year the Gryphons lost to Waterloo Warriors in the semi-final of the western division tournament, a similar last-second basket.

Teams so close

“It’s ironic,” said Lancer coach Nick Grabowski pausing from the celebration to reflect on the game, “that two teams with the same season records (10-2), two players each on the first all-star team, one each on the second team and two coaches who tied for coach of the year, would be involved in a game like this. Both teams won - for the fans, their coaches and their schools.”

To add to the similarity, each team scored a total of 232 points in the three games played between the two this year.

Stan Korosec finished as the game’s top scorer and rebounder with 32 and 13 respectively, and was named the tournament’s most valuable player for his efforts. Also named to the all-star team were Phil Hermanutz, Windsor’s Derrick Lewis and Tom Heslip and Jim Davidson of Western.

Lancers hit 34 of 60 made by Guelph, Windsor made 11 of 12 free throws while the Gryphons hit 14 of 19.

Windsor bounced to a 4-0 lead from the opening tip, but 65 percent shooting allowed the Gryphons to erase that deficit and build a 50-42 lead by halftime. Except for the early lead, Lancers trailed throughout the game.

Nothing but outrightthouse narrowed the margin to just three shortly after the second half began and the teams continued to trade baskets from that point, alternating between a one and three-point difference. Lancers had numerous opportunities to take the lead but failed to.

Windsor gained the final by defeating McMaster Marauders 92-72 in a rough game Friday night. Fine Lancer defense limited the Marauders to shots of 20 feet and over for the most part.

All 12 Windsor players scored in the scoring with Korosec’s 17 leading the way. John Ritchie had 15, Hermanutz 14 and Molyneux 13.

Marc Dubois led the Marauders with 36, most of which came in the final five minutes of play.

Windsor hit 36 of 79 field shots and 23 of 37 free throws while Mac had numbers of 32 for 86 and 8 of 9.

Guelph narrowly won their semifinal matchup with Western Mustangs, by a score of 90-86 in overtime.

Crack a pack of Colts along with the beer.
Time has expired. It is 78-77 for Guelph, but Jim Molyneux’s shot will kiss the glass and fall through the hoop. Photo at right shows the result.

Some medal possibilities at all-Ontario track final

by Scott McCallach

The University of Windsor track and field team will be in Toronto to compete in the OUAA/OWLAA championships.

OUAA Events and Personal Remarks: "No definite predictions for this meet," explains Salter. There are plenty of athletes who may never win a medal, but they're giving it everything they've got in competition. They don't get the same credit, but in some ways they deserve just as much.

"If they can pop up with a personal best once in a while, that's all you can ask of an athlete," Salter continues. "The team is full of people like that: Paul Korak, Ray Holland, Kathy Ricica, Steve Thatcher. Steve has an outside chance at a medal in the shot put, though." Salter believes he also has an outside chance at a medal.

George Henry, a Science student who hails from Amherstburg, is competing in both the 1500 and the 5000 metres. A hamstring pull two weeks ago could cause problems, however. "It's not feeling too bad," says Andy Buckstein, "Henry's serving as administrator. "It's iffy in the 1500, but I've got a good chance for a medal in the 5000. My training has been geared to the indoor season," Henry mused.

Michael Salter, Andy Buckstein also speaks highly of team spirit. "Most people consider track an individual sport, but I would disagree.

As a head coach, Dr. Salter says, "Any athlete, every athlete, every day, has a chance at a medal."

Linda Staudt's strong legs will enable the Lancers to train for a medal in the 3000. My long-distance training has been geared to the indoor season," Lampman said. "I actually like indoor track better than the outdoor one."

Another athlete who could surprise is Kevin Coughlin. A local student studying Human Kinetics, Coughlin is entered in the triple jump, long jump, and 100 metres. A hamstring pull two weeks ago could cause problems, however. "It's not feeling too bad," Coughlin says. "My physiotherapist has been working on it, but I don't know if I'll be able to jump, because I have to land on that right leg."

"I don't really think I'm in shape for the 100 metres but hopefully I'll be able to compete in the other two events," Coughlin says. "We'll have to wait and see."

The philosophy department's Candice Waters, who is attending the meeting, is attending the meeting, "I've got a very narrow foot, which isn't run indoors."

Jenny Pace cites team spirit as her primary reason for returning to the University of Windsor to compete for the CIUSA's. "My favourite event is the javelin," says Pace. "They don't have it indoors, though, so I threw the shot put mainly because I enjoy going to meets with the team."

Like most of the team members, Henry is looking forward to the completion of the new indoor track, which will better enable the Lancers to train for the indoor season. "I actually like indoor track better than the outdoor season," Henry said.

High speed hockey season concludes with upsets

The regular season concluded this week in high speed 3-on-3 hockey with some exciting upsets. The league-leading Screaming Eagles were upset by the high-flying Thunderbirds team 4-3, with Giancarlo Niscom leading the way for Cody. Meanwhile, the Bulls came from nowhere to upset the 69ers 6-5 and the Bedrockers 4-3 to seal a certain playoff berth from the Bedrockers by finishing in fourth place.

In the other match played, Huron Hall clinched third place with a victory over the Bedrockers 4-3. The playoffs will be played this week and play is expected to be fast and free-wheeling as four teams attempt to capture the covered crown of 3-on-3 hockey.

CJAM covers OUAA's

Saturday night in St. Denis marks the battle of Ontario as the OUAA East champions York Yeomen take on the OUAA West victors, the Windsor Lancers, in what will definitely be the final game played in St. Denis Hall. CJAM Sports will broadcast the game starting at 7:30 p.m.

CJAM will also broadcast games from the national finals in Waterloo March 12-14.

Battle on

In A division play, the Rockets clinched a bye through the first round of the playoffs with their tie with the Bulls. The tie also assured the Bulls of a playoff spot. Chris Herlacs had the Bulls' lone goal, while Don O'Connor scored for the Rockets.

In B division, Geography clinched first place in B2 division with a 9-0 blasting of the Tortfeasors. The H. K. Blades had a rough week as they dropped two games and dropped out of the playoff picture. One loss came to their arch rivals, the Humkin Hacks, as Ray Holland notched his first hat trick. The Seamen won their first game of the season with a 6-2 romp over the Bedrockers. Tecumseh Chiefs remain the only undefeated club as they blanked the Blades 9-0. Sam Nicollitts picked up the shut-out.

The B division playoff teams appear set, however a real battle is shaping up for the last spot in A division. The Screaming Eagles can create a three-way tie for the sixth and final position with a win over the 69ers. It should be close.

There’s no place like home.

Thousands of Ontario university students may be disenfranchised in the upcoming provincial election (March 19). Enumeration is being conducted from January 16 to February 20, the same week as many students have returned home from university for reading week. The campuses affected by the change are the same as those in the first semester. They include Guelph, Lakehead, Laurentian, Ottawa, Queen’s, University of Toronto, Waterloo, and Wilfrid Laurier, and York University.

These students who are not enumerated at their campus residence and wish to vote, can so, must contact the returning office for the riding the campus is located in and have their names placed on the revised voters’ list between February 23 and March 7. As well, go to the returning office up to the day before the election and fill out a special form enabling them to vote.

Any student who considers his/her campus residence a place of “ordinary residence” may vote in their campus riding on election day. If a student considers his parents’ home to be his place of ordinary residence, he must be on the voters’ list in that riding. Since election day is on a Thursday, many students will not be able to return to their parents’ home and therefore must vote by proxy.

‘Stimulating’ report holds no surprises

by Ed McManus

The Committee on the Future Role of Universities in Ontario released its preliminary report last Monday, March 2. The report, intended to “stimulate discussion,” is in keeping with the guidelines originally set up for the committee which called for a preliminary report by April 28 and a final report by June 1, 1981.

The report states that “serious challenges to the long-term viability of the Ontario higher education system” exist and that “Ontario’s higher education system is faced with the task of identifying and overcoming the obstacles to the continued provision of high-quality education.”

The committee, chaired by David J. A. Crompton, former Ontario minister of education, is composed of 15 members, including representatives from the federal and provincial governments, the university sector, the business community, and the labour movement.

The report outlines three scenarios for the future of universities in Ontario:

1. The first scenario involves the continuation of post-secondary education in the province, with a focus on enhancing the quality of education and increasing access to higher education.
2. The second scenario involves the development of a new, more efficient system of post-secondary education, with a greater emphasis on vocational training and skills development.
3. The third scenario involves the transformation of universities into “innovative learning centers,” with a greater emphasis on research and innovation.

The report concludes that the future of universities in Ontario is uncertain and that the government must take action to address the challenges facing the system.

Longer days ahead

by E. P. Chant

Request: The Space Priorities Committee of this university’s administration is asked by various groups for additional space - to conduct research projects, graduate studies, extramural classroom work, and labs, for example.

Problem: The office space and lab areas in the university’s buildings are already intensively and extensively in use and, simply, “completely booked.” The only areas that might be used to meet the request for additional space constitute classroom space which, again, in its use.

Solution: University Registrar Frank Smith examines the situation and suggests that if the length of the teaching day was increased from eight to nine hours a day, classroom booking could be altered and additional space could be provided in such rooms. Smith notes also that most other universities now have nine-hour teaching days.

This plan is approved by the Space Priorities Committee and, subsequently, by the Council of Deans of the university.

The Office Fee Schedule plan at first, according to Dr. Paul Cannavo, acting for the administration, consults with Faculty Association (professors’ union) President Johanna Foster and Dean of Law Ron Isin.

From Foster, Cannavo seeks the faculty’s reaction to the proposed plan. The result is a matter of the length of the teaching day. She basically approves, saying it just means professors will be working an 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. day (disregarding night classes), instead of a 9 to 5. notating that the daily workload of the teachers will not increase.

From Isin, Cannavo seeks advice on a jurisdiction matter: can the administration institute the proposed solution without further consultation with other campus bodies?

Isin, following an examination of the University of Windsor Act (the provincially-legislated-by-laws of the institution), concluded

Living down your housing costs

by Wendy Coombes

Residence and food costs will be going up again this year... but not too much, says Dave McMurray, Director of Residence and Food Services.

Because of the Residence Fee Schedule, which has been in effect for the past three years, returning residential students will be paying a little less than those just coming in for the first time.

Even with the next school year’s increases, says McMurray, our fees will still be lower than many of the other universities in Ontario.

According to figures, the provin- cial average price for a single room in residence is $1,184; at Windsor, it is presently proposed at $1,100 for first year students. The average cost of a double room in Ontario universities is $1,035. Here, it will be about $890 for first year students. This will make a 10-12 percent increase over last year’s prices.

McMurray said these lower and differential fees give students a financial break, and also keep the residences mixed with students in different years. Students who stay for the same residence from year to year will pay less than those students who wish to transfer to a “freshman residence.”

McMurray said the other universities scoffed at this Residence Fee Schedule plan at first, but now, with so many rising costs and irate students on their hands, they see now to be making inquiries to this university to plan something similar for their residences.

McMurray explained that something similar is also being done with room fees. First year students will face a 15 percent increase in their meal plan, while returning second year students will see a 12 percent increase, and third year students will find a 10 percent increase.

He gave a 16 percent increase in the cost of food and a 10 percent increase in management fees as reason for rising costs in the meal plan.

The residence director promised no residence services would be cut back, even though other universities have done this to their residence fees at the same level as the previous year. In fact, said McMurray, a new residence service is in its first stages — a student security force. A report will be made to the Student Services Committee within two weeks making it official.

One other added cost is a new conference business. McMurray hopes to utilize the empty residences during the summer by renting them to conference delegates. By putting a little money out for it now, he said, he could bring in around $500,000 yearly which would go back in residence revenues.

Officials of the Schools of Music and Dramatic Arts think the conditions of their present buildings are so bad that the structures should be replaced. But the University's decision to use the university building one "Arts Centre" for both schools is not new, although the lack of proper facilities may cause problems in the future. In the case of Dramatic Arts, its very survival could be in doubt.

Music School Director Richard Householder and Dennis Young, Public Relations, Business and Facilities Manager for the School of Music, have expressed their dissatisfaction with the limitations of the school buildings, located on the southern extremity of the main campus.

The structures were not built by the university; Dramatic Arts, for example, occupies a former Salesian nunnery. According to Householder, when purchased they were intended by the university; Dramatics Association ("labour") went.

Biologists are in a pickle over preservatives

by Laurie Bergoin

Remember your Biology class in high school? You could tell the exact day you were to start dissection, just by the smell in the halls. The poor little animal laying on the table, covered in that smelly liquid. The animal was better off dead and by Laurie Bergoin

The formaldehyde, which is used for preserving animals for future studies, may now be one of the many cancer-causing substances found in our world.

Plant-Science professor Joe Cummins from the University of Western Ontario gave a lecture on formaldehyde which saturates the tissues to prevent deteioration, is sometimes used in the biology department here at the University of Windsor.

Dr. Polsky, who has worked with formaldehyde for long periods of time himself, said, "Personally, I don't believe that the amount of contact the student has with substance is detrimental. If a person spent all day long, maybe, but they seem to become used to it after a while."

He said that to him, the most irritating thing was it made his contacts (contact lenses) severely sensitive.

Cummins noted that all that is required to remedy the problem is properly ventilated laboratories and that rubber gloves be worn by the students.

Formaldehyde, which saturates the tissues to prevent deterioration, is sometimes used in the biology department here at the University of Windsor.

When asked if the students here were required to wear rubber gloves during dissection, Dr. Polsky, head of Windsor's Animal Care Committee, said the department has not been made aware of any dangers or effects of the chemical and the students were not required to wear them.

You really don’t have much say in who is running the universities at the present level or even that of this institution’s administration, but you can have a say in the SAC situation, how well 325.00 of your hard-earned money is spent (your SAC fees), how well you’re entertained, how well you’re informed and how all these decisions are passed on to the government and administration.

And you get all this service by simply scratching a few “X’s” on a ballot. What a deal.

But it appears, a deal with a value no one seems to realize, Many students across this country have already started students’ council elections and the voter turnout at most has been, to say the least, abysmal.

Only six thousand of the University of Western Ontario’s huge population turned out to vote last year and an equally small percentage decided to utilize their right reasonably well.

The toppler – or bottomee, actually – had to be a report from a community college out west which found its way into our office this week. The school’s total population is 1,700, all eligible to cast one vote in the student council election and the total turnout was 58. Fifty-eight.

Oh, you shouldn’t be so discouragingly apathetic” lectures are awfully high-minded and pointless things to write, but at this moment I seem to have no say, as far as I can see, to get in the picture.

All of the candidates have shown their worthiness by their interest.

Furthermore, foreign students cannot legally seek employment in Canada or they face deportation.

What do these facts spell out for the future of foreign students? Possibly, the tuition fees increase is compounded by residence, food, clothes, plane fare and entertainment cost increases will signal a decrease in the number of foreign students applying to Canadian universities. Where a student is already two, three or more years into a program, a greater financial burden will be placed on the parents, in order for the student to complete his/her degree. The student, too, will be bound to comply every penny and to curb all unnecessary spending.

In addition to financial concerns, the foreign students face many challenges: social, cultural and linguistic. It is just these collective challenges which may trigger a change in the inter-relationships of numerous students. The situations are the financial debate as having wider implications; namely, compelling a greater alliance among foreign students from various nations in an attempt to make their concerns heard.

Out of a growing concern, a committee has been struck, which consists of members of the International Students’ Organization. The objective of this committee is to coordinate the demands of foreign students, public, university administrators and local politicians about the repercussions of the various cumulative cost increases. The time may come sooner rather than later when foreign students will have to rally support from all foreign students, in order to secure their academic futures as well as the futures of those foreign students downstream.

Foreign students often feel like an outsider in our microcosmic university community. Daily, they share with us their fascinating and important ideas, philosophies and cultures, to effect a dynamic, cross-cultural connection on campus.

Censorship of Law Revue skit was self-inflicted

Dear Editor,

According to the letter in last week's Lance by the members of the Students' Union, the skit is to be censored. However, the issue involved is censorship of the right to free expression. The audience has the right to express approval or disapproval of the activity on stage is given little weight by the skit members, although they are highly conscious of their own right to free expression. They are not willing to admit that an audience might find offensive.

full of what the School is capable of doing.

Both Young and Householder say that building an Arts Centre in the School of Dramatic Arts is "the only ultimate solution to the problem." The idea has been discussed between the schools for several years, both formally and informally. About three years ago, the Music Department came up with the "ideal facility" in consultation with Prof. Daniel Kelly, then Director of Dramatic Arts. Such a building would contain several different performing halls, ranging from a small recital hall to a large major auditorium. This would include halls that would be suitable for everything from chamber music to grand opera to legitimate theatre. Also included would be the classroom and rehearsal space needed for the School of Dramatic Arts and the School of Music.

However, neither school has formally requested the university to build the structure. "We would gladly ask for a performing and objective character who is, according to their letter, "into bestiality, sadomasochism, transvestism, and homophobia." It is my belief that people in an audience have a right to express approval or disapproval of all of these things regardless of whether they are presented in a positive or negative light. In this case, the objection was to a dehumanized stereotype of homosexuality, but in another instance it could have been to a degrading racist or sexist stereotype. If the members of the Australian Bar Review skit found the homosexual character in the skit inoffensive and homogenous, to be it - but please do not expect that it or others necessarily will be. An audience should be able to express their own disapproval of the content.

The university is not planning any new buildings for at least five years. So far it has been directing its efforts to a replacement for St. Denis Hall, but a further fund-raising campaign, which would be used for non-capital expenses such as specialized equipment, research, and library acquisitions. Since provincial and federal funds for new buildings are not expected, this, in turn, might cause serious problems. Says Householder: "We have two... healthy schools on campus, whose job is to train performers. We are lacking very obvious facilities to do the task they should be doing.

Young claims that Dramatic Arts is in a very vulnerable position, with over 90 percent of its students recruited from outside the Tri-County area. The School has to recruit students to keep itself going, and there is no other high school in the area. We are in a vulnerable position in Windsor - this is not a theatre center.

The University of Windsor has two schools of music and two theatre schools that are in competition with Windsor. We are not to mention such smaller communities as Brock." Be cause Windsor does not have a performing arts centre, Theatre Arts can no longer rely upon its reputation. While enroll ment so far has remained stable, the potential for decline is "scary.

The Lancer, University for the past three years, and a student in the future. After completing my degree, hoping to get will be the largest ever, for them. I feel that it must reciprocate the students’ contribution with a contribution of its own. Issues: These are some of the issues that students want SAC to literally fight for: 1) Slack week — The students have been so overwhelmed by the return of slack week. SAC should be demanding a review of the situation. And to put further pressure on the administration, SAC must mobilize student support; this should not be too difficult since most students want slack week. Even if we fail, I feel that we as students have a duty and a responsibility to demand change when we see that it is necessary. 2) Picture Card Sales — I am against the introduction of picture cards. They are not necessary and, in the time of cutbacks, I feel, on principle, that it is unjust to ask students to pay for things which are unnecessary. Tuition will be increasing soon and we have already had an increase in SAC fees. 3) Entertainment issues — SAC was granted a fee increase in January — however, SAC, this entire school year, has not provided the students with any quality entertainment. Fortunately, the clubs and the pub are beginning to pick up the slack. I have had experience in the entertainment business and I know that quality entertainment is not always hard to find. Furthermore, I know for certain that the quality of entertainment cannot be determined by the fee the entertainers charge. I feel this distorted view, along with overzealous organization, put this year’s Orientation in the red. Basically I am optimistic about my chances for victory and about our university in general. I am fully aware that SAC’s powers are limited. For example, a student who runs for President can promise, or even seriously consider, reducing tuition, certainty the President can and should make the students’ concern over this issue known and I feel that our administration has done a fair job of this. Other issues may also be out of our control, but I feel that if SAC, in conjunction with the student body, fought for important issues the campus would be a much more interesting and vital place. This is my goal. Margaret Hoy I would like to take on the position of President of SAC because I want to make SAC more accountable and responsible to the students of the University of Windsor. I intend to achieve more responsibility and accountability by encouraging more student input into the Students’ Administrative Council through opinion polls and general surveys. Thus, my goal is to administer SAC efficiently and in accordance with the wishes of the students.

Sal candidats speak out on issues and ideas

Presidential Candidates:

James Boyer

My name is James Boyer. I am 21 years old and a third year student in Honours Economics. I have been at the university for the past three years and have served this 80-81 year as President of the Delta Chi Fraternity. My objective in 81-82 is to serve as SAC President and take two courses towards completing my degree, hoping to enter law school in the future. Very simply put, I believe it is always important to have strong and concerned student government. I have been aware of the strife that has torn the current administration apart and sapped much of its energy. Because of this, I believe it is time for fresh blood, fresh ideas, and an end to a lack of unified purpose. As SAC President, I would strive for clear, fair, and cooperative leadership relying on the input of my executive, and further an open relationship with all clubs, societies, and house councils to insure total student representation through student government. I am aware that SAC’s budget will be the largest ever, which only increases the need for responsible government. This money increases the opportunity for more SAC-sponsored events which would be coordinated with all other student functions for a well-rounded social atmosphere. I feel that SAC should also accomplish something of lasting value for those students who follow us. Therefore, as a project for 81-82, I am advocating saving old St. Denis Hall from the wrecking ball. Since it is too old and too small for intercollegiate competition, it would be an ideal main campus recreational facility much like Western’s. To lose old St. Denis Hall would forever change the campus for the worse. I will continue to support and further all the traditional services offered by SAC, such as the drug plant, used book sale, income tax counselling, and also strive for an expanded student placement office if possible. As President, I would also insure a coordinated Orientation week which features all the clubs and activities of the university. I have developed some ideas about SAC over the past few months and in the past weeks I have found a good deal of support for them among students. The extent of this support encouraged me to run on a platform of form of innovation and vitality in SAC. Although I and many others have been dissatisfied with conditions on this campus, I feel the University of Windsor has a strong nucleus around which we can build a better atmosphere. We have a fine business school, and our Faculty of Engineering is still important and innovative. We have clubs such as the Marketing Club and the newly formed Social Science Society which have helped to fill the entertainment void that SAC has left. In general, I feel, we have a good basis from which we can begin, but I, and others, feel SAC has to be revitalized. It seems that SAC has forgotten that it must reciprocate the students’ contributions with a contribution of its own.

Frank Carbone

My name is Frank Carbone. I am a fourth year history student. I have been at the university for the past three years and have served this 80-81 year as President of the Delta Chi Fraternity. SHABAN Crack a pack of Colts along with the cards.

My name is Jim Shaban and I am a candidate for the office of Vice-President of SAC for the past two years and I am qualified to hold the position of President of SAC.

I strongly urge each and every one of you to vote on March 18th and 19th as this is your opportunity to voice your opinions. In concluding, I would like to thank the student body for supporting my terms as Vice-President – Administration for the past two years and anticipate your further support as President of SAC.

David Booth

Experience:
- past high school student council president;
- experienced in administrative affairs;
- experienced student;
- work experience in retail management;
- public relations;
- Planned Contribution:
  - promote cooperation (team sports);
  - promote honesty;
  - provide goal oriented leadership for the student body.

Proposals:
- access to university parking lots, after 6 p.m. during the week – lift gates;
- increase information to students, with respect to campus housing, cost of heating, better description of house or apartment, some kind of rating of the landlords;
- possibility of having some kind of hot food in the pub, the right for Students’ Council to have exclusive rights to all concerts at the new St. Denis Hall;
- support of the students’ needs, ideas, and suggestions.

I believe the best way to listen to what the students want, then acting on their requests, I can be a key to the desired results. Remember, SAC is a corporation with approximately 6,200 strong members. I look forward to the possibilities of serving you, the students, on the next council.

John Mill

Let’s face facts, the University of Windsor has potential to be a strong, united campus. But without your support it cannot be done.

I will support whoever is elected President and will work faithfully alongside him or her. I intend to fully support those policies which are in the best interests of the students.

This year I worked as a sports and social convener for Huron Hall. We had and are having a very good year, this position taught me how to accomplish group objectives. I also worked at the Lance co-writing “The Fortnighter.” This experience brought me closer to the diverse issues that affect us all on campus such as OFS (Ontario Federation of Students), student evaluations, and tuition increases.

While apathy is still prevalent on campus, I can see where the university is making inroads and is becoming successful in motivating student involvement. The breakthrough is coming. This year we initiated the used book sale and a new income tax service. Although these services were small this year, they are destined to grow. And next year we will see the introduction of the student security force. All of these programs spell student involvement. But to accomplish this, we need the full cooperation of student leaders and the student body. Get involved! You can start by giving your support next Wednesday and Thursday when you go to the polls. Remember “MILLS” for Vice-President. I would like to thank you for taking the time to read my statement.

Ralph Pizzo

My name is Ralph Pizzo and I am running for the office of vice-president. I am 22 years old and in my third year in Biology, planning to graduate this coming year.

I have never had the opportunity to get involved with SAC until this year. Getting involved is now my number one concern.

If elected as vice-president, I will give my complete dedication and total devotion to this very important position. I will try to be available to every single student, activity, and committee. One main goal is to organize a slack week which will be of an advantage to all students. The members of SAC must work together as a team to give the most to you, the students.

As a former high school president, I know the job requires many hours of work.

The experience of a former president and the will to learn will make me a devoted and dedicated candidate. Please support yourselves by supporting Ralph Pizzo for vice-president on March 18 and 19.

Milan Stipic

As a matter of introduction, I am Mike Stipic, a third year Social Science student.

I am presently the Commissioner of External Affairs for SAC and a student representative on the university Senate. My other functions on the campus include sitting on the Undergraduate Admissions Committee and the Academic Planning Committee of the university. As well, I am one of the founding members of the new Social Science Society and, at present, I sit on its cabinet.

From these activities, I consider myself to have gained a fair amount of experience concerning all levels of the university community. Sitting on the Senate has given me an insight into the administrative side of things. SAC has given me experience in student politics and the Social Science Society has given me the opportunity to see how clubs and societies function and to gain an understanding of their trials and tribulations.

I believe that my experiences give me a good perspective from which to take on the Vice-President’s position. I wish to point out that SAC is not a simple operation but rather a complex network of services and functions and is not something to be taken lightly. I consider myself to be concerned and I think my actions and involvement prove me to be as such. It is this concern that has motivated me to see the V.P.s position.

If anyone wishes to question me about any issues, please attend the All-Candidates meeting coming up, or contact me at the SAC office. I hope that I can count on your support.

Thank you for your interest.

Advisory Council (SAC) is the organization of full-time undergraduates on campus. SAC is responsible for providing services (pub, drug plan, etc.) and club and societies and student representation on many levels of the University of Windsor. To do this, each full-time undergraduate pays $23.50 to the Students’ Administrative Council through their tuition. With our 6,000 full-time undergraduates, this $23.50 that you provide adds up to a pretty hefty sum. This makes your SAC a very wealthy organization with a cash flow of over half a million dollars.

The President is responsible for the over-all operations of the SAC and must have a basic understanding of the operations to effectively manage the Corporation for the benefit of the entire student body.

As Vice-President – Administration of SAC for the past two years, I feel I have developed the necessary experience to manage the affairs of the SAC. Through my dealings with many students and administrators over the past two years, I realize the needs and wants of the student body and feel I can effectively represent you on the many committees here at the university and provide the services and entertainment that the majority of students wish to see.

The office of the President of SAC is not one to take lightly. It requires a dedicated and experienced individual to be efficient and effective. I have attained those requirements in the past two years and I am qualified to hold the position of President of SAC.

Most of us, unfortunately, will at least one time in our lives be involved in an automobile accident. It may be a minor fender bender or it may involve death. In any event, one should have some knowledge of the law in the area.

When you are involved in a car accident, the law demands that you stop, remain at or immediately return to the scene, and give your name and address upon request. If the car you were driving is not yours, you must also give the name and address of the owner of the vehicle. You should give whatever help you can to any injured persons.

At the scene of the accident, whether you are at fault or not, try to give only factual information as to your identity, your licence and insurance particulars. No threats or apologies should be made to any person. No matter who is to blame, you will probably be upset and could easily make statements which might eventually be used against you. If there has been any personal injury or property damage of more than $400, it is also your responsibility under provincial law to report the accident to the police.

When your car is insured, you are usually covered for anyone who drives your car with your consent for a temporary purpose. Your coverage applies to drivers under the age of twenty-one except when your policy has a specific prohibition against this class of drivers. You will not be insured if the driver does not hold a valid driver's licence or is impaired at the time that he or she is involved in the accident. It is mandatory that you give your insurance company all required information. You should always give to your insurance company as much information as you can. It is your responsibility to serve them satisfactorily. It is as easy as giving input in the Senate.

Company brings their private lives to the stage

by Peter Heaslov

Two's company and three's a crowd. So goes the old social maxim. And you'd think it would remain unbreachable in a densely populated metropolis like NYC. And in the "me"-oriented seventies to boot! But not so, say writer George Furth, musical composer Stephen Sondheim and the University Players Company, the award-winning Broadway musical by Furth and Sondheim, opened last week at the Essex Hall Theatre. It's a play about intrusions, those small, uninvited excursions into the private lives of others. And the private life that is the subject of "every-body's" concern is in a tail-spin going nowhere.

Robert is an anomaly to his married friends because, at thirty-five, he remains a bachelor. He is the target of their collective sympathy, the proverbial third place setting at dinner, the one whose life is unfulfilled beclouded by the same unceremonious visits from everyone else's home. Refrigerator, closet, attic, everywhere the intrusions go. Little wonder then, that the entire cast eagerly anticipates his wedding, perhaps to one whose life is unfulfilled beclouded by the same unceremonious visits from everyone else's home. Refrigerator, closet, attic, everywhere the intrusions go.

So, he plays the role of the archetypal romantic in search of an elusive impression of love. At play's end, he has yet to find that imperceptible ideal. But we are satisfied that despite all the misery showered upon him by his friends, Robert will surface with true love in his "company". Sentimental stuff.

Annie held over at the Fisher Theatre

by Laurel Brandt

"Annie", at the Fisher Theatre, is billed as "a new musical," but what it really is is an old fashioned fun musical. You know, the kind that Gene Kelly did as movies. The plot is straight and simple. The time is late December, 1933, and the Depression in the U.S. is at its worst, with Franklin D. Roosevelt having been in office for almost a year. Eleven year old Annie had been left as a baby on the steps of the New York Municipal Orphanage, run by Miss Hannigan, with a note asking that she be looked after until her parents can come back for her.

Annie is taken out of the orphanage for two weeks at Christmas by Oliver Warbucks, the richest man in the country. Her cheerfulness wins Mr. Warbucks' heart, and he starts a search for her parents. Miss Hannigan has her brother and his girlfriend impersonate Annie's parents so they can all get some of the reward money that Warbucks has offered.

Meanwhile, Annie's optimism has caused the President to decide that maybe he can do something about the Depression. Of course, all ends happily, with Annie being adopted by "Daddy" Warbucks and reunited with her dog Sandy, the imposers exposed, and the country getting "a New Deal for Christin the lead role of Annie, Theda Steinert is cute without being saccharine, and by the time she belts out "Tomorrow, tomorrow, I love ya . . . " the audience loves her.

Norwood Smith goes from being a gruff businessman to kind-hearted "Daddy" Warbucks perfectly, showing how a little love can mellow almost anyone.

Ruth Kobart draws laughter and the staging -- which involves shifting backdrops and changing mid-stage props -- is slick and professional.

Some of the political satire may be lost on those who are unfamiliar with U.S. politics during the Depression, but there are more than enough other funny moments.

"Annie" is at the Fisher until April 5; tickets are $10, $17, and $30 U.S. funds. Get your bottom dollar you'll love "Annie".
Walker 917: a place for dry heaves, enemies and passions

In Windsor's downtown, Rock'n'roll, misplaced during the pseudo-intellectual "art"-rock days of the '70s, has its head above ground and is making a revival.

While the rest of the city is anesthetized with top-40, disco, and Country, crowds at the Walker 917 shake and bounce to the reverberating thump of new Rock’n’roll (punk for you gawkers). As such, Downunder — the club's nickname — is an appropriate, if unavoidable tag being.

Indeed, since JP’s embarrassing change-over last summer, the 917, or the dark-lit low-down, pseudo-intellectual "art"-rock for you gawkers. As such, Downunder — the club's nickname — is an appropriate, if unavoidable tag being.

The Lancers are saturday's big winners of the CIAU Tournament.

Lancers downed 83-72

Nothing but disappointment at OUAA final.

by Steve Rice

One could only feel a deep sense of disappointment, exiting the doors of St. Denis Hall at the conclusion of the OUAA basketball final last Saturday.

Disappointment, in part, because the old building has seen its last game and Windsor fans of the future have last that decided edge. Disappointment, certainly, that the Lancers lost the game with York Yeomen 83-72.

But there was disappointment primarily because it was not a good game. And a good deal of the credit for that has to go to referees Ron Foerster and Fred Sisson.

Foerster is Canada's best, having officiated the 1976 Olympic final in Montreal, but on this night he looked like a rookie in his first game, Simon, on the other hand, shouldn't be allowed to work public school games. He was nothing short of horrendous.

There's no argument that bad calls were made and missed against both teams, but one should never underestimate the influence of even a single call. If Windsor had been allowed to continue the game as they started it, who's to say things might not have turned out differently.

No matter the outcome, one thing is for sure. Without those officiating, the fans would have been treated to a much more exciting game.

Lancer coach Nick Grabowski agreed that "the officials took some momentum away from us at times," while his counterpart, Bob Bain of York, confirmed that a couple of calls were 'not supposed'.

"There were a few calls that could have gone either way," Bain said. "Korosec's fifth probably wasn't a foul, but then maybe he might have fouled out earlier when he was pushing underneath the offensive boards. Mistakes are made by the officials just like they're made by players."

The game meant nothing in terms of national final pairings, but provided a fine opportunity for both teams to prepare for the tournament which began Thursday. Windsor met defending champion Victoria Vikings Thursday while York met Atlantic conference winners, St. Francis Xavier X-Men.

(Chart check for other game times.)

Windsor set the Yeomen back on their heels from the start, opening up a 12-4 lead in the first five minutes and it appeared that the Toronto boys would go down with hardly a whimper.

But following a David Coulthard basket and a York timeout, Paul Jones, named the game's most valuable player, hit the first of four straight baskets that put York back on even terms and ultimately reverse the course of the game.

Jones' second basket came off a Brian Hogan-Phil Hermane- nute mismatch, while the third was the most damaging as Jones stole the ball from John Ritchie and sent him crashing to the floor in the process.

Ritchie sustained an injury to his left ankle in the fall and, although he returned to play, was ineffectual from that point. The injury will also probably keep Ritchie at less than 100 percent for the CIAU's.

Windsor's strategy was not unusual. They employed a box and one defense for most of the game, with one Lancer covering high-scoring all-Canadian Coulthard. The strategy proved effective as the Tillsonburg native was held to just six points in the first half, 22 points overall. But as Bain pointed out, it also hurt the Lancers.

"Windsor's defense helped them in some ways and hurt them in others," Bain said. "They stepped one player, but then Jones was the MVP."

Jones finished the game with 17 while freshman centre John Christermann added 14 and Ron -Kukavicic 10.

At the other end, Hermanutz led the Yeomen with 22 points, while Brian Hegan was noted for his scoring ability, netted 14. Twelve of those points came in the final half and that was a big factor in keeping Windsor in the game through that period. Rou- mor had it Benny had hit for 11 points -

The big story from Windsor's standpoint had to be the loss of Stan Korosec early in the second half with his fifth foul. Korosec left the game with 2:48 remaining and York up 66-56. From that point the Yeomen played even with the Yeomen but without the big man the outcome was not in question.

"I was concerned about Windsor's muscle," Bain said. "Korosec, Ritchie and Molyneux. We wanted to play some because we didn't feel they had great outside shooters, but we started the game man-to-man and it worked so well we stayed to it."

"I was surprised that they played man-to-man," Grabowski said. "We were getting the shots, but when you can't hit 15-footers, you know you're having a cold night. I think the players know they can play better."

"We've always said you have to have a little luck in any game and tonight we didn't have it. But I'll say this - the guys never gave up. They were driving the ball for 10 seconds left and you can't fault a team that does that."

Korosec named to CIAU All-Star squad

At the CIAU Tournament banquet Wednesday night in Waterloo, it was announced that Lancer centre Stan Korosec has been named to the CIAU All Canadian Basketball - Team. Korosec, a third year business student (6'10", 220 lbs.) graduated from Brennan High School. This year, he averaged 19.9 points a game, along with 14.7 rebounds.

Joining Korosec with first team honours were David Coulthard of York, Ted Upshaw of Acadia, Belalmeh Degue of the University of Winnipeg and Karl Tillerman of the University of Calgary.

Coulthard was also named the recipient of the Mike Mouser Memorial Award as the nation's outstanding basketball player. Chosen to the second team were Gerry Abernathy of Brandon, Tom Heslip of Guelph, Mark Brodie and Varouj Goushiann of St. Francis Xavier, and Terry Hamps of Acadia.

Ian MacMillan, head coach of the Acadia Axemen, was named Coach of the Year.
Andy Buckstein wins gold at Toronto indoor meet

The University of Windsor track team picked up one gold medal, one silver and three bronze at the OUA/OOWIA indoor track and field championships last weekend at the University of Toronto.

The gold medal was won by Andy Buckstein in the 600 metres with a time of 1:22.0. Buckstein started on the inside, but had the lead by the time the stagger was made up and held it for the rest of the race. Teammate Henry Eldracher was right behind him until the final 100 metres, but faded to seventh place in 1:23.2. ‘Faded’ is perhaps the wrong word considering the 1.2 second difference in the times. “Henry ran a crackerjack race,” head coach Dr. Michael Salter said.

Buckstein also won a bronze in the 300 metres, but said, “The gold in the 600 was really what I wanted. The 300 was just the icing on the cake.”

The gold in the 600 was really great to see,” Dr. Salter said. “It was just less than two hours before the 3000 and I wanted to concentrate on that.”

Shortly after the 3000, Buckstein ran the 400 metres in the first leg of a women’s sprint medley relay along with Pauline Bondy, Veronica Porekyz and Kathy Ricica (800 metres). The team finished sixth in a time of 4:48.9.

It seems ironic that Buckstein, a long-distance specialist, should run the 400 metres in her final race for the University. “What a way to go out,” she said. Winning the team’s other two medals were short sprints Jenny Pace with an 11.67 metre toss, and Steve Thatcher with a personal best of 13.35 metres. It was the last university competition for both athletes.

“I think it was great to see Steve get a bronze in both the outdoor and indoor championships, particularly in his last year,” Dr. Salter said. “It’s great news recognition than he ever gets. He’s a fine athlete.”

Two other sprints putters competed for the University. Wyatt Clark finished seventh in the men’s, throwing 12.14 and Sandy Carson threw 9.39 metres in the women’s event for 12th place. The only Windsor entries in the swimming events ended in Toronto. The national championship was won by the host University of Toronto who won both the men’s and women’s titles. The University of Calgary finished second in both categories.

As proof of the meet’s quickness, 21 CIAU records and two Canadian records were broken. That was due in part to the presence of eight Olympic swimmers at the meet including such names as Graham Smith, Dan Thompson and Debbie Armstead.

Gill Stevens and Rob Michel, both Windsor, finished in the 100 metre butterfly in a blanket finish of three girls all within nine-hundredths of a second. Stevens needed a swim-off with Joan Jardin of Queen’s to enter the final and Stevens and her coach agreed that she had not been required to swim the final if she had finished in the final might have been higher. Armstead won the event and destroyed the old record by four seconds.

Michell’s best performance came in the 200 metre breaststoke where he finished fourth, a performance that might have made the difference in this race as only seven tenths of a second separated him from the bronze medal.

After making the turn at the fourteen-meter mark in sixth place, Michel fought himself back into contention where he was touch-and-touch by a former Olympian and two CASA nationals.

Student takeover at Trent

by Laurie Bergoin
with Ed McMahon and CUP

For the past nine days (as of this writing on Wednesday), a group of students composed of elected student council representatives and "concerned" others, calling themselves SGS (Save Our School) Trent, have occupied the executive offices of Trent University in Peterborough.

They are protesting the imposition of differential fees for foreign students, and an increase in tuition, athletic and residence fees.

Jim English, the director of Information at Trent, said, "The university financial position is considerably difficult. Differential fees, had they been imposed earlier, would have made the deficit $520,000 less. The inaction could not be put off any longer."

Paul Knight, a student representative on the Board of Governors, explained, "What we are protesting is not the actual decision to impose differential fees, and athletic, residence and tuition fees hikes. What we are protesting is the way in which the decision was made."

There was a three-hour, open board meeting Friday, March 6, during which more than 600 students (approximately one-third of Trent's student population) attended to air their concerns.

The board met afterwards in closed session and made the decision.

Paul Merriam, one of the students occupying the offices, said in a phone interview Wednesday the vote was made and passed in a half-hour and that there was "no or little discussion."

"The decision was made without any consideration of the discussion with the students," said Knight. "We consider this to be a gross miscarriage of the betrayal to accepted democratic procedures of this university."

English said the board heard a pretty full argument for three hours. After the initial vote, which was 10-8 for the increase, the student representatives left. The president of the university, Donald Theall made a motion to reconsider the vote and there was another hour of debate. The final vote was 10-7 for the increase.

The students, who began their occupation March 9 at approximately 10:30 a.m., say they will not leave until a significant number of their demands are met. Thirteen students began the occupation March 9, but two have left since (one to meet some "community obligations", the other after becoming ill). Merriam is hopeful: "I think we will be successful because we're not leaving until they [our demands] are met." Some of the demands are more student representation on the Board of Governors; differential fees to be rescinded; fee calculation meetings to be opened and the board to consider the Senate view in fee structure. Also included was the resignation of the chairperson, Erika Cline.

English said "Some of these demands simply can't be met. They are related to decisions made by people who are not part of the university [the provincial government]. But others are surely being discussed."

On these discussions, English could not comment. Two members of the faculty, Robert Carter and Ian McEachern, who have been chosen as community representatives by both the students and administrators, have not released any news of the discussions.

"English was sure nothing will be made public until something of importance has been decided," said Knight. "But when asked why the administrators had not called the police and had the students thrown out immediately, English replied that would have solved nothing and it would have irritated the student body more. One wishes they weren't there, but one can see their point of view," he said.

Merriam added that the students have been guaranteed "immunity from legal prosecution" for the takeover.

Of the Presidential candidates, Boyer polled 383 votes for 19.8% of the votes. Carlson polled 198 for 11.7%, Hoy 266 for 18.4%, and Shaban 699 for 48.3%. The Vice-Presidential candidates tallied as follows: Booth 274 for 20.0%, Mill 463 for 33.7%, Pizzio 295 for 21.5%, and Stipic 343 for 24.9%.

New Student Senators (detailed vote totals next week) are: Lori Taylor, William Koop, and John Riopoulos, with Howard Whitaker following closely behind. Allison Pawler trounced Moshe Cohen for the position of Social Work representative on Council.

And, in a very close battle, Michael O'Neill and Pierre Burke are projected at this time to be the new Social Science Society Reps.

Shaban, who has held the post of SAC Vice-President for the past two years, won a landslide decision, with 699 votes to his nearest opponent's 283 when The Lance went to press.

Shaban's Vice-President will be former Lance columnist John Mill, who was ahead with 463 votes to his nearest opponent's 141.

SHABAN TO HEAD SAC

by K.P. Chant and Ed McMahon

With 73.08% of the vote in (11 of 12 polls), The Lance predicted at 8:45 last night that our next Student Administrative Council President and Vice-President will be Jim Shaban and John Mill, respectively.

Shaban, who has held the post of SAC Vice-President for the past two years, won a landslide decision, with 699 votes to his nearest opponent's 283 when The Lance went to press.

Shaban's Vice-President will be former Lance columnist John Mill, who was ahead with 463 votes to his nearest opponent's 141.

Last fall, students showed their support for seeing their radio station, CJAM, go FM. Now that the station is pushing ahead with its FM licence application, station manager Grant Gellinas wants to start renovating.

The total renovation costs are expected to be in the neighbour- hood of $100,000.

These physical changes include extending CJAM office space six feet into SAC's pub and, additionally, taking the vending machine area outside the pub.

This space, said Gellinas, is an absolute necessity. "The present area is too small and the equipment is outdated, insufficient, and obsolete," he said.

The renovations will also consist of installing transmitters, a stereo generator, monitors, and more.

The problem is whether the Broadcast Committee of the Board of Governors will give CJAM what it needs. Since the initial proposal of $100,000 was refused by the committee, Gellinas has made revisions and has now asked for approximately $60,000.

The remaining $40,000 will, perhaps, have to be solicited by SEE "NEW EQUIPMENT", PAGE 1.

The Board of Governors is still waiting for a sign from God before it makes any move to open its meetings.

What is standing between it and the rest of the interested university are words. The board is still waiting for some good old fashioned divine inspiration before it etches the words into stone.

Professor John Whiteside, secretary to the Board of Governors who will be wording the final by-law, met with the executive committee of the Board of Governors on March 17 to "identify a series of questions for the consideration of the executive." The result of that meeting will be another executive meeting on March 30 for a further discussion of wording.

The executive meeting last Tuesday analysed the proposals that have already been made for inclusion in the by-law — proposals such as which topics should remain confidential to the board and who should and should not be allowed to sit in on the meetings. The arrangement of the questions were also mulled over.

After the next executive meeting, the entire board will meet the day after to look at the by-law. This does not mean it will pass it. If there are any objections to it or if the executive committee still hasn’t found the right wording for it, the by-law will be reworded and submitted to the board once more at the next regular board meeting which will be probably after the summer break in April.

Perhaps the board is hoping we will all have forgotten about this silly notion of open board meetings by the time we return next September. Or perhaps it is delaying so it can open its meetings after everyone has left for the summer so that it can discuss tuition increases when no one is around.

Only the board (and "The Shadow") knows.

Don’t hold your breath just get a good place in line

If you have been waiting for your tax and education deduction forms - T2202's - to come to you in the mail, you can stop waiting. As a result of administrative computer and processing difficulties, the forms which were supposed to be mailed to you in the first week of March were not picked up and will be mailed out. (Ed. Note: If you weren’t aware of this, please don’t blame us - no one in the Finance Office thought to call this newspaper and say it was time to get the forms to you. We just found out about it - at a SAC meeting, of all places - last week after we had gone to press.)

According to Director of Finance John Bill, "This is only a temporary practice to make for better and faster service, since we are already late."

He added there was no additional expense involved. "The cost to us is the same - either we mail them or pay students to hand them out."

the Student Media Corporation (which operates CJAM and publishes The Lance) from community corporate donations. It may be difficult to raise money from this sector, however, because of the recent and heavy corporate donations to the new gym fund.

Reverend Canon Matthewman, chairman of the BoG Broadcast Committee, refused to make any comment on the proposal. He would not say how much the committee would be willing to give, nor would he say how he felt about the situation.

"This amount is the barest minimum," said Gelinas. "Our plan is to establish CJAM as an outright, high quality radio station in terms of broadcast sound and organisation. But to do this, we need good facilities and good equipment." He foresees an operating budget of $80,000 a year to provide this type of performance.

Gelinas thinks the FM conversion will be of great benefit to the university. He says it would develop good public relations between the university and the community.

"Here the opportunity arises for the university to inform the public of its vast resources and to maintain its presence within the community," Gelinas declared. "It would also act as a drawing card to bring broadcast students to the university, knowing they could get the professional, practical experience of the medium here."

Though it has not been authorized for the purpose, perhaps the $10,000 a month brought in by the pinball machines in the Centre, presently going to the administration's coffers, could be used towards CJAM's FM conversion costs, Gelinas suggested.

If the necessary money is raised quickly, Gelinas said renovations could start as early as this summer and CJAM-FM could be on the air next January.
Council rains lots of money on the deserving

by R.P. Chant

At its meeting on Thursday, March 12, a generous Students' Administrative Council (SAC) decided, with little debate, to spend approximately $9,000 on campus projects and an additional 17 cents on a stamp for the Prime Minister.
The $9,000 consists of the proceeds from a transfer camera for the Lance, a $1,500 portable wineland-beer cooler for the Arthur, $1,000 for Liquor Services, and a $1,500 disbursement to set up the Arthur Student Radio.
The camera for the Lance is a large, graphic arts processing machine which will make the newspaper essentially self-sufficient physically, except for printing (two million dollar printers are currently out of council's range). Per issue costs will be greatly reduced as a result of the machine and the camera can also be used for SAC brochures and booklets and advertising.
The wine-and-beer cooler for SAC Liquor Services will eliminate the necessity of having a garage car at functions taking place outside the pub.
The Simonds Memorial Bursary is named after the former director of SAC's Central Admissions, who died of cancer last Labour Day weekend shortly after his retirement from the SAC position.

SAC, however, would then become "less of a joke"; a body with no representative strength and no right to demand anything of the administration of the university.

SAC members were particularly apt to comment that their own events and otherwise spend on their members. This money comes from student fees which the university administration collects when tuition is paid. This money is then turned over to SAC to disburse, once the administration has figured out how many students are enrolled in each faculty and, hence, in each society.

The problem is that the administration is slow. It has not yet determined the number of people enrolled in each faculty and, so, the societies have not received the full funding to which they are entitled.

"The SAC committee is charged with examining the problems (possibly to come up with some kind of a formula to establish a 'gradual funding' system) and contacting the administration with regard to the problem and any proposed solutions," the other committee, to be headed by member Randy Zdra, is to come up with a method of obtaining student opinion on SAC functions. Such surveying would, supposedly, take place every few years, if not every few years (possibly consonant with professional evaluations by students).

Other SAC News. A motion which would have SAC members censured or expelled for poor attendance at SAC meetings was postponed until it could be discussed by the council's Board of Directors... A motion which would have made SAC responsible for poster distribution on campus was soundly defeated. Although many members agreed there were too many posters in too many places, the final decision was that it was not SAC's job to control the situation, but the administration's since the latter had passed poster-by-laws last year.

But he's sure got heart

Now that we have a SAC presidency in "transition", it is perhaps appropriate to evaluate the performance of the outgoing in-cumbent, David Simmons. Fortunately, an incident took place at the SAC meeting this week which served, for me at least, to put his whole year in a nutshell.

As Simmons wound down, the hands popped up to reply. Several members simply wished to point out Simmons' money on his running of the meeting, but a few wanted to counter-attack a few points of Simonds specific remarks.

Jay Smith, a Business rep, explained to Simonds and council that the Commerce Club was having its elections before SAC's and that many of the people running for the former might run for council if they had lost the club elections. Thus, the lack of political interest for which Simonds criticized the council was more a problem of election-date scheduling.

A member from another faculty then pointed out that the council representatives from their area were elected during student elections and that Simonds should chair the council.

And then it got dirty. A member topped the evening off by re-presenting Simonds' inferences about the members' performances: either that she felt one way to get people more interested in SAC (even the present members) was to "reduce the number of temper tantrums at the head of the table".

Simonds, sitting there as his custom, had earlier refused to chair a SAC committee, apparently because Charney had cut him off in mid-comment on the issue under discussion.

All of the foregoing describes Simonds' basic method of operation in his office of SAC president this year: he very often, in his zeal to attack, leaps into an argumentative position before he has looked at all the facts. The validity of many of his concerns are lost in his bombastic and adversarial overstatement; resulting in the alienation of many people with whom he has to work to realize solutions to student problems.

At the same time, the SAC meeting incident points out Simonds' great strike of "heart". David genuinely cares about the plight of students and wants SAC to efficiently and energetically deal with the problems which face its constituents.

Thus, Simonds' sticking of his foot in his mouth does not help his cause, but one can't help but admire the verve with which he jabs it in.

Professor's death saddens university community

by Ed McMahon and John Rizopoulos

The university community was made a bit poorer this past weekend by the passing away of Dr. Stanley James Price, a professor with the university's Chemistry Department. Dr. Price, who turned 50 last week, died of a heart attack last Friday, March 13.

Dr. Price received his BSc in 1953, and his MSc in 1955, both from the University of British Columbia. He then proceeded to the University of Edinburgh where he received his PhD in 1958. From 1958 to 1959, he worked with the National Research Council of Canada and came to the University of Windsor in 1959 as an assistant professor. He became a full professor in 1968.

Dr. Price was a physical and inorganic chemist by training. Recently, he had been involved in a program with local high schools which involved the testing of ditto machines for levels of methanol, which has been theoretically linked to some health problems.

According to his friends in the Chemistry and Engineering departments, Dr. Price had a remarkably good, warm relationship with his graduate students.

Dr. Price had been working with the air quality group at the University of Windsor as a specialist in gas sampling. The Air Quality Team is part of the Industrial Research Team of the university.

According to Dr. A. Gnyp, head of the Chemical Engineering department at the university, Price was a specialist in gas chromatography, the identification of components in a gas sample by the scrutinizing of their spectral patterns. "He could interpret data like few other people could," Gnyp said.

"He was so interested in the applications of Chemistry that he took several Chemical Engineering classes," Gnyp went on. "He was a true friend and is going to be missed not only for his expertise but also for his philosophy of life," Gnyp said.

Another member of the team, Dr. C. St. Pierre, also spoke highly of Price. "He had developed a special expertise in analyzing gaseous components," said St. Pierre. "He once worked an extra week and a half to identify a gas that other team members had given up on."

St. Pierre said Price was "irreplaceable in his field."

The Lance joins the entire university community lamenting the death of Dr. Price, who, according to one secretary in the Chemistry department, "...was a colleague, a friend, and a very friendly individual. And that's something we shall all miss very much.”

"Pass the beans, pardner"

by Wendy Coomber

Friday the 13th was a lucky day for everyone involved in the last Special Student Services dinner... well, "everyone," that is, everyone except the pig whose head ended up in the middle of the buffet table.

The theme was western, bundles of hay and saddles placed appropriately aboutVanier cafeteria, with strolling cowboy minstrels fiddling around the tables before the meal. Luckily for everyone concerned, it didn't smell like the ranch.

The pig's head was delicately in the midst of a flamboyant feast, tastefully decorated with two olives smashed into its eye sockets and an apple jammed into its mouth. Slices of ham gracefully surrounded it on a platter of pensive parsley. Stu on its own.

This "Evening at the Chuck Wagon" was the fourth in the line of special Student Services dinners. Ron Gleiser, Manager of Residence and Food Services, said the people they polled for these themes thought a western night would be nice. At least it gave Dave McMurray, Director of Residence and Food Services, and Ken Long, Dean of Students, a chance to break in their new cowboy hats.

Gleiser noted that the turnout at last Friday's supper was much better than the time before, the count tallying up to 1,500 greedy little fingers this time.

The manager said the reason for the suppers was that, "Last year we felt that a lot of kids were going off campus on Friday nights", so Student Services thought it would be a good idea to create these special dinners at cost price. Students were bound to be eating a full course meal on Fridays anyway, so these dinners would give them that and allow time afterward to go out and do whatever they wanted to.
How to ride a bike and think at the same time

by Wendy Coomber

Scenario: Picture a poor tired student loaded down with books hurrying to school early in the morning on her bicycle. Without too much thought of the traffic, she cycles along a “through” street but notices a car stopped at a stop sign. She wonders, will he wait until I’ve gotten past?

The driver sits behind the wheel staring back at her for a couple of minutes but decides, as the bicycle comes within four feet of the stop sign, yes, he does have time to pull out before he will run into the bicycle. So he does. The cautious bicyclist averts a few broken limbs because she’s run into this type of jerk so many times before she’s ready for it.

Anyone who rides a bicycle knows what I am talking about. There seems to be an inborn hatred in many car drivers for anything on two wheels, motorcycles included. If it doesn’t make a lot of noise, spew out blue smoke from behind, leave rubber tracks on the road, et cetera, it isn’t worth a second thought to the motorist.

Now, I’m not anti-automobile . . . I have a driver’s licence and I enjoy driving a car once in a while when I can’t use my bike. I am merely against all the stupid little molecule-minded morons who should not have a driver’s licence in the first place, who cannot live knowing there is someone on a bicycle—a clean, non-polluting, silent, health inducing, self-entertaining bicycle—on the same road as they.

Some drivers actually find it funny, you know, to force bicyclists into potholes at the side of the road, cutting them off while they are turning on to another road, honking their horns and screaming at them while in the midst of traffic, opening the doors of their parked cars while the bicycle has no clearance for it . . . the list is endless.

No doubt most of these people spend endless hours plotting and planning these tricky little manoeuvres so when they go cruising on Friday nights with the gang, or trucking on into the ol’ law firm on Monday afternoon with the boss, they will have something new with which to amuse and abuse their friends. How clever of them. How serene humanity.

So how do you, as a bicyclist, retaliate? You can throw your bike in front of the measly motormobile— but that would prove somewhat hard on the bike. You can throw thumbtacks in front of their tires or eggs on their windshield but they’d probably lose control of the car and run into you anyway. ’Tis a conundrum, to be sure.

Well, give Chrysler’s a year or two, along with the eradication of foreign car sales in this country, and add to that the rising price of gas and repair costs and automobiles might be a thing of the past before 1983. Then who will have the last laugh, eh? We can all live in hope.

It won’t be the turkey in his Toyota or the dummy in her Datsun.

Give me liberty to ride my bike anywhere because I’m certainly not taking death. And I’m not taking any abuse from cars anymore so move over the next time you see a little gold CCM or you just might have to deal with a crazed cyclist.
This is the time of year when several things seem to piece all at once. Money is at all time low, mid-terms and term papers fall due, and we all need the break we have been need of at all times.

Now, to top it all off, the Registrar’s and Cashier’s/Finance Offices have joined in a dastardly plot to further mess up our already inaccurate lives. In any course you haven’t heard yet (and you may not have, the publicity for the event was no hell), the university administration has, collectively, not to mail out your T-2022, which is otherwise known as that form on which you claim your university tuition and other expenses for your income tax rebate.

Full-time students this year are granted up to nine hours some days to pick up their receipts in the Extension Student’s Lounges at the University Centre. Part-time students must take time off from whatever else they are doing to try and get theirs to the university within those hours to pick them up. Presumably, if they had the time and the inclination to travel to the university during the day on most days of the week, they would be fully satisfied. That, however, and although full-time students may have it rough, part-time students are getting the short end of a stick.

There also seem to be some discrepancies as to where receipts are being issued. Some students in the Centre, some are at the Cashier’s Office. Nobody seems to know exactly whose receipts are where, and there is no indication to the individual that is standing in line for up to half an hour that the receipts for which they wait may even be at the end of the line in which they stand.

Another problem seems to be that no one knows whether you can get a receipt for 1980 or if you have not, that at the end of all of this academic year’s tuition. This seems to be a matter of individual integrity -- with some cashiers you get it, with some you don’t. Accord- ing to the District Taxation Office’s (Revenue Canada) Congriss, the federal government “recommends” a date three months later than February 28, 1981 to issue the 1980 forms. The actual legislated date is March 31, by which time T-2022’s in the whole world have to be handed out. One is left to wonder if the university could hold one’s form if one had not paid one’s tuition for January 1981-April 81, but only until March.

Are universities providing the cure?: Suzuki

From the University of Victoria Market

What’s the difference between a hospital and a university? One tries to cure illness, the other ignorance.

University students go from class to class, often not having enough time to do the work of university and learn only to find out which is more worthless, to wit, the individual who is standing up and being counted. The principle of democracy is the right of those who don’t have their own minds, to stand up and be counted. The right of those who don’t know the difference between a bylaw and a bi-valve, of choice, but also, and more important, it is the burden of choice - the responsibility of standing up and being counted. The Lancet, Vol. LIII, No. 23, March 20, 1981, Page Six

Dear Editor:

I feel I must correct Rosemary A. Breschuk on a number of points she has put forth in "Foreign Students' plight not appreciated" (Lance, Vol. LIII, No. 23, March 13, 1981).

As a former member of the Canada Immigration Commission and a third year law student who hopes to specialize in the immigration law field, I find her editorial incorrect, misleading, and liable to cause some foreign students to take a course of action not conducive to their well-being or the immigration authorities.

Correct knowledge leads to correct action, so let's correct Rosemary. First, "a visitor" on a "student authorization" is not liable for "immediate deportation".

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the Nursing Society of the University of Windsor, I would like to extend a "thank you" to all persons who participated in the recent blood donor clinic.

The clinic was most successful with 290 units of blood obtained. A total of 316 people attended the clinic with 72 first time donors.

The School of Dramatic Art was awarded the "Vel coronal Plaque after tying with the School of Nursing. Both Schools had 17.7 percent of their Killers donating blood.

Laurein Hall won the telling contest with 9.74 percent of its members donating blood.

Special thanks are extended to Sherry Snider, chief pacemaker ferret, and Jean Blythe, assistant fillip. Over 400 pancakes were enjoyed by donors and attenders.

I would like to express my appreciation to CJAM for providing music and parking and to The Lance for its advertising and coverage.

A missed friend

Dear Editor:

A week ago today, our class lost a great friend.

Our very special classmate, Dr. Jim Price, passed away very suddenly last Friday, March 13, 1981.

Jim, a faculty member in the Department of Chemistry, was a great and irreplaceable contributor in the Department of Chemical Engineering, and a friendly classmate in Chem. Eng. 301 will be remembered by all of us.

Our thoughts and sympathies go to his family, to the Department of Chemistry, and to his friends in the Chemistry Building at the University of Windsor.

John Ratinopoulos, Waaf A. Khan, for Chemical Engineering, Class of 82.

Dear Editor:

The Social Science Society was formed in January following a referendum in November. Since then, I have been involved with the society since its beginning as a representative. Therefore, I feel it is important to get your views if you wish to do your own research, the Act and Regulations are public, as is the Commission's Immigration Manuals at Canada Immig.

Dean Ianni of Law spills everything to the press

by Peter Hrasto

Two weeks ago, Law Faculty Council approved the renewal of Dean Ross Ianni's tenure as Dean of the Faculty of Law.

A graduate in Economics and Commerce from this university, Ianni went to receive his LL.B. from Osgoode Hall in 1961. He was subsequently called to the Ontario Bar in 1963.

A well travelled scholar, Dean Ianni holds degrees and diplomas from the Italian universities of Perugia and Bologna, the University of Paris, and the London School of Economics.

The Lance spoke with Dean Ianni about his decision to remain at the helm of Law Faculty administration, innovations in legal education and services, and some startling revelations about the state of the legal profession today.

Lance: You were planning a sabbatical abroad with a subsequent return to your role as full professor. What made you change your mind?

Dean Ianni: In the initial stages, I had indicated to the president of the university that I was looking forward to a return to teaching and scholarship. I was anxious to get back to some research that had been delayed for a long period of time because of my involvement in administration.

However, after consulting with some of my colleagues and after taking a look at the progress we have made in the last four years, it was my view that perhaps it was best that we carry on from our position of strength and are important in terms of legal education in Canada.

Lance: What has delayed your return to teaching and scholarship?

Dean Ianni: My involvement in the preMediation project, which involved settling disputes in the legal profession. I was encouraged by the kinds of progress that Windsor has made as a young faculty of law. In fact, it is the youngest of the six faculties in Ontario. One is impressed by the unique performance of the faculty in the special projects like Prepaid Legal Services, our Clinical Law Program and our Access to Justice Yearbook.

Finally, we have made great inroads with our Community Legal Aid Program, the number of student projects where our students are involved such as the Justice program last summer, the production of a number of video tapes as public information, and the co-operative program with the CRC called The Legal Factor.

All of these things give the Windsor Law Faculty a very high profile as being innovative and sensitive to the needs of the legal system. It gives our students an opportunity to see whether or not people have the kinds of information they need about the system for it to be accessible to them. It helps us examine whether or not we are fulfilling our role as the conscience of the profession, whether or not we are fulfilling our role as the analytical critics of the legal system as it operates in everyday life.

Lance: This program and initiatives the result of group effort or are there some standouts in the crowd who have been the "prime movers" in a progressive response to fulfilling needs in the system of legal practice and education?

Dean Ianni: Now, let me make a disclaimer here. I wouldn't want anyone to think that these things have come about because I'm here or because I wouldn't be here. These things have come about because the faculty as a unit -- as a collegial body -- has decided in its wisdom to cooperate and mount these projects. Without the efforts of the entire faculty -- their publishing efforts as well as their close involvement with students -- there would be no where we are today. I would like to continue my association with this Law Faculty because we are moving in the right direction and, with that kind of co-operation, one can't help but be encouraged by prospects for the future.

Lance: Recently, officers of the Upper Canada Law Society, the body that allows persons the privilege of practicing law in Ontario, have criticized the law faculties for graduating too many lawyers. How true are those allegations?

Dean Ianni: The statements by the Treasurer of the Upper Canada Law Society were ill-advised and unduly critical.

In the first instance, he talks about there being too many lawyers. I would like to see a demographic study of the number of lawyers who live in the city of Windsor and where they are located. Also, this study should be broken down to identify their areas of preferred practice.

One of such a study would be to see if we are able to give our students a near accurate picture of where the opportunities are in the conventional areas of the law.

Lance: Have you made any inroads in acquiring such a study?

Dean Ianni: We had asked the Upper Canada Law Society for such a study six years ago (in conjunction with the Ontario Law Deans) but we have been unsuccessful. Still, we do have some statistics having to do with the number of lawyers, the kinds of law practiced, and the ratio of lawyers to citizens in need, then the statements made by the Upper Canada Law Society are ill-advised.

I realize that if you want to practice corporate commercial law within a half-mile radius of Queen and Bay streets in Toronto, firms are just not hiring. It should not be made apparent that the 13,000 lawyers in the province, nearly half of them are located in that half-mile radius.

Students returning to Toronto are frustrated by the disproportionate number of lawyers so compacted in one area. Rather than allowing them to be frustrated, information should be made available as to where the opportunities are so that they might take advantage of them.

Lance: It is not true that both the Law Society and the Law School have input in the "numbers game" as you both have divided jurisdiction over the education of the law students?

Dean Ianni: Yes.

The law schools have three years, approximately 90 weeks, to give students a theoretical and instructional background in the law in all of its aspects.

The second part of their education is given to the Law Society. They have complete control over the实习ing period.

If the Law Society was terribly concerned with what was happening in the profession, I suggest that they first look at the articling period. It hasn't changed since the days in which I articled. There are little matters which are given by the Law Society. Your articling experience is open to chance. Some students will get very good experience which others will get very poor articles.

Lance: How valuable is the Bar Admission course?

Dean Ianni: The Bar Admissions course is a valuable course. But not necessarily the same experience, all who have been changed over the years. A number of suggestions have been made, among them that students write their examinations at their leisure within a given time period. This is a positive, progressive suggestion but the Law Society has chosen to do nothing.

You must appreciate the fact that it is the Law Society that accredits people to be barristers, solicitors and notaries public in this province. Therefore, it seems strange to have the Treasurer of the Upper Canada Law Society make allegations that there are too many lawyers when it is his institution that is specifically given the role by the province to regulate the practice of law. So, in effect, what he has been saying that is the Law Society itself has been unsuccessful in qualifying people for the bar.

Lance: Do you see any closer involvement for yourself with the Upper Canada Law Society in the near future?

Ianni: As the Committee of Law Deans, we have only been hearing a bumbling in the distance. Unfortunately, we do not have any direct input in the decisions of the Law Society. There is no representation of the Ontario or any university level law schools, unlike other jurisdictions in Canada such as Alberta and British Columbia.

The Ontario Law Deans lose some of the friction that appears to be developing.

Ianni: To me, it is important that the Law Society consider our input because it seems strange for us to read statements in the press about the status of the Law Schools without any prior discussions with us. We have made a number of offers to the Law Society, asking them for a closer liaison. We are prepared to meet there on almost every occasion we think is justified, but I believe it is the responsibility of the Law Society to explore the alternative areas of serving the public.

Lance: Before the 1950's, the study of law remained outside the university framework in this country. How significant is it to have a professional school as part of the overall university system?

Ianni: I don't want to make self-serving statements, but we see the Law Faculty as having a crucial and pivotal role in the institution. Given the need for lawyers to explore the alternative areas of serving the public, we find that a professional school is a natural way to do this. We believe that the legal needs of society are not being met at the other end when these legal matters are forced in court battles which are extremely expensive.

Lance: I don't think everyone will work with Native Canadians or a wide enough base so that they can think of other curriculum and design a course plan which will give them the proper training. We suggest to them that they look very carefully at their curriculum and design a course plan which will give them the proper training.

Ianni: We have been discussing the possibility with the Ontario Law Deans of setting up a program to allow for matters economic, sociological and psychological.

Lance: What is the reason for the recent introduction of interdisciplinary programs in the Law Faculty curriculum?

Ianni: We believe that the problem of legal education needs to be addressed by the demand that society has placed on the justice system.

Lance: The people who will be best prepared to meet the demands of the changing society are those who are able to appreciate other cultures, other civilizations, other legal systems. The broader their background is, the more accurate their opinions and analysis. Thus, they are more likely to make a more meaningful contribution to society. And that's the name of the game.

Ianni: We hope to institute the Law and Social Work Program. The people who will be best prepared to meet the demands of the changing society are those who are able to appreciate other cultures, other civilizations, other legal systems. The broader their background is, the more accurate their opinions and analysis. They are more likely to make a more meaningful contribution to society. And that's the name of the game.

Lance: Would such input be the Ontario Law Deans think that this is the case?

Ianni: I don't want to make self-serving statements, but we see the Law Faculty as having a crucial and pivotal role in the institution. Given the need for lawyers to explore the alternative areas of serving the public, we find that a professional school is a natural way to do this. Hair Today, Gone Tomorrow

They arrived tired, unmade and fresh from a long weekend in Waterloo, and left looking like the new spring collection for '81.

This was the scene at Command Performance this past Sunday afternoon. The seven University of Windsor cheerleaders, their choreographer and coordinator were sans make-up, had their hair hanging and were more than ready for their new coiffures and a little facial art.

The Command Performance shop is a modern and spacious room, and is perhaps indicative of the professional and efficient work done there. The first step for the women was to decide on a style and put limitations on the amount of hair they would lose. Once this was done, the women were taken to the back of the shop, and then they were ushered to their respective mirrors.

The whole idea of the day was to show the styles we will be seeing and perhaps wearing this summer. The emphasis is on height and volume; a type of high, upswept concept. The whole trend is a move back to the styles of the 1940's, and perhaps indicative of the new spring collection of the professional and efficient hand-work of the hairstylists.

The afternoon was long, but the effects were pleasing and congratulations are due to the hand-work of the hairstylists.

A little face colour was used - not as a blush, but rather to show the natural, but hidden skin colours. This was brushed on to the chin and neck, along with the cheeks. A light coating of dusting powder took the shine away from the right areas and left a glow around the rest of the face. A highlighter brought out each woman's own particular good points and downplayed the bad ones.

Although all of the women admitted to being "slightly nervous" at the beginning of the day, they all seemed to be pleased with the results. The next step was the make-over, and Isabel Lancucki of The Beauty Spot explained the steps of the make-up application, as she expertly applied the tools of hair trade to each woman. She began the process with texturizing lotion and followed it with a light moisturizing cream, basing the amount on the skin type of each woman, and treated

Mary's hair was layered, and cut short on top and longer in the front and back to give the illusion of length. It was a well-shaped look, and would be easy to care for. Asked her opinion of it, she said, "anything would be better than before". Fanny's hair was only trimmed and then styled with a small twist on the side of the head. After this, they used a crimping iron to give her hair a temporary ripple effect.

A foundation was then applied very sparingly, because, as she explained, most women over-base their make-up. A little face colour was used, an extra colour by way of eye-shadows, eyeliner and mascara was used to shape and contour the eyes. The lipstick was the finishing touch.

The make-up she applied was for day-time wear and she said might called for make-up to be a "little heavier and a little shinier." She did an excellent job on each woman, matching the make-up to the mood created by the hair style, producing different looks. From the sophisticated, rather "wicked" look of Silver, to the elegant appearance of Mary, and the pert sassy countenance of Tish,

The afternoon was long, but the effects were pleasing and congratulations are due to the hand-work of the hairstylists.

Although all of the women admitted to being "slightly nervous" at the beginning of the day, they all seemed to be pleased with the results. The next step was the make-over, and Isabel Lancucki of The Beauty Spot explained the steps of the make-up application, as she expertly applied the tools of hair trade to each woman. She began the process with texturizing lotion and followed it with a light moisturizing cream, basing the amount on the skin type of each woman, and treated

Mary's hair was layered, and cut short on top and longer in the front and back to give the illusion of length. It was a well-shaped look, and would be easy to care for. Asked her opinion of it, she said, "anything would be better than before". Fanny's hair was only trimmed and then styled with a small twist on the side of the head. After this, they used a crimping iron to give her hair a temporary ripple effect.

A foundation was then applied very sparingly, because, as she explained, most women over-base their make-up. A little face colour was used, an extra colour by way of eye-shadows, eyeliner and mascara was used to shape and contour the eyes. The lipstick was the finishing touch.

The make-up she applied was for day-time wear and she said might called for make-up to be a "little heavier and a little shinier." She did an excellent job on each woman, matching the make-up to the mood created by the hair style, producing different looks. Return to the fifties: Brylcream and donuts

by Peter Haggert

Remember high school life in the fifties? I don’t – I wasn’t even born yet. Nevertheless, Dick ’n The Donuts try to recreate the scene for all of us nonentities this week in SAC’s pub. If they’re successful, it could also be the start of some very interesting encounters of the third kind.

By the way, the band is now taking applications for their warm up group tentatively to be titled Billy and the Bagels.

THE CINEMA CRITIC

by Rosemarie Comisso

When was the last time you went to the show and half the audience was filled with people who were the same age as your mom and dad? Incongruous as it may seem, Back Roads is attracting the 40 and over crowd in increasing numbers.

The movie’s appeal may be attributed to its resemblance to movies which were made ‘way back when’ –Back Roads maintains a delightful ‘romantic comedy’ formula. Sally Field plays Amy Post, a neat-and-young streethawker whose career is intermittently interrupted by a former ‘john’ of hers, Elmor Pratt (Tommy Lee Jones).

Unlikely as it may seem, Amy and Elmor begrudgingly team up together on a tumultuous trip across the ‘back roads’ of America. Although the Donuts would love to see their ‘60s rock and roll colleagues on the same stage, they have been a cinematic couple for years.

Both the band and the film may very well signify the end of an era (the macho and feminist movies) and the beginning of new ones (people movies). It could also be the start of some very beautiful relationships on screen.

Cinema complex comes to Windsor

by Bill Buchanan

A 12-theatre Cineplex is scheduled to open in Windsor in the fall of 1981, located on a lot next to the Windsor Star on Chatham Street West. The Lace contacted the developer of the million-dollar project, R. C. Proctor Co. Ltd., and spoke to representative Tom Flood. Flood provided the Lace with information about the Cineplex, whose head office is currently in Toronto.

According to the Cineplex Corporation, the Cineplex concept echoes, on a smaller scale, the successful multi-theatre concept of the original 18-theatre Cineplex located in the Toronto Eaton Centre. The twelve cinemas will accommodate approximately 1,000 seats (15,000 seats per theatre) with films playing continuously throughout the day.

Best in film

Windsor's first Cineplex will feature the best in English and foreign film language films from around the globe, including cinema classics, art films, retrospectives, and, for young audiences, the highest caliber of children's films. The Cineplex in the Toronto Eaton Centre is probably the best known Canadian multi-cinema establishment, country rich in diversity and harmony. The result of this mixture is a theatre-going community with growing demands for something more than first run commercial movies on large movie screens. These demands, however, have never been satisfied in an economically acceptable manner. Costs associated with showing art, foreign language, and other "specialty" films have been prohibitive because theatres with large seating capacities also have large overhead and operating expenses. Substantial costs for management and maintenance must be covered even before returns are made to the exhibitor. Therefore, it is economically difficult to display these films and still make a profit. With a Cineplex complex, the weekly operating costs per film have been reduced significantly to allow a greater variety of these "specialty" films to be shown for a longer duration to Canadian audiences.

American rights

American rights for foreign films are usually acquired if the U.S. distributor is satisfied that the film, upon its opening in New York City, (the most important urban market for such films and the centre from which the film there. Because of these costs, many fine motion pictures are never purchased and released in the U.S., and therefore, are unlikely to appear in Canada. Cineplex, by dealing directly with the foreign producers or distributors, acquires Canadian rights to such films, and exhibits many films which otherwise would not be seen in this continent.

Cineplex was designed to meet the needs of special interest groups by providing motion picture environments and original languages from all corners of the world. Cineplex has developed a loyal and dedicated group of regular moviegoers in cities where it exists, who are able to view their selected film without lines, without crowded auditoria, and with other people who share their appreciation for films. Cineplex is rapidly expanding across Canada, and into the United States. To date, Cineplexes are operating in Toronto (Eaton Centre and Richmond Hill), Kitchener, Burlington, Ottawa, and Peterborough.

Herman’s Hermits resurrect second Tudor king

by Wendy Coomber and Cindy Hartogs

Remember “Henry the Eighth”. “Sea Cruise” (whooee... whoooee baby... J, “Dandy”, “I’m Into Something Good”? Now, remember Herman’s Hermits?

Apparently quite a lot of people remembered them because the pub was quite packed last Friday night with people trying to regain their long lost childhood. These few hundred people were accomplished to a large scale version of Your Hit Parade. However, the group was minus their old singer, Peter Noone, who has since gone on to bigger and better things with The Tremelors.

Everyone knew what was going to happen... and everyone sat on the edge of their seats waiting for it. And waited. Finally, to the triumphant chords of Pomp and Circumstance, the foursome, slightly greying but still spry, bounced onto the stage "direct from England", counted off their 26 hits of the 1960’s, and dove right into “I’m Into Something Good.”

What could we do but laugh and feel good? This was what we grew up on. We knew every single song they would sing. Still, we weren’t ready for their elitist point of view and their neanderthal attitude toward the women in the audience.

The first set was excellent. The group sang their old backlog of songs, the spirit of the ’60’s with its naive lyrics and wild beat. The dance area was packed with the rest of the pub equally involved. The mirthy humour of Barry the Drummer’s “magic act” was put down to the offbeat humour of the British.

For “Mrs. Brown” (you’ve got a lovely daughter), they rather abruptly cleared the dance floor so the mob forced to stand near the bar could see the woman from the audience sing, dance, and accept the “manly” jokes of the singer like a good sport. “Henry the Eighth” had everyone back on the dance floor boogieing down furiously and screaming on cue with the band.

Unfortunately, the second set lost something. The break in between sets was an hour—quite a long time to wait for a crowd which had been so heated up during the first set. In a word, the audience cooled off. The band used a lot of other people’s material during this set... Rod Stewart, Beatles (“Back in the USSR” with an American flavour which made no sense at all), Lynard Skynard, Bob Dylan, and their likes.

They also sang something they wrote last year called “Truck Stop Mama”, which sounded as bad as its title. “Hot Legs” sounded just like the real thing... they must have listened to the record over and over again to get it right.

Their second set ended promptly at 12:40 a.m., the band left immediately for their dressing rooms. The Hermits did not even deign to grace the stage with one little encore for the audience who clapped and cheered and thumped their tables long after the technician began unplugging the stage equipment. Still, I think it was grossly unfair of the pub crowd to direct their insults and gestures to the technician who was only doing his job.

Pub manager Jody Stanton said she thought the band probably felt that because of their status they did not have to come back for an encore. However, the night was, for the most part, quite enjoyable, and the pub should be commended for bringing in such quality entertainment. It was no one’s fault that The Hermits turned out to have such a poor regard for their audience.

The Hermits brought a little bit of England to the pub.

Tudor

and their more homophonic style made them more easily comprehensible.

The final selections, “Five Traditional Songs” arranged by John Rutter, varied in style from a Celtic folk song to a lullabye. They were then treated to an encore by Stanford, a motet. One important attribute of any vocal group is the ability to blend voices and sounds, and not have any one voice stronger than others. The Tudor Singers displayed beautifully their ability to do this throughout the program. This, together with their excellent articulation, beautiful expression and youth promise a rich, full and rewarding future for the choir.

Canadian boys make good on big city concert tour

by Lucia Zdeb and James Kennedy

Last weekend Max Webster did more than their job of “warming up” crowds for the Rush concerts at Cobo Arena. On Saturday night with Cobo just over half full Max Webster hit the stage only mildly impressed the audience. Kim Mitchell, lead vocalist and guitarist of the band showed his displeasure with the Detroit music scene stating “Detroit is dictated by killer FM stations.”

When Max Webster played on November 21, 1977 at Cobo Auditorium in Windsor, they were just another band trying to make a name for themselves. A crowd of only four hundred people were on hand. Max Webster has come a long way since then.

The band has recruited two new musicians, Mike Gingrich on bass guitar and vocals (a position formerly held by Dave Mylne) and Steve McFarren (an Australian formerly of Winx). These two really give the band a fuller, more dynamic sound.

Kim Mitchell along with Gary McCracken on drums and Terry Watkins on keyboards round out the band.

On Friday the 13th Max Webster hit the stage with “Check” from their latest Anthem release "Universe". The band got the audience moving and by the end of their 45 minute set, indeed not long enough for such a capable band.

Max Webster ended their performance with “Battlescar”. According to Kim Mitchell when the song was being recorded for release... "fans were packed outdoors cutting their ears off, placing them in envelopes, and sliding them under the door to get a listen...garbage cans were ransacked for producer’s notes and the cleaning staff were bribed for information."

When this song was played in concert a masked figure appeared at the microphone (see photo on left). Was the masked man Geddy Lee of Rush? It sure as hell sounded like him.

Overall, Max Webster gave an excellent performance. The band has grown over the years and soon they will be headlining the show. Until then, they will be faced with sets and restless unresponsive audiences.

Tudor Singers impress crowd

by Catherine M. Wilson and Ernie Robinson

This past week the City of Montreal brought to Windsor an extraordinarily gifted group of young people who shared their talents with a warm audience. The Tudor Singers made their professional debut only four short years ago and have already achieved an international reputation for their superb artistry and outstanding performance. They fulfilled Saturday evening previous descriptions of being “stunningly beautiful”, “versatile and supple”, “hauntingly evocative” and “exquisitely balanced.” The group displayed accurate articulation and concise diction. Their voices blended beautifully, thus enabling the listener to clearly understand the lyrics.

Masses and motets by a variety of composers constituted the first half of the program. "A Kyrie, Gloria", "Sanctus" and "Agnus Dei" by da Victoria, Moriten, and Byrd respectively were interspersed with motets by Palestrina, Nicholson, di Lasso, Purell and Brunel.

In the second part of the program, the Tudor Singers had the opportunity to put more expression into the secular music. Short madrigals by Weelkes, Morley, Monteverdi and Vass Trainer were full of cheer and happiness. Staggered entrances by the various voices made the story lines rather difficult to follow, but that is quite typical of madrigals.

"Songs of Nature" by Anton Dvorak were sung in German.
Deception is an Art by Peter Hagger

After last year's successful single, "Take A Little Rhythm", people started to expect big things from this Scottish born musician. His new album, Deception is an Art may not live up to those expectations.

There's no denying that Ali Thomson's music is interesting to the MOR listener. The hint of jazz, and the concise but simple lyrics lead his music to a little different from regular radio redundancies.

Tunes such as "Safe and Warm" and "Don't Hold Back" have good examples of these features, however, put together with the other eight songs, each one borders on monotony.

Footloose Child" employs the same tactics, but with a more forgetful approach. Shades of Steely Dan are found in this tune.

With only one vocalist on the album, it is hard to differentiate between songs. Thomson seems aware of this, and tries to compensate, with each song aided by the appeal of either a saxophone bridge or simply a bridge of silence. most of his songs feature some sort of tempo change in midstream.

Rhythm plays an important part in Thomson's music. "A Simple Song" which seems to be the continuing saga of his first hit is built along the same melodic lines also.

Perhaps the shortest and simplest of all his material is "Secrets Hiding Inside". This song is unique to the album as the overriding piano solo carries the tune.

The final song, "Someone in Motion" seems to be an exposition of all his technique, slightly longer and slightly holder.

"The One And Only", although not dissimilar to the other, may be the only bona-fide contender for a spot on the airwaves. Although "A Simple Song" is probably ticketed to be a single, this song should also rate high with the listeners.

Perhaps the one thing lacking on this album is a song which sticks out in one mind. There are no overly redundant choruses or long mysterious pieces of technique to sit back and listen to.

It's really hard to say that Three Windsor athletes, take fifths at national track and field finals

All three University of Windsor athletes who competed in the CIAU indoor track and field championships in Saskatchewan last weekend placed fifth in their events.

Jenny Pace, in her last University meet, made her best throw of the year in the women's shot put, a 12.19-metre toss that put her in fifth spot for that event.

"It was pleasing," Pace said. "It's the first time I've thrown over 12 in a while." The event was won by Melody Torvald of Queen's University with a throw of 13.96 meters.

George Henry was second in his heat of the 60 metres Friday night and his time of 11.84 was the second fastest going into the finals. Neither Henry nor the man who ran the fastest time in the heats, Mark Snedden (11.92) figured in the medals. Henry ran a 7.01 again, but this time placed fifth as Mark Evelyn of the University of Toronto won in a time of 6.89.

Andy Buckstein was third in his heat of the 600 meters, receiving a 1:23.85 clocking. He placed fifth in the final, running 1:23.68.

"I was very disappointed," said Buckstein. "If I had run the time I'd have run at the OUA (Ontario) final - 1:22.90 - I could have got a bronze medal."

The race was won by Ian Newhouse of the University of Toronto, who set a new Canadian record of 1:17.52. He was also chosen as most outstanding male athlete of the meet.

The meet marked the conclusion of this year's indoor track season. Andy Buckstein, speaking on behalf of the rest of the team, wished to thank Dr. Salter for all his time and dedication. "He deserves a lot of credit," said Buckstein.

Staudt second in California half-marathon

Linda Staudt and Kathy Riccia both competed in a half-marathon last Sunday in Pasadena, California. Staudt placed second out of a field of 530 women in a time of 1:15:02. The winner, Kathy Mrtle of UCLA, recorded the second fastest time ever for a woman over that distance, 1:13:19.8.

Kathy Riccia was in the top ten and running well after eight or nine miles when she and several other runners, one of whom helped design the route, went off the course when they missed some directional arrows.

After running several extra miles, they got back on the course at about the five mile mark but Riccia realized what had happened and did not finish the race. The organizers apparently realized that they had failed to provide adequate marshalling or signs at that point on the course because they awarded Riccia an eleventh place finish. For Riccia, however, it was still a bitter disappointment after all the training she had done for the meet.
Examples take 3-on-3 title

Dan Brockman’s goal in the sudden-death overtime period enabled the 69ers to capture the final playoff spot in A division.

The extra game was needed after the Eagles defeated the 69ers 5-2 earlier in the week, resulting in a tie for the final spot.

The 69ers will now face Eng. Soc. B in the quarter-finals while the other quarter-final pits Bulls against Law A.

M.B.A. has advanced to the B Division semifinals along with the Tecumseh Chiefs by way of their 3-0 victory over a stubborn Raccoon Lodge team. Paul Mac-Millan had the winner in the second period. Meanwhile, the Tecumseh Chiefs won their game by forfeit when the Eng. Soc. B team failed to come up with sufficient players.

The convenors would like to thank Dr. Dutchie and Dr. Garrison and Curtis Pope for their cooperation in running the league, and Dave Garrison and Curtis Pope for their attendance and hard work.

There is exciting hockey action each night, but Tuesday and Friday, so come out and watch your favorite team play. The finals are set for Thu., March 26 with the B division championship at 9 p.m., and the A division final at 10 p.m.

At this time, the league would like to thank all those players whose teams did not make the playoffs for their excellent spirit and effort.

Eagles take 3-on-3 title

Screaming Eagles captured the championship of high speed hockey with a 3-3 win over Huron Hall in the final game played last week.

The Eagles reached the final with a 4-3 overtime victory over the Bulls, while Huron outskated Cody Sucks 6-3 in their semi-final matchup.

This experimental version of hockey has proved to be very exciting and highly enjoyable for both participants and spectators. For this reason, the sport will probably become part of the regular intramural program.

The game is one which emphasizes the basic skills of skating, passing and shooting, and one that downplays the “goon tactics” which are so much a part of today’s conventional game of hockey. Those involved with the program this year agreed that high speed, three-on-three hockey offered the opportunity to play the game as it should be played.

The convenors would like to thank Dr. Dasche and Dr. Brockman for their cooperation in running the league, and Dave Garrison and Curtis Pope for their attendance and hard work.

Badminton tourney

Dust off the shuttlecocks, campus rec is running a badminton tournament from March 10 to April 3.

Competition will run from 5-7 p.m. on those dates in men’s and women’s singles, men’s and women’s doubles and mixed doubles.

Enter at the campus rec office in St. Denis Hall before Fri., March 27.

Women on top

Women’s basketball is down to the final week of play and there appears to be a close race in each division. Tecumseh and the Pub are battling it out in the A division. In their last meeting, Tecumseh came out on top 55-52.

In the B division, the two contenders, the Thunderbumps and the Morons, played an exciting game Monday night which ended with a two-point Moron victory in overtime.

Lancer Phil Hermannutz (20) breezes in for an uncontested layup in the consolation final against York.

John Richie's aggressiveness and fine outside shooting added some much-needed fire to the Windsor attack in the first game with Victoria, but it wasn't enough.

Larry Hampton of Acadia at 6'4" takes the title of nation's best dunker.

David Coulthard's thirteenth point of the game came on a 30-foot jumper with three seconds remaining and gave his York Yeomen a 76-74 win in the opening game of the CIAU national basketball championship Saturday in Waterloo.

For the number-one-ranked Yeomen, though, there was little consolation after having lost to the fourth-ranked St. Francis Xavier X-Men in the first round 83-73. York then got past the host team Waterloo 89-75 to gain the final.

Winsor gained the final after a 75-63 round to eventual champions, Victoria Vikings, who won their second title in as many years. Last year the Vikings also defeated the Lancers in the final. Winsor then gained the final with an 88-75 win over number-two-ranked Brandon Bobcats.

Nation’s best

It was Coulthard’s poor shooting in the first-round game (2 of 11 in the first half and 10 of 36 on the game) that put the Toronto team on the losing side for the third straight year, but in the final two games, the Tillsonburg native displayed the scoring prowess that has made him an all-Canadian in each of his four years of university. Earlier in the week, Coulthard became the first two-time winner of the Mike Honder Memorial award as the nation’s best university basketball player. He also won the award in his second year of play.

“We can’t blame David,” said York coach Bob Bain following the consolation win. “He had a poor game Thursday, but when he’s not shooting we depend on other players to pick up the slack and they didn’t in that game.”

Bain agreed that while the win was nice to have, the comparison of his two teams held more importance in his eyes.

“We’re happy that we got a win,” Bain said. “But we lost to a very good team and that’s what we needed.”

Bobcats out-classed 88-75

Brandon Bobcats, last year’s runner-up and ranked number two in this year’s tournament, proved to be the “no-class” team of the entire event. The Bobcats, under the direction of Jerry Hemmings from Victoria, have been under some suspicion of passing money under the table to attract players, and in this game of which Jerry is an Albatross, a 6’10” centre from Brooklyn, New York.

Hemmings set the tone for most of the Brandon team early in the second half when he and Hemmings had a disagreement and Abernathy sat out the rest of the game. “It was disappointing to lose the first game,” Hemmings said after the game. “A lot of players didn’t have the character to bounce back after yesterday’s loss. Some of them have some serious attitudes.”

Asked if Abernathy was one of those players with a problem, Hemmings simply replied, “heeadache.”

“Unfortunately, he was a lost to a very good basketball team,” he added.

“Windsor is so scrappy, you know,” Bain said. “When we went out, I wasn’t sure we could beat them, but when Coulthard sank those shots, we got going.”

The game started out slowly and was a defensive struggle but when Coulthard’s jumper with three seconds remaining found itself on the short end of a 27-14 score after 10 minutes of play. Brandon Bobcats shot up their defense and with a rally that included three straight, the Molyneux brothers closed the gap to just three, 35-32 with just under four and a half minutes left in the half. At halftime it was 43-36 York.

“Unfortunately in the first half, we were going to have to get going,” Grabowski said. “But we got some outstanding plays from a few individuals and that’s what we needed.”

Guards Phil Hermanutz with 23 and Brian Hogan with 12 shared the scoring, as the Windsor Molyneux added 10.

Ron Kekoe was the only other player in double figures with 14.

Nothing much changed through time apart from the bench, the Lancers sucked it up pretty good and I think that’s an integral part of the game. We have a lot of love for Windsor teams and we can’t say that about every team. A lot of teams we don’t like and we don’t get along with. And what of coach Grabowski?”

“Look at Nick,” Bain said. “I hope he can coach somewhere next year. Not to say that Paul Thomas isn’t a good coach in his own right. But I think Nick is a high caliber coach, I think the world of him and I know the players feel the same.”

For the second straight year the Lancers met the eventual national champions in the first round of the CIAU tournament. This year the Victoria Vikings, who also won the title last year, beat the Windsor team 87-2.

Windsor was ranked sixth going into the final tournament and in how they officially finished. Victoria, of course, was first with championship losers Acadia second. The defeated Acadia 81-70 in the final. Concordia surprised St. Francis Xavier X-Men by 23 in the third-place game. It was the highest placing ever for a Quebec team.

York Yeomen, ranked number one coming in, emerged in fifth place for the second straight year with their consolation final victory over the Lancers. Brandon Bobcats finished seventh and the host Waterloo Warriors eighth.

The higher finish by the Lancers above the 1981-82 OUAA West winner of a somewhat easier first round game in next year’s national final. The championship will meet the winner of the QUAA conference, which finished third as represented by Concordia this year.

Windsor enjoyed one of its best shooting games against Windsor but poor breakout from the outside game and some mid-court threes from tournament record-setter Mike Pasquale resulted in the difference.

“We only had one guard breathing, and that was the floor game and you need two to do that,” said coach Nick Grabowski commented on the game. Although Grabowski did not admit it openly, it was the submarine breathing of still Hermanutz that was a cause for concern from the bench. Hermanutz, who averaged more than 20 points per game during the regular season, took only six shots in the game and scored twice for four points.

“Windsor is so scrappy,” Shelds said. “They kept battling, when they were down by 15. They were playing good. They don’t allow us to do some of the things that we wanted to do.”

Molyneux, Buttrey depart as special season ends

by Rice

Another season ended.

Hardly an apt epitaph for a season such as this. Sure, there was no national championship, not even an Ontario championship. But this season will surely go down as a "championship" season.

There was the thrilling last-second shot by Jim Molyneux that clinched the OUAA West. Molyneux is one of only two players who will not be back this year, the other being Brian Buttrey.

The Lancers will miss the strong rebounding of Molyneux, but fans will best remember the 6'5" forward for his powerful slam dunks. The self-proclaimed "streak shooter" also had the ability to pull a game out when he got hot.

Buttrey, who only played one year of Lancer basketball after transferring from the University of Regina, was a hard-working forward who, despite a lack of size (6'5"), managed to hold his own against bigger players through sheer determination. And who will forget his string of six straight baskets in the Laurier playoff game that sealed the win?

This was a team of talent. Molyneux made second all-star team status in the west, while Phil Hermanutz and Stan Koropec picked up first team honours. Koropec was west MVP and OUAA co-MVP for the second straight year, but his greatest achievement came with his acclamation to the first all-Canadian team. That marks a breakthrough for Windsor teams who often go largely unnoticed on a national level.

This was also a team with character. It was readily apparent to those close to the team that there was a special sense of team spirit, a closeness between the players, and between the players and coaches, that had been lacking in previous years. It was a bond built on the realisation that all were working together for a common goal.

Coach Nick Grabowski, in his rookie season after 15 years as an assistant, is to be commended. He is an amiable character who deserves a great deal of credit for a job well done.

And assistant Vince Landry was there every step of the way. The fact that he was able to command players with whom he had played for five straight years displays the kind of respect and admiration his teammates have for him.

A university or college education will definitely stand you in good stead. However if your plans include a career in management, then like the people at the left, you too should look at the benefits of the RIA designation in management accounting.

There is no doubt that the combination of an academic degree or diploma and a professional designation such as the RIA, is highly valued by employers throughout business, industry and government.

For many university and college graduates the RIA designation can be achieved within as little as two years of part time study. (Due to exemptions for courses already taken). For full details of the RIA Program, enrollment information etc. complete and mail the form below.

Senate starts wheels rolling

by E. P. Chart

Two motions put forth by student representatives were overwhelmingly approved by the senate last Thursday (March 19).

The first of these motions, moved by David Simmonds and seconded by Eric Dixon, will establish an ad hoc senate committee “to study methods of maintaining and improving academic excellence in both teaching and research for example, periodic tenure review, awards for excellence in teaching and/or research etc.”

The other student motion, moved by Dixon and seconded by Simmons, will have the senate urge the Board of Governors to take into consideration, during its deliberations on tuition increases, the Senate’s interest in maintaining and increasing accessibility to post-secondary education.”

Dixon’s address to the Senate on this motion is reprinted in full on page 4 of this issue.

The most controversial part of the “academic excellence” motion is the suggestion of “periodic tenure review” (changed from “post-tenure review” in an earlier wording of the motion).

Both Simmons and Dixon noted that, contrary to some faculty opinion, they were not trying to establish a procedure for firing tenured professors. “Never has a motion been so misunderstood by so many,” said Dixon of his original motion.

Foreign students find special consideration here

by Robert Brown

A university committee examining foreign student enrolment has submitted a report to President Mervyn Franklin which may recommend quotas for visa students at Windsor. However, officials of the organization which represents foreign students on campus were not contacted by the committee— or even informed of its existence.

The Task Force on Foreign Student Enrollment was established last spring by Franklin. It reviewed foreign student policy at other Canadian universities, our own foreign student enrolment (both grad and undergrad), and the services provided to those students. The committee recently drafted its recommendations, which have not been made public.

Windsor, at present, has no guidelines for determining how many visa students will be admitted to the university. Task force chairman George McMahon refused to say whether such a policy had been recommended, or if any kind of quota on foreign students would be introduced.

However, Mr. McMahon—who is Assistant Vice-President of Student Services—took a different line. “We are not doing anything to limit ‘qualified international students’ to between forty and eighty percent of first year places,” McMahon limited foreign students to five percent of first year enrolment in 1976. McMahon mentioned restrictions at the University of Alberta (five percent), Toronto’s Faculty of Engineering (five percent), Regina (500 of 4,000 students), and Queen’s (only those supported by the federal government).

The number of Windsor’s visa students has climbed in recent years. One reason given is the increase in those finishing Grade 13 here and applying for admission as Ontario high school students, rather than applying directly from their countries of origin. McMahon stated that there are 40 private schools in Ontario with specifically foreign enrolment, including eight in the Toronto area alone. Enrolment province-wide has been increasing “because all these graduates from all these schools entered university.”

Recommendations of the task force would apply not only to first year undergrads, but to graduate students as well. However, such a quota probably would not affect foreign students currently studying at the university. It would only be applicable to those entering the system.

McMahon cautioned that the task force report carried no weight by itself, but was only one of a number of recommendations to Franklin. “It will be up to the President to decide further action on the report,” he said.

Although the task force made recommendations of vital interest to the foreign students on campus, it made no effort to communicate with those students. The International Students’ Organization (ISO) is the official body representing international students enrolled at Windsor, yet neither its president nor secretary were contacted by the task force—or even knew anything about it.

Secretary Gerri Marentette was not told of the task force officially or otherwise, although it had existed since spring 1980. President David Tasi found out about it at a recent meeting of the Students’ Administrative Council, when he found the committee referred to in the Senate minutes.

This ignorance is even more surprising because Professor M. R. Hague, a task force member, has been International Student Advisor since September, 1980. When asked why he and other members of the task force never contacted the ISO, Mr. Hague replied “the concerns of the task force were not directly related to the concerns of the ISO or any student organization—they represented students. The task force was looking at the overall enrolment of visa students in our university, the service that should be provided to visa students, and the consequences of such heavy enrollment.”

Furthermore, “if you got the present students involved, they would get bored because it doesn’t relate to what they are interested in.”

This was not the feeling of President David Tasi. “I wish we were informed by that committee,” he said. “If they discussed the issues with us, we could have given them some information.”

Members of the Task Force were: McMahon; Hague; Prof. E. W. Ducharme of the English Department; Dean Conrad Gravenor of Science and Mathematics; Dean Cameron MacInnis of Engineering; Prof. Gordon Wood, Assistant Dean of Graduate Studies; Ken Long, Dean of Students; Joseph Saso, Director of Secondary School Liaison; and Prof. George Neil, Interim Dean of Business Administration.
Students lose Trent offices but gain a new voice

by Laurie Bergoline

Some see this situation as a victory for the students. Jim English, director of information at Trent, sees this statement as "trifle exaggerated. This (the final results of the student action) will depend very much on the decisions from the board and senate." Some of the items the students included in their demands are being considered. For example, the issue of the imposed foreign student differential fees will go back to the board on April 23, accompanied by a clear message from the student senate. The president of the university, Donald Theall, will transmit a message from the student senate.

T h e president also considered the recommended modification to expand the Board of Governors. One of the accomplishments at Trent, Trent's sitting of the student offices that they were holding at 10:35.

The decision to give up the offices followed discussions with representatives of the president, who met with the students in the occupied offices.

In the process, the students realized some of the demands could not be met at all and others had to be dealt with in the normal, decision-making fashion.

One of the accomplishments brought about by the students' actions was the formation of a "special committee" of advisors to the president on the issues of university changes.

The president also considered the recommended modification to expand the Board of Governors. One more member of the faculty, one part-time student representative, and a further person to be chosen at large.

"We shouldn't bring in 150 millimetre Howitzers to shoot prairie dogs" which he revisited into the one that was passed at this meeting by a 32 to seven vote (with two abstentions).

In the motion discussion, Simmons agreed that most faculty members do "a great job", but wished to see the motion passed to improve teaching quality even further.

Some faculty members on the Senate said they felt there was need for the ad hoc committee because there were already enough "checks" on teaching performance - by other committees and bodies outside the university. Simmons responded with a question. "Why, after all these checks, is our university so low in amount-of-professorial-research statistics?" He and Dixon also noted that the ad hoc committee they were proposing could be used solely to develop new ideas to improve teaching, perhaps working in conjunction with the other committees which only occasionally deal with the matter of academic excellence.

Senators Dr. Smart Selby of Communication Studies supported the motion, saying the proposed committee wouldn't do any harm and might do some good. He also said he did not think the Senate should try to defeat the well-meaning motion because of the paranoia-inspiring "periodic tenure review" suggestion. Simmons defended our 150 millimetre Howitzers to shoot prairie dogs.

The appealed motion has been sent to the Senate's Nominating Committee now so that its "terms of reference" (methods of operation and areas of examination) can be set. Names to fill the five positions on the committee (to include one student) will also be proposed.

Dixon's motion - dealing with the Senate, Board of Governors, and tuition increases - was passed unanimously by the Senate.

Although not added as a serious threat, Dixon did note that one of the reasons 13 students recently took over the executive offices at Trent University was that the school's administration was not considering the opportunity to fully discuss tuition increases before they were made in a closed Board of Governor's meeting.

The "doing-away-with" of "teaching week" ("slack week", as it is known by the great unwashed masses) was also raised at the meeting, with Dr. Robert Pinto of Philosophy asking President Dr. Mervyn Franklin whether the administration was considering switching the extra week of vacation back to February from its position now as an additional week at Christmas.

Franklin said he realized some students wanted it switched back, but the administration was not considering it at this time. Simmons, the SAC President, said the administration would probably be approached by council about it next year, since it was an issue in the recent SAC elections.
Money matters get muddled

by Wendy Coomber

The university's eight societies were, up until this week, facing a serious lack of funds. The Students' Administrative Council (SAC), which disburses money to the societies, had no enrolment figures for these groups on which to base the amount of funding they were to receive. However, the SAC's Finance Office now says they received the enrolment figures that day and would have them out by the 24th.

Brad Mitchell, SAC Treasurer, explained that until the enrolment figures were released they were released March 23, after this interview with Mitchell, the administration's Finance Office would only give SAC a portion of their money so as not to overestimate and give the students' council too much money. That happened last year because the Finance and the Registrar's Office's figures did not coincide and several societies received over-funding.

Registrar Frank Smith said his office had not been asked for enrolment figures for the societies, although time was needed each semester to figure out from all the people who registered who had actually paid their fees. Joseph Schiller of the university's Finance Office said last Friday they had just received the enrolment figures that day and would have them out by the 24th.

Mitchell said he did not doubt Schiller did not have the figures yet (as of last Friday) but he thought the Finance Office must have had a close approximation that it could remit to SAC a better portion of the funding. Schiller denied this, saying he had not feel he had enough information on the enrolment figures to release proper funding.

According to Mitchell, societies are forced to work with their funds from the previous semester, spend money they do not have but are expecting, or work with advances made to them by SAC. However, SAC's Finance Secretary, Laurie Terry, said she had advance cheques from March 6 and their fees. Joseph Schiller of the university's Finance Office said last Friday they had just received the enrolment figures that day and would have them out by the 24th.

However, SAC's Finance Secretary, Laurie Terry, said she had advance cheques from March 6 and their fees. Joseph Schiller of the university's Finance Office said last Friday they had just received the enrolment figures that day and would have them out by the 24th.

Mitchell said he did not doubt Schiller did not have the figures yet (as of last Friday) but he thought the Finance Office must have had a close approximation that it could remit to SAC a better portion of the funding. Schiller denied this, saying he had not feel he had enough information on the enrolment figures to release proper funding.

Student aid not meeting student needs

The following is a serbiaic transcript of a student representative Eric Dixon's address to Senate on March 19, 1981. Dixon was urging the Senate to voice its concerns about tuition increases to the Board of Governors.

As you are well aware, and I'm sure many are concerned about threatened increases in tuition by the university. I believe it is important that this Senate take a stand on tuition increases and urge the Board of Governors to take no actions that will decrease accessibility to post-secondary education.

In stating the above, I realize the difficulties the university faces, I think sometimes many at the university do not realize the difficulties a student faces. Post-secondary education at the university has not only costs but also student assistance. Many students work while attending classes to support themselves and their families. Many students have to work part-time jobs in order to pay for tuition and other expenses. It is important that this Senate take a stand on tuition increases and urge the Board of Governors to take no actions that will decrease accessibility to post-secondary education.

The University of Windsor also faces a large deficit. The Ontario Council on University Affairs recommends a 12 percent increase in tuition fees to cover the deficit. However, the increase of 10 percent for next year would result in a 10 percent increase in tuition fees. This increase would still cover the deficit and provide the university with the necessary funds to continue its operations.

While students understand many of the difficulties the university faces, I think sometimes many at the university do not realize the difficulties a student faces. Post-secondary education is expensive, and students must work to support themselves. Many students have part-time jobs to pay for their tuition and other expenses. It is important that this Senate take a stand on tuition increases and urge the Board of Governors to take no actions that will decrease accessibility to post-secondary education.

The Senate should be aware of the difficulties students face and take a stand on tuition increases. Since administration thinks a tough, hard-nosed, anti-union approach makes sound business sense, the answer is, is it going to give in to the union's demands? Or are we going to continue to fight for our rights? I believe it is important that this Senate take a stand on tuition increases and urge the Board of Governors to take no actions that will decrease accessibility to post-secondary education.

Reporter stands humbly corrected and repentant

Dear Editor,

I wish to respond to Mr. Lare's editorial of the previous week (appearing in The Lance, Vol. LIII, No. 23, March 20, 1981) in which he takes exception to my editorial of the preceding week. His admonition (however patronizing at times) deserves no less than a personal response from me, and that with as much grace as I can muster. I like to think that I'm not too proud to stand up to circumlocution and argument. If I have the courage to defer to a higher authority which, relatively speaking, I do not claim to be, clearly I stand corrected, however, this is no ready surrender on my part. My original intention in writing the article (incidentally, it was never intended for the editorial page — it is not even written in what I would deem "editorial style" — and appeared there at the editor's discretion, a point of which I have to bring to our very front a general topic about which I believe the average non-freedom student knows little, if anything. Unfortunately, I betrayed my own deficient knowledge of the foreign students' plight (the legal aspects, that is), in spite of my own close association with them.

I am further grateful to Mr. Hemsley for taking responsibility for calling attention to this important topic for yet another week. And, as he says, correct knowledge leads to correction.

As a full-time graduate student with teaching assignments, non-free papers, seminars and the like, at this time I have neither the time nor energy to actively check for myself the validity of all of Mr. Hemsley's statements, but I am interested enough in the subject to pursue his various suggestions, viz., to visit SLAS, Canada Immigration, etc. Now that I have truly regretted I missed last October's seminar. I wonder, too, if a follow-up seminar will be held in January for the benefit of foreign students who have only recently arrived.

Finally, I accept Mr. Hemsley's invitation to give me the floor in my next typewriter. I might not so shame myself in an editorial in the future. Does he have any plans to open discussion to other interested parties?

Bouncers have an iron grip

This letter was originally signed to India Stant, Manager of SAC's pub, and subsequently to us for publication.

Dear Editor,

My friends and I went to SAC's pub on Thursday, March 19. Unfortunately, the evening was marred by an incident that should not have occurred.

While sitting at a table amid the usual commotion of persuading the band to play an encore, I was confronted by a bouncer who told me in no uncertain terms to leave. Apparently, he was not pleased that I had accidenrly broken my glass.

Before I could explain that it was an accident, that I was in control of myself and posed no threat to pub patrons, the bouncer insisted on removing me from my chair without the slightest explanation.

He even went so far as to deliberately antagonize me, even though I gave him no reason to do so, by engaging in childish name-calling. To quote, "You short, ugly bastard." Please excuse the language.

I stood my ground for a short while trying to reason, but was eventually removed by force from the pub. To make matters worse, another bouncer hit me repeatedly at the door because I asked for an explanation.

This episode indicates that certain members of SAC's bouncer staff have no concept of customer service, or of dealing with the public. Management should make it known to its employees (and, more appropriately, "yahoons"), that abusing their authority is detrimental to the image of the SAC. There is still a place to go and have fun without being subjected to needless harassment.

Things were different in those old good days

Dear Editor,

There is a lot of talk these days about student apathy toward various issues affecting our educational careers. I believe that the first step in removing apathy attitudes is becoming informed about the issues and about those involved in dealing with the issues. Take, for example, the recent elections of candidates to various positions in our student government. We are informed by only one issue of The Lance about the candidates and their platforms, just barely one week before election day. This hardly seems fair to the incoming students or the new candidates who have never held office before and then do not have the advantage of public exposure as the incumbents do. Personally, I was looking forward to questioning the candidates about various issues but The Lance did not publish any information regarding date, time or place for the all-candidates meeting. I later found out the meeting was last Friday of the semester, but then it was too late.

Let's hope that during next year's election we will all have more information about the elections in more than just court date, thus giving students a clearer picture of what the issues at stake are all about and thereby allowing students to vote more intelligently. This would also give new candidates a chance to provide readers with information about themselves and their platforms regarding various important issues.

Arthur G. McClelland, Linguistics III

In the midst of a world of never-ending change, the buildings, it's refreshing to meet Donald, those fond school day memories are for a one building student paying tuition, you may something going on in one hall, difficult for us to get as is the cent pack of cigarettes."

adds that "Those $30 were as money that students pay now."

The school system itself was very different in the late twenties. Mr. MacDonald remembers that at that time there was no such thing as Business Administration, then it was either straight "bookkeeping" or the Detroit when he thought of the advantage of a large school: "In those days, we were too familiar with the priests and masters, and had a tendency to call them by their first names.".

At that time, there was less than a few hundred students, no type of students' council, and provincial grants were unheard of.

Now that he admits he was no athlete, Paul MacDonald shows a pang of remorse now that the gym has replaced "old St. Denis Hall." "I have a lot of fond memories there," he said, and "like to think that my track is still up." Back then, Father McGee was the director of the college, and the president of the college was Fr. MacDonald. Mr. MacDonald remembers that only three years ago, but of the names had faded away. He does remember Fr. Picket was bookkeeper, and he also remembers the collection of priests and masters who supposed to be called "Mr." (Mr. MacDonald stresses "supposed"). He smiles when he thinks of the advantage of a large school: "In those days, we were too familiar with the priests and masters, and had a tendency to call them by their first names."

Before I could explain that it was an accident, that I was in control of myself and posed no threat to pub patrons, the bouncer insisted on removing me from my chair without the slightest explanation.

Saturn draws rings around the other planets

by Wendy Crossman

They should. They all rotate around a very odd but impressive planet called Saturn, which has for years been shrouded in mystery and space.

That was, however, until just recently when Jim Loudon, Staff Astronomer at the University of Michigan Exhibit Museum, presented an enlightening lecture on the latest news sent back to earth by NASA's Voyager 1 space probe concerning that planet and its growing number of moons.

Saturn was most known in the past for its spectacular three rings and nine satellites which surrounding it. According to Voyager 1, the planet really has at least 14 moons and hundreds of rings.

Loudon included slides and film simulations in his lecture which made the interest in astronomy could be on a topic so new. Holding degrees in astronomy from the Universities of Pennsylvania and Michigan, he was also present at the Johnson Space Centre for the launch of Apollo 17 and at the Jet Propulsion Lab in Pasadena, California, when Voyager 1 began sending back its pictures of Saturn.

Cheap thrills

In a topic which fascinates everyone he talks to, Loudon finds the information exciting. "Saturn is the only planet in the solar system that had complex organic substances reproducing". He then proceeds to create all kinds of "interesting things". These, he said, were the closest to real life which led to the development of life forms especially amongst the tops of plants, where temperature on the moon, they have frozen in the advanced stages of creation. Loudon also finds it possible to one day observe Titan from its surface, the moon that "someday, God and Reagan, will be able to see human beings created on Earth.

Loudon also found the moon so interesting because of its constantly changing oceanic liquid mosaic, and its flowing and evaporating, creating a new type of runoff. He mentioned that "someday, God and Reagan willing," someone would find a human bone, which he even took a closer look at it through the red mark which surrounds it.

As for its future, he said, no one would ever be able to land on it because its surface has no solidity; it is almost all liquid hydrogen and helium except for its core which is about a third of the earth and so hot there may be nothing solid there either. The Voyager probe had to travel 3.1 million miles beyond the planet before it could get a full-body shot of it.

Loudon also mentioned briefly the storms on the surface of Saturn with winds reaching over 900 miles an hour, far above the speed of sound.

Space oddities

Loudon saved the magnificent rings for last. These unique rings of Saturn which Voyager 1 turned into hundreds of thousands of rings with their pride in admitting to their existence. The rings, from the furthest out to the innermost, were once named A, B, C, and D. When the pictures were sent back from Saturn last November, the scientists, a little embarrassed, had to add to their observations which became, from innermost outward, C, B, A, D, F, and E. After that they gave up. The rings were too numerous to label.

F ring was the one Loudon found frustrating. It's hulking, parasitical, and keeled, and braced, he complained. The ring consists of three narrow rings and is "herded" by two "threepod" moons on either side of it to keep it in place.

London also drew the eerie sight one would experience from the rings by standing on the surface of the planet. According to him, even the dark side of Saturn is never dark owing to the rings. How could one expect to see how mankind was created.

Dissension westward ho!

by Laurie Borgeoiue

"This is my country!

"This is a statement made by Robert Willson, former dean of the Banff School of Advanced Management, current chairman and chief executive officer of the Northland Bank in Calgary. Willson spoke here at Vancie Lounge on Monday, March 23, at the request of the Political Science Department and Social Science Society.

Stressing the point that he was neither a politician nor a "sociologist," Willson proceeded to let his small audience know of the concern that "the West is faced with on the issue of the repatriation of the Canadian constitution.

"The provinces," he said, "are not seeking to disrupt Canada - this dissonance is not a threat of separatism born of rebellions, but rather a growing sense of anxiety, where we are being separated from within. Ottawa wants to use us on their terms, whereas we would like to see it herded - we would like to see if anyone nottels-"

"Put together a Canadian federation as a partnership of provinces - not for the benefit of one group and to the detriment of another."

New Seditor

Dimple Face said he was eagerly awaiting budget negotiations with SAC personnel this summer. "I figure we'll ask for a ten-dollar budget to run the paper next year, invest that ten bucks with great discretion, and start a new editorial team, present a fair offer, and have a good chance of winning it."

He asked the people to look at the issue in a spirit of cooperation. "If anything that this province wanted to do could be vetoed, no matter what it was, would you not be angry too?" he asked.

William argued that Canada should have a "special" for about $3,000. "Put together a Canadian federation as a partnership of provinces - not for the benefit of one group and to the detriment of another."
Will people pay to watch Howie Strutt?

by Peter Haggert

Twitch, Dick 'n the Donuts, Howie Strutt ...... can't anyone think of a real name for a band anymore? I guess you can't dock them marks for originality. This week it's Howie's turn to hold the stage in the pub. This five man band keeps rock and roll tradition alive, with legendary numbers spanning the music of the Rolling Stones to the more modern songs of Joe J. Lyon.

The confident, active lead singer brings vocals to the band which adapt to any type of music. The excellent work on bass guitar gives the band added depth in performance. Their sound however, can be rather lackluster— if not downright dull. Maybe Howie and the big guys are used to playing in more acoustic surroundings. Their lack of equipment might have something to do with it also. Many of the tunes were distorted on Tuesday night—it's a shame, because under these problems there seems to be a pretty good rock band. "Sex 'n Drugs 'n Rock 'n Roll" and "Turning Japanese" might be their most appreciable numbers. Although they may be closer to the "no wave" classification, these two numbers did justice to the versatility of the lead singer.

Howie Strutt is different from other bands. The vivacious bass player can jump circles around the usual deadbeats who play the instrument. And yes, the band has a female—they are there for her talent. In no way does the band try to exploit her long blond hair and such.

I can't say they're the best band to visit the pub this year, but I can admire their honest approach to old rock 'n roll.

BFA art show opens today

The School of Visual Arts presents its annual BFA Show this Friday. The show features works of the 24 Fourth Year Graduate students. In what is probably the most important showing of their scholastic careers, the students submit their own chosen pieces, and there is no judging.

The show opens this Friday night, March 27, in the University Centre and Lebel Galleries and continues until April 16. Reception begins at 8:00 p.m. tonight in the Centre Gallery.

The following are my nominations in the category of Best Supporting Actress.

Eva La Gaille - Resurrection
Eileen Brennan - Private Benjamin
Jane Alexander - Brubaker
Cherri Currie - Foxes
Anne Meara - Fame

Eva La Gaille played Ellen Burstyn's grandmother in Resurrection. For awhile, she was the only person who believed in her granddaughter's powers. As Grandma's go, Eva was quite good. She had a subtle quality about her which was underscored by her film. Perhaps it was too subtle for me. I felt she was good enough to be a Rosie but not quite a winner.

Eileen Brennan was Goldie Hawn's mother in Private Benjamin. Nasty as hell, we all learned to hate Brennan throughout the film. While I admit that Brennan is a very funny comedic actress, she has done far better work. Though she had a great scene with an apron on, it was not enough to win. Perhaps it was too subtle for me. I felt she was good enough to be a Rosie but not quite a winner.

Jane Alexander as Brubaker was too subtle for me. She was too fake for me. I forgot she was Mary Tyler Moore. I believe she doesn't need to dance, sing, act - any of the above. She needs a good look and the ability to turn a soothing voice is enough to turn anyone into a love child. That quality is a rare commodity today. So, I must say that I was not impressed by her role.

Cherri Currie played a small part, some of which was utilized later. I saw her as she matured from a post-pubescent teenager, to a wife, to a mother, to a star. The combination of her unique look and her performance to a mother of that kind of a developing caterpillar into a butterfly.

Anne Meara was nominated ... quite an accomplishment in itself. In the movie that the kids have with an adult. Anne Meara is definitely my choice for the Rosie award. Even with a small part, some of Meara's scenes still stand out in my mind.

The Best Supporting Actress of 1980 was an easy choice to make. In any event, here is my infam­ous list of nominations:

David Keith - Brubaker. I didn't think it was a virtual unknown and unless you saw the movie Foxes you probably won't remember the name or the face of Cherri Currie.

Couple that with the fact that her split personality was a sweet little girl's naughty big girl allowed her a very intriguing role. Cherri Currie is just lovely to look at, fascinating to watch and perhaps when she grows up she'll be a Rosie, but not yet.

In Foxes, Currie wore too much make-up, did too much dance and had too much of a good time.

The final lady in our Supporting Actress category is Anne Meara from Fame. You may remember Anne from the comedy team of Stiller and Meara. Anne plays a very serious and dedicated high school teacher who teaches at the New York City High for Performing Arts. She is expected to teach overly pretentious students with enormous egos who are not at school to learn academic skills but to dance, sing, act - anything but get an education. The constant push-pull relationship she has with her students (es­pecially with one particular boy) supplies some of the few scenes types, who are either pretty or handsome but can twist those lovely faces into something quite awful.

He was definitely captivating but also a bit too good to win a Rosie.

Helen Goorwitz is an actress you've seen in countless movies but you just can't place her name or his face. (Chie, he played the unworthy adversary of Gene Hackman in The Conversation.) In The Stunt Man, Goorwitz plays a slightly perverse screenwriter who is falling head over heels with the director of the film, Peter O'Toole. That in itself is not a winning combination. What is interesting is that Ellen Burstyn is aver­aging looking and plain charac­terized compared to the flam­boyant and bizarrely attractive director's character of O'Toole.

For being so ordinary, Goor­witz never gets lost in those scenes, nor does he overpower them. He is a needed balance for the freisky character of O'Toole. I saw fit to nominate him but did not like him enough to be a Rosie.

Adam Baldwin is another name you won't remember but his character you will find hard to forget. He played Chris Makepeace's bodyguard in the movie, My Bodyguard.

Baldwin demonstrates an acting technique which has not been seen about to convey meaning, emotion, etc., without words, but rather with a look or turn of the head, little things, which, when put together make for a very big message. That quality is a rare commodi­ty these days but it is revealing itself more and more. Though not a winner of a Rosie either, I will be watching for Baldwin in the future.

My next nominee may not seem like he has anything in common with Adam Baldwin, but he does. Leon Helm in Coal Miner's Daughter is another character who also doesn't need words to express himself.

In Coal Miner's Daughter, Helm plays Loretta Lynn's (Sissy Spacek) father. He is a man who has suffered the rav­ages of lung disease in the name of hard work.

Blackened from the mines, Helm's expressionless face was enough to tell a myriad of horror stories and emote a truckload of sentiment. He was very close to becom­ing a Rosie award winner, and if it weren't for Timothy Hutton, he may very well have won.

In Ordinary People, Hutton is haunted by the painful mem­ories of his dead brother and is lashed with the guilt feeling, that, somehow, he is responsible for his death. Because of it, he is unable to function well, adjusted teeneger and must seek professional help from a psychiatrist.

Sitting and watching Timothy Hutton as he discovers the truth about himself was the same as going through those experiences with him. There was just no way that you could remain an observer. At times, you wished you could reach out and help him, somehow. What can I say? The boy earned his Rose!

This category, there was a mixture of characters to choose from: a housewife/mother, an army private, a country western singer and a faith-healer. Though not all glamorous, these women made the most of their respective roles. Here are the candidates:

Goldie Hawn - Private Benjamin
Ellen Burstyn - Resurrection
Angie Dickinson - Dressed to Kill
Sissy Spacek - Coal Miner's Daughter
Mary Tyler Moore - Ordinary People

The Private Benjamin charac­ter is a long ways away from Goldie Hawn's bikini clad days on Laugh-In, and although she is not hilarious in the movie, she has been utilized lately - the ability to a Rosie because she made an name you won't remember but I really prize a lot of people but I really wasn't surprised.

Goldie Hawn was Rosie nominated partly because I always remembered her as Pepper Anderson on Police Woman and seeing her in this role was a refreshing change for me.

Goldie Hawn is a very funny comedic actress, she is a choice for a Rosie nomination par­ticularly in her last role - quite an accomplishment in itself. Mary brings fame to Ordinary People.

She has so much trouble sending chills through the theatre. Her voice is enough to turn a misanthrope into a lover child.

As an example of someone looking and plain character who also doesn't need a Rosie because she made an name you won't remember but... My choice for this award was Mary Tyler Moore in Ordinary People. Her stupendous perform­ance in this movie, associating with the cure and effervescent Mary Richards (of The Mary Tyler Moore Show) will not only be difficult, it will be next to impossible.

Mary Moore plays the wife of Donald Sutherland and is the mother of Timothy Hutton in Ordinary People. She has so much trouble showing her feelings that we naturally assume that she doesn't have any.

The character that Moore plays is so cold that when she is hugged by her son, the blank look on her face is enough to send chills through the theatre. Her well groomed appearance and fashion conscious wardrobe also contribute to the porcelain-like figure Moore is supposed to be. I don't disagree. That beauty is truly skin deep - there is no warmth beneath the surface.

I believed in Moore's character so much that I completely forgot she was Mary Tyler Moore.

BEST ACTOR

The following are my nominations in the category of Best Actor.

The Best Supporting Actor of 1980 was an easy choice to make. In any event, here is my infam­ous list of nominations:

David Keith - Brubaker
Allen Goorwitz - The Stunt Man
Adam Baldwin - My Bodyguard
Keith represents that new type of actor we are beginning to see lately. These are the actors that have so much trouble conveying meaning, emotion, etc., without words, but rather with a look or turn of the head, little things, which, when put together make for a very big message. That quality is a rare commodi­ty these days but it is revealing itself more and more. Though not a winner of a Rosie either, I will be watching for Baldwin in the future.

My next nominee may not seem like he has anything in common with Adam Baldwin, but he does. Leon Helm in Coal Miner's Daughter is another character who also doesn't need words to express himself.

In Coal Miner's Daughter, Helm plays Loretta Lynn's (Sissy Spacek) father. He is a man who has suffered the rav­ages of lung disease in the name of hard work.

Blackened from the mines, Helm's expressionless face was enough to tell a myriad of horror stories and emote a truckload of sentiment. He was very close to becom­ing a Rosie award winner, and if it weren't for Timothy Hutton, he may very well have won.

In Ordinary People, Hutton is haunted by the painful mem­ories of his dead brother and is lashed with the guilt feeling, that, somehow, he is responsible for his death. Because of it, he is unable to function well, adjusted teeneger and must seek professional help from a psychiatrist.

Sitting and watching Timothy Hutton as he discovers the truth about himself was the same as going through those experiences with him. There was just no way that you could remain an observer. At times, you wished you could reach out and help him, somehow. What can I say? The boy earned his Rose!

This category, there was a mixture of characters to choose from: a housewife/mother, an army private, a country western singer and a faith-healer. Though not all glamorous, these women made the most of their respective roles. Here are the candidates:

Goldie Hawn - Private Benjamin
Ellen Burstyn - Resurrection
Angie Dickinson - Dressed to Kill
Sissy Spacek - Coal Miner's Daughter
Mary Tyler Moore - Ordinary People

The Private Benjamin charac­ter is a long ways away from Goldie Hawn's bikini clad days on Laugh-In, and although she is not hilarious in the movie, she has been utilized lately - the ability to a Rosie because she made an name you won't remember but I really prize a lot of people but I really wasn't surprised.

Goldie Hawn was Rosie nominated partly because I always remembered her as Pepper Anderson on Police Woman and seeing her in this role was a refreshing change for me.

Goldie Hawn is a very funny comedic actress, she is a choice for a Rosie nomination par­ticularly in her last role - quite an accomplishment in itself. Mary brings fame to Ordinary People.

She has so much trouble sending chills through the theatre. Her voice is enough to turn a misanthrope into a lover child.

As an example of someone looking and plain character who also doesn't need a Rosie because she made an name you won't remember but... My choice for this award was Mary Tyler Moore in Ordinary People. Her stupendous perform­ance in this movie, associating with the cure and effervescent Mary Richards (of The Mary Tyler Moore Show) will not only be difficult, it will be next to impossible.

Mary Moore plays the wife of Donald Sutherland and is the mother of Timothy Hutton in Ordinary People. She has so much trouble showing her feelings that we naturally assume that she doesn't have any.

The character that Moore plays is so cold that when she is hugged by her son, the blank look on her face is enough to send chills through the theatre. Her well groomed appearance and fashion conscious wardrobe also contribute to the porcelain-like figure Moore is supposed to be. I don't disagree. That beauty is truly skin deep - there is no warmth beneath the surface.

I believed in Moore's character so much that I completely forgot she was Mary Tyler Moore.
As was promised earlier in The Lance, today is the day you’ve all been waiting for. This is the day when, you’re truly, Rosamund Comizzo, awards her very important ‘Rosies’ to "the biggest and the best of all 1980 film talent". Although this is not as auspicious as occasion at Hollywood’s Academy Awards, I did everything to get myself in the Oscar mood.

Although I couldn’t afford to hire围棋 writers to write clever jokes for me I have relied upon my own, nasally sparkling sense of humor to assure you. If you think that you could do the same thing, you should be sure to nominate the person of Benjamin, the Elephant Man, this year, the editor could be looking for someone named Benjamin so he can call the column ‘The Becks’.

I have limited myself to the following categories: Best Supporting Actress; Best Supporting Actor; Best Actress; Best Actor and, Best Film of 1980 (in that order).

After reading this article, if you still have the burning feeling of asking me, "Just who were the winners, anyway, and what was she awarding anything and anybody I please, I would like to borrow you and see the movie jackass-writer’s movie which came out last year, "It’s ok, I’m on a mission from God".

Donald Sutherland — Ordinary People
Roy Scheider — All That Jazz
Peter O’Toole — The Stunt Man
John Hurt — The Elephant Man

I chose Robert Redford, not because of his good looks, but because he is the sort of character he played was supposed to be that of a young and inexperience actor who, in the beginning of the movie, plays an undercover prisoner who, as the new wardens, wants to find out what is going on, to see from the inside. Redford is good at such scenes as these because, like Fonda, he is surprised at what he finds and that perplexion shows on his face. Redford is one of the few people I know who can look as confused as hell without coming off looking foolish.

Donald Sutherland has also been around for a while with little to his name except Dr. F. Not to nominate him for his role in Ordinary People would have been negligent (as far as I was concerned). As a dad who is trying to spin an honest living, not a career, or, as a husband trying to relate to his cold wife, or just as a man who is trying to get in touch with his own feelings, Sutherland is phenomenal.

Roy Scheider’s grandstand performance in All That Jazz was a complete turnaround from what he has been using to date. One remembers Roy Scheider from a lot of movies (The 7-Ups), a lot of acting (The French Connection), and you would’ve imagined him as a director/chorographer of a Broadway show. How Bob Fosse person, Scheider comes across as a very svele, very understated kind of actor.

What I liked most about this role was that Scheider demonstrates how good an actor as a performer. I felt compelled to nominate him for a Rosie. My next name is Peter O’Toole, who’s been away from the screen for so long that you’d almost think he’s been lying dormant the past few years just waiting for the right part to come along. It appears that Peter O’Toole is the director in The Stunt Man was just that part.

His character of a director who’s slightly sanctimoniously godly, sometimes gay/sometimes not, and aims to be the epitome of what we think a Hollywood film director would be like.

While watching O’Toole, I found myself spellbound because I didn’t know what he was going to do next. He is so fascinating to watch I couldn’t take my eyes off of him. I knew I had to nominate him for a Rosie. My final nominee for Best Actor is also the winner.

John Hurt, for many of us, was The Elephant Man. If you haven’t seen the movie, my descrip- tion of Hurt as John Merrick (the elephant man) will seem farfetched.

Hurt plays ¾ of the movie in the shadows, ¼ of the movie wearing a shirt over his head and the rest of the film vividly photographed.

For the first part of the movie, the audience is prevented from seeing John and all we hear is the raspy, snarl sound emanating from this man’s corner. We are seduced into believing that he is not a man, in an animal world something between, and that the name ‘Elephant Man’ is a worthy title from.

To protect the public from the shock of seeing his grotesque, malformed elephant-man is protected by a flour sack which he wears to cover his face. That sack is put in the store, too, as has only one pep hole for Merrick to see through. His unshaven, distorted body neither walks upright, nor does it take regular steps. It slides around like a small, almost dragging itself like a small.

When we finally do get to see Merrick, the effect is that strong. He looks like a gargoyle left over from another century, weather beaten, deformed, and something even uglier than when it was first created.

Only when Merrick sleeps, in his confined position, does the audience see (through adept camera angles) why he is called the elephant man. The shape of his head and the sparsity of his hair makes him look like an adolescent elephant. It is a sight which is both horrendous and pathetic.

It was completely made up, Hurt, with his speech impediment, gives the elephant man a peculiar, incomprehensible voice. When Merrick is happy, he cries and the tears he sheds overflow two black pin holes he calls his eyes, creating erratically down his uneven face.

Sometimes Hurt says nothing and movie moves ever so slightly, converting more meaning in its own way. It is only supplied the name of the directors of these films because I feel that the person who makes or breaks a movie.

Fame — Alan Parker
Coal Miner’s Daughter — Michael Apted
Ordinary People — Robert Redford
The Stunt Man — Richard Rush

The Elephant Man was a true story about John Merrick, a man who was grotesquely deformed from birth and died in Victorian England. He is rescued from his freak show and becomes a Hollywood star, who lose their oldest teenage son to a questionable and premature death. With the single son left, their home is left in turmoil.

What I accept the emotional part of this movie, I still can’t bring myself to calling them “middle class”. Their house living in is far too big (fillers in the forefront); the furnishings they have are far too expensive (a baby grand piano in the living room), the vacations they take are far too far (Spain). The red, the browns and the golds are most pleasing to the eye, but it’s all been done before, some twenty years ago.

Another beautiful scene was with Mary Tyler Moore & Robert Young. What enamored me about the movie was that, even when the movie was that, even when Robert Redford should be chosen to call him.

On the camera the black and white print enhance the black, dimly lit streets, in shades of grey and black, amplify the starkness of the film.

Those scary scenes cut into sharp contrast with the clean and aesthetic ones in the beginning, like a baby grand piano in the living room). As the House they are photographed. The film, the audience is greeted with the single of an autumn path. The reds, the browns and the golds are most pleasing to the eye, but it’s all been done before, some twenty years ago.

Another beautiful scene was with Mary Tyler Moore & Robert Young. What enamored me about the movie was that, even when the movie was That "The Rosies" because of the obvious connection to my name a) statement. But, next year, the editor could be looking for someone named Benjamin so he can call the column ‘The Becks’.

I have limited myself to the following categories: Best Supporting Actress; Best Supporting Actor; Best Actress; Best Actor and, Best Film of 1980 (in that order).

She records the Rita Coolidge hit "Love Me Again" with an equal amount of tenderness as her predecessor. This sets a general mood for the album. Other songs such as "No Strings" offer an upbeat tempo, but still are mired in a lyrical pit of repetitive lyrics. Many times, songs of this nature attempt to be forceful, but end up spurttering.

"I Don't Want You To Go" is definitely the prize of the album. Its soft introduction accompanied by a rambling piano grace her strong emotional lyrics. Chorus heights the possibility of this song making it to the big time, adults and 13 for students me of a white label Melissa Manchester or Rita Coolidge attempt. If this hurts you like you can't go wrong.

Composers galore

by Robert Brown

Ever want to meet a music composer? Stick around till June 13–14 and you'll get a chance to meet a whole tribe of them, when Windsor helps host the Canadian League of Composers' Conference and Festival. The conference, held to commemorate the League's thirtieth anniversary, in part speaking sessions and part music performance.

The National Arts Centre Orchestra of Ottawa will perform an all-Canadian concert at the Art Gallery of Windsor, at 8:00 p.m. on June 12. The Arts Centre Orchestra — familiar to many Windsor music lovers through their performances at the Cleary — has acquired increasing renown in the past few years under the baton of Mario Bernardi. It has put out a number of records on the RCA label featuring Canadian composers, some of whom will be at the conference.

The next day two concerts will be presented — The Elmer Iseler Singers of Toronto, at Orchestra Hall, and a Banff-based group called "Fusion Five" at the Art Gallery of Windsor. Music of both programs are by Canadian composers. Fusion Five will feature selections by the eight founding members of the League. One of these founders, Murray Adaskin, is a frequent visitor to the University of Windsor, and during his last visit in 1978 spent a week teaching at the School of Music.

Windsor campus will host the speaking sessions of the Conference in Essex Hall Theatre. Composers of the League — which numbers 150 members — plan to discuss Canadian cultural policy and its relation to the composer, acoustics and electronics in music, and the future of music in the next 30 years. Admission to the speaking sessions and Art Gallery concerts are free and open to the public. Tickets to the National Arts Centre Orchestra and Iseler Singers concerts cost $6 for adults and $3 for students, and are available at the Box Office of Orchestra Hall.
New gym construction is no sweat

As the pictures below show, the replacement for St. Denis Hall is coming along nicely.

The building, yet to be named, should be finished sometime around May, with an expected opening date in early September.

The new building features an indoor, 6 lane 200 metre track, more basketball courts than we need to run the CIAU's all at the same time, an extensive team and sports medicine room facilities.

Mr. Mario Sellan of Information Services was kind enough to take The Lance on a tour of the fledgling facility.

Clockwise from top. The main entrance to the new facility will face east. Mr. Sellan expects that the entrance will look a lot more like the artists' conception when it's done. Looking west from the east end of the new facility, some indication of size can be had by comparing the workmen, about centre, to the height of the ceiling. In the foreground rests one of the six massive air conditioning units which was being raised into place last week. Finally, the entrance to the team room area is shown in this view looking north from the east end of the building.

THESE PEOPLE DID NOT REST ON THEIR ACADEMIC LAURELS

A university or college education will definitely stand you in good stead. However if your plans include a career in management, then like the people at the left, you too should look at the benefits of the RIA designation in management accounting.

There is no doubt that the combination of an academic degree or diploma and a professional designation such as the RIA, is highly valued by employers throughout business, industry and government.

For many university and college graduates the RIA designation can be achieved within as little as two years of part time study. (Due to exemptions for courses already taken). For full details of the RIA Program, enrollment information etc. complete and mail the form below.

‘B’ league basketball champions in limbo

Tuesday, March 24 saw the conclusion of the men’s A league basketball, and what may or may not prove to be the final game of B league basketball.

Whales Bridgehouse squeaked past Lapointe 30-29 in the B final, but will have to replay their semi-final game with the Hawkes after that team made a successful protest over some confusion about the starting time of the original playoff game between the two.

The Bridgehouse won that game rather handily, 44-31, and should they be victorious again in the rematch Monday will officially be named B league champs.

In the event that the Hawkes win the protest game, they will face the remount Lapointe team in a final game Wednesday.

In the A division, the Lancers Football team came from their third-place season standing to capture the title. Their opponents, the Cardinals, were also somewhat of a Cinderella team as they finished in fourth spot in the league standings.

Excellent physical condition and robust play proved to be the keys to success at the gridiron squad bounces to a quick 8-2 lead and never looked back. The score at the half was 23-11 and the final 46-23. Lancer Bullock paced the Lancers with 12 points.

Editor’s note

Well, they won’t have Steve Rice to kick around next year. I’ll be graduating and moving on to smaller and less significant things. Some here at The Lance may call that a blessing in disguise. So what. I never cared what they thought, anyway. But, good or bad, it means the paper will be without a sports editor next year, with no apparent heir to the throne. With that in mind, how about taking this opportunity to come out and check things out at The Lance if you’ve ever thought to yourself, “I could do a better job than that Rice idiot.” Maybe you could.

New administrator to face unions in summer

by Chris Woodrow

John Dempster will be returning to the University of Windsor in an unaccustomed but well-known role - that of Assistant Vice-President, Human Resources. It was announced at Tuesday's Board of Governors' meeting.

Dempster will be joining the university administration, replacing John Lynch who was recently released from his contractual obligations. He will be responsible for staff relations, collective bargaining, personnel policies and programs, compensation and benefit plans for staff members and recruitment of support staff.

The University of Windsor campus and its union situation will not be a new experience for Dempster who was here last year as mediator between the university administration and the Faculty Association in their stalled contract negotiations.

The Ontario Ministry of Labour's loss (where he is presently) will be our gain as Dempster brings his many talents and abilities to this campus.

As he proved last year, Dempster possesses all the necessary qualities required to improve staff relations and negotiate contracts.

Participants in last year's negotiations described him as a very capable, level-headed negotiator, having the ability to compromise when necessary, listen to both sides of an argument, but, above all, to describe him as a very likable person.

With four unions on campus due to re-negotiate their contracts this summer, Dempster will be put on the spot immediately.

Campus and Fox fight cancer

This week's issue includes our annual "joke" edition - this year it's a version of that classic line of fine journalism, The National Enquirer (ours is The Irrational Enquirer). Unfortunately, our printer has only got certain capabilities, so you're going to have to do a bit of work. The Enquirer section, which you will find right after page 6 of the regular Lance part, is supposed to be a little booklet. So pull out the eight very funny pages in the center, fold them top-to-bottom or bottom-to-top, turn them sideways, and cut or tear the top of this booklet off so you can leaf through it with ease. If you can't figure it out, ask someone in Mechanical Engineering or come up to the office and we'll give you a non-credit course.

Sexism charges implicate all: profs

OTTAWA (CUP) - Two Carleton University journalism professors are now on trial for sexually harassing students for libel and slander following allegations of sexual harassment in their Faculty.

Bob Rupert and Brian Nolan have filed suit against Maureen McGowan, Susan Dusel, charging their reputation has been damaged because all male journalism professors are implicated in the harassment charges.

The women alleged there is harassment by one or more faculty members in the school of journalism, ranging from sexist jokes in class to sexual blackmail and physical assault. They recommend the university establish a specific office to deal with complaints, conduct educational seminars for faculty and draw up guidelines for conduct.

The women say they are speaking on behalf of a confidential source, but refused to say how many professors are implicated or give examples of specific incidents. They have refused further comments on the advice of their lawyers.

A defense fund has been established for the students' legal fees. Women's centres, rape crisis centres and other groups across the country will be contacted for moral and financial support. A fund-raising benefit is tentatively scheduled for mid-April.

In a letter to the Carleton dean of arts, National Union of Students executive officer John Doherty said the issue of sexual harassment is being buried in debate on the reputation and tactility of the three women.

"This only serves to make it harder to encourage women to raise incidents of sexual harassment. Women see that they are put on trial rather than the man who has harassed them," he said.

Several petitions have been circulated, one supporting the committee's recommendations, another opposing sexual harassment should be dealt with but criticizing the way the matter was handled.

Meanwhile, several of the recommendations from the committee seem on the way to implementation. Dean of arts Nauni Griffiths says a booklet outlining grievance procedures for students who are sexually harassed will be published next fall.

However, Griffiths said there is no need to set up a special office or centre to deal with complaints. She said this would "scapegoat" the whole issue and divert attention from the larger question of professional conduct in all situations.

The students presented an ultimatum in which they refused to leave the office of the Vice-President-Academic until their demands were met. There were seven demands in all, the most important being the reinstatement of the constitution that requires a student to participate on all faculty committees.

On Friday, March 27, the students successfully attempted another student vote on the issue.
What happens to all you’ve got when you leave

While many of us do not like to admit it, the one certainty of this life is that it will end. As such, all of us should at one time prepare for death by making a will.

A will allows you to determine how your assets are to be distributed after death. To be legally valid, all wills must conform to certain basic requirements. The nuncupative will is not valid unless signed at its end by the person making the will and witnessed by two persons. If a witness is also a beneficiary, the will will be void, so a person who will be receiving something under the will should not be a witness. The spouse of a beneficiary should also not be a witness, for the same reason.

A testator can make a valid will wholly in his own handwriting without the necessity for witnesses. To qualify, the will must be completely in the testator’s handwriting – consequently, a will form from a stationery will not qualify as a holograph will.

A holograph will is often useful in emergency situations, but a carefully prepared formal will is more likely to ensure that all your assets and wishes are fully considered.

Executor

A will is a legal document which directs how your assets are to be distributed after death. Your will may contain many items, including specific gifts of personal property, transfers of real estate, lump sum cash payments, or shares of some income. Wills may also direct how gifts are to be given or under what conditions they may be received. Furthermore, most wills designate certain people to perform various tasks after your death.

The will should appoint an executor, someone who will distribute your property as requested, pay off any debts, and generally settle or wind up your affairs. A trustee may also be appointed by the will. The trustee will manage your estate over an extended period, applying any income for the benefit of others. In many cases, it is convenient to appoint the same person as both executor and trustee.

Some wills also provide for the appointment of a guardian in the event that both parents die leaving young children orphaned. Courts are not bound by your choice of guardian and may appoint another, but the parents’ personal wishes are always an important consideration.

Changing it

Your will does not take effect until you die, so you can change part or all of it at any time. Alterations can be made in a number of ways: the most reliable being by attaching a separate amendment or codicil, or, where changes are extensive, by rewriting the entire will. It is important to note that every alteration must be made according to the same requirements which governed the making of the original will. For example, any alteration to a formal will must be properly signed by you and two witnesses.

In addition, your will may be revoked by a specific clause in a later will, or if you destroy it intentionally and not by accident. Lastly, marriage usually revokes your earlier will unless it was written in contemplation of the marriage. Also, if your marriage ends in divorce or annulment, your spouse is denied any gift from the will unless you specifically direct otherwise.

Without one

If you die without a will, your property is distributed according to certain legal rules. First, your surviving spouse is always given preferential treatment. For example, if you are survived by your spouse and no children, then your spouse receives the first $73,000 of your assets before the children are considered. Any remainder is then divided between the spouse and children.

When no spouse survives you, the law provides for the distribution of your assets among other relatives, according to a certain order of preference. Children and grandchildren have priority, followed by parents, then brothers and sisters, then nephews and nieces, and lastly “of kin”. However, if you die without a will and have no traceable relatives, then all of your assets will become the property of the provincial government.

Students' ability is not blind

by Rosemarie Comisso

On March 29, in Vanier Hall, a very remarkable lady received a very prestigious award.

Last Sunday, Yvonne Gardiner, a graduate student at the University of Waterloo, was presented with "A Prize of the Consol General of Belgium", an award given from time to time to people who promote Belgian culture.

This time, however, the lucky recipient was blind.

A native of Montreal, Gardiner contrived social memngis at the age of three, a disease which left her with only three percent vision.

She moved to Windsor "some 20 odd years ago" and attended the University of Windsor, where she received her BA, double Honours, and Master's degrees in English.

Yvonne refuses to bow down to herself and she hates it when people get "schmalzy" (patronizing) over her disability, frankly, she proudly calls herself a "bam" - the nickname given to a licensed ham radio operator. This hobby and others are her way of "relaxing''.

However, talking to Yvonne's parents about this subject is a different story. Dr. Samuel Stollman, English, Joane Mague (McCluskey) and Dr. Louise Nelson (Netherland Les) unanimously agree that Yvonne is an exceptional student. They also concur that she will make a fine teacher some day, because she is such an "educated and cultured person".

Due to extenuating circumstances though, Yvonne is prevented from acquiring her Ph.D in English and, because of the depressed economic conditions in Windsor, she is also having a hard time finding a full-time teaching position.

She is also realistic enough to admit that many people do not fare well in the job market, especially blind people who face a very high percent jobless rate as a group.

Gardiner blames employers for stereotyping blind people" which is too bad "since there are many blind people who could do constructive and interesting jobs. If they can't then educate them for those jobs" she says defiantly.

Yvonne Gardiner hopes that the Year of the Disabled will be more successful than other "Year". And that is the reason one thing she hopes it will have society wish, it is this: "To accept the disabled people", and that, she says, "can't hurt".

Receiving professor and founder of the University of Visual Art, Joseph DeLauro (left), was presented last week with a gold medal recognizing his work.

The medal, from the Italian Academy of Arts and Works, was presented by Frank DeAngelis, Italian Vice-Consul and local TV personality.

DeLauro called for the elimination of "twenty-years of Fun, frustration, creativity, and trying to be a sculptor."

Some of his work can presently be enjoyed at his recently opened "Retrospective Exhibit" at the Art Gallery of Windsor.

From the year 1960 to the New campus group

Last week, approximately 300 members of our community staged a one-hour protest demonstration at Windsor's City Hall to protest the proposed destruction of the "First Nations" cemetery.

The issues, ranging from local to the international level, are the subject of interest, discussion and action by students of this university.

Quebec's foreign fees jump

MONTREAL (CJP) - Foreign students in Quebec will be paying a whopping $5128 in tuition fees next year.

This will raise the foreign students' fees to 60 percent of the cost of education, the highest in Canada. Last year, university officials were told to expect an increase in fees to cover up to half the cost.

"It think it is an excessively large increase," said Concordia University rector John O'Brien.

"For students presently here it is a very big increase and an indication of the amount of fees they will have to pay in the future." said John O'Brien.

Although scheduled to speak on this issue as it pertains to Peregrine Falcons (one of 12 species of birds that have disappeared), Hummell chose instead to address a more general topic. Hummell concerned himself largely with reasons why the public should be concerned about endangered species, and the steps that his organization and others are taking to help prevent the species to abundancy in our country.

Hummell gave three major reasons why we should be concerned about endangered species.

First, he said that the extinction of species affects us all, that the extinction of species is a very big increase and an indication of the amount of fees they will have to pay in the future.

Another reason is the scientific understanding that we derive from the physiology of animals as applied to human beings.

Finally, the lessoning of the species of species causes a loss in the stability of our ecosystems and the disappearance of various life forms may be an indication of basic problems.

The third reason cited was moral responsibility, namely, that we should not be able to acquire our PhD's or other degrees if we do not help to save the species that are endangered.

Editor denies sex

Dear Editor:

Once again, I have been misguided and maligned by your little rag you call a newspaper.

Your article of last week entitled "Yvonne Gardiner - The Year of the Trouble" is a typical piece of Lance sensationalism. It is clear to me that I am the defenestrated victim of yet another Lance smear campaign.

Over the last two years, I have proven myself a capable replacement for Mr. R.P. Chant, and, before I can become totally effective in my new position, I must learn to smoke and drink heavily like him, too. Toons of the trade, you know.

The article made reference to letters which I had allegedly written to Penhouse. Now, why would I write to such a journal when there are such fascinating alternative publications as Psychology Today and the FROM PAGE 1

Eves. As for your implications of my sexual prowess, it is ob­ vious to me and my husband that you don't know what you're talking about. My mother won't even let me talk to girls!

If your reporter had done his homework, he would have found out about the small dogs, and need not have depended on his callous little lie.

I must inform you, Mr. Editor-at-present, that I have placated a call to Miss Carnell Burnett for advice as to how to handle this serious matter. She has assured me that, after she returns from her victory binge, she will be more than happy to assist me.

Let me assure the campus populations that I get this job once I do good work, an eat right (write if it is not right).

Demands met

The police apparently, weren't called on this occasion because the elevator doors were turned off and a white floor was taken over. This one was done peacefully and in only the office of the Vice-President, and, second, the university would have looked bad (perhaps as if it was ignoring the legitimate complaints.)

The takeover involved mostly graduate students from the Soci­ology department, but they had support from all other faculties.
Well, our worst fears have been realized.

The fears involved the timing of the Board of Governors' decision to open up the_interfaces in the 60's, and put in relation to its timing of the discussion of (the more accurately, possibility) of raising tuition next year.

This is not a discussion which will include a proposed tuition increase for next year. By what percentage the board will decide to increase the fees (above the mandatory 10 percent set by the provost) will be revealed at the meeting to show the board the concern about the financial hardship of almost everyone who goes to UGA (undergraduate average), you're in; if not, you're out. Tough luck, buddy. Back to driving the cab.

The principle of democracy is the right of choice, but also, and more important, it is the burden of choice: the responsibility of standing up and being counted.

Task force is going to need close watching

Dear Editor:
The foreign student enrolment (March 27, 1981) was of interest, but certain aspects should be elaborated on. The necessity of such a study is acknowledged, its validity should be monitored to prevent error. An example is the TV-network's WS 'Campus Giveaway' program aired September, 1979. WS, a normally reproducible, gave the impression on national-wide TV that a Canadian student with a 79 percent average in Grade XIII was denied entry into pharmaceutical studies at the University of Toronto. Numerous foreign students who have inducted universities in Ontario. In actual fact, programs such as Medicine, Pharmacy, Engineering, etc. are subject to quotas of five percent or less for foreign students. For those of us familiar with stringent acceptence criteria for some faculties, a student with a 79 percent average in Grade XIII was so surprisingly was rejected. But WS gave erroneous statistical data, by the planning committee was in intened to this newspaper for planning the report of the Task Force on foreign student advisor, was also concerning visa students. I was also Planning Committee was interested in doing research, and the last I knew, a large $1 million a year, plus the 'multifaceted policy', that would work out to $30 million annually and that does not include the tuition being a very good job - and will continue to if you do not follow the selfish example of Grant, McMaster, and the U of Alberta. Why should we?

Dear Sir,

I would like to bring your attention to the fact that we contribute substantially to the economy of Windsor.

This point is particularly important. Begin with Ministe r Trudeau has been pushing so far for a north-south queue. Your P. M. is concern about the future of the Third World countries. I think your university is doing a very good job - and will continue to if you do not follow the selfish example of Grant, McMaster, and the U of Alberta.

Why should we?

Phil Wong, International Student

Dear Sir:

It's pathetic to see the number of students receiving tickets in the vicinity of the University because of parking violations (or at least what appear to be parking violations to the police officers).

Due to the number of available parking spaces, even those who own or rent their own cars are sometimes caught out. The police force waste such parking spaces and it is not surprising that the police force waste such parking spaces and it is not surprising that.

An example is a situation in which I parked my car on Askin last week and received a ticket for supposedly blocking a resident's driveway. I talked to the parking enforcers and learned that consideration my car to be interfering upon their ability to use their driveway. This is not true; even a large-size car (Cadillac) could have entered the driveway with ease. However, at the discretion of the policeman who issued the ticket, I was "in violation".

I sincerely think that our police should assign their officers (who are paid well enough) to a position that would be more beneficial to the community, such as taking the students' scanty amount of funds. There are not many students who will evasive receiving a ticket even in very questionable situations.

Options for students are that most streets within a half-mile radius of the university have signs reading "No parking, 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., Monday to Friday" when this is, coincidentally, the time and days most students have classes. Parking 10 blocks away from the university by no means ensures you that you will not receive a ticket either. Please note that SAC consulat have eloped from the time you parked your car in a two-car zone.

It becomes even more depressing to receive one of those yellow tickets for doing the often have many empty spaces, and even if the car remains there for an extra half-hour, no citizen is being deprived of the use of a parking space. I ask why the ticket doesn't come.

The police force wastes enough gas making approximations. 15 to 20 people ensuring that every student who is in violation gets his reward.

It also encourager that some of the streets near the university are wide enough to have parking signs (which are other streets in the city), but have "no parking" signs on both sides. As if it isn't bad enough that students have to cope with high tuition rates, they also have to pay this sum for parking tickets and this makes university life that much more difficult.

I propose that SAC consulates a petition drive outlining the problems associated with the chief of police and city council.

In my opinion, I am speaking for many students who are not fortunate enough to have a parking spot in one of the university-owned lots.

Bob Davidovic, Business Administration

Why do we need quotas?

Dear Editor:
The recent establishment of the Task Force on Foreign Student Enrolment makes me nervous. I wonder if such a task force is necessary. I consider it a friendly act. I consider it a declaration of war on international students. First of all, let me talk on the cost of financing a university and how the money is spent. A university has basically three main purposes: (1) education, (2) doing research, and (3) community services. The pennies that we get from the provincial and federal governments are certainly not spent all on educating students, but perhaps only 40 percent of it. Another 40 percent is spent on doing research, and the last 20 percent is spent on community services. My budget allocation for university money may be subjective, but, honestly speaking, there is some truth in it (please note President Campbell's report on the international student, University of Manitoba, 1980).

The budget for the University of Windsor is around $60 million annually (see Editor's Note). The tuition fee is around $2,500 (1981-82) per international student per academic year (Sept. to April).

This then remember that most international students come from Third World nations. We are just your guests for three to four years. Also, it should not be surprising that most are enrolment, Business, Economic, Computer Science and Engineering. These are the only few fields that are relevant to our need back home. This point is particularly important. Begin with Minister Trudeau has been pushing so long for a north-south queue. Your P. M. is concerned about the future of the Third World countries. I think your university is doing a very good job - and will continue to if you do not follow the selfish example of Grant, McMaster, and the U of Alberta. Why should we?

Secondly, there is no doubt that international students will make up the standard of education in this university. More students mean more competition to get international facilities like Engineering. I am sure the university does not wish to produce second-class professionals. In order to have good graduates, we need not only good professors, but also students who are prepared and willing to study. To set quotas is too artificial. Why accept one student if he does not have the qualifications or the brain, while rejecting the other? It will not only not serve the university, but also its overall reputation.

Thirdly, remember that most international students come from Third World nations. We are just your guests for three to four years. Also, it should not be surprising that most are enrolment, Business, Economic, Computer Science and Engineering. These are the only few fields that are relevant to our need back home. This point is particularly important. Begin with Minister Trudeau has been pushing so long for a north-south queue. Your P. M. is concerned about the future of the Third World countries. An example is the CTV-Windsor establishment of the Foreign Student Enrolment until the task force report has been made and reference to foreign student advisor, was also concerning visa students. I was also Planning Committee was interested in doing research, and the last I knew, a large $1 million a year, plus the "multifaceted policy", that would work out to $30 million annually and that does not include the tuition being a very good job - and will continue to if you do not follow the selfish example of Grant, McMaster, and the U of Alberta. Phil Wong, International Student

Dear Editor:

Phil Wong's report of the university budget (confirmed by Dr. Paul V. Cassou) puts the expenditure for the year between $40 and $45 million, not your $60 million...

Our occasional viewing of the Windsor Star has revealed that since there is no indication of the content of the task force report has been made public, I am strongly arguing you to disregard any information which you may have obtained, and to continue disagreeing with members of the task force by the Academic Planning Committee until the report is released. I am also requesting that you urge the president to release the report as soon as possible and that no decision be made on foreign students until the report is made public. The report has been studied by interested parties.

David Simmons, SAC President

Slow down a bit

This letter was sent last week to Dr. Paul V. Cassou, Vice-President Academic of this university. A copy of it was also sent to this newspaper for publication.

Dear Sir:

It has been drawn to my attention that the Academic Planning Committee was involved in some discussion concerning foreign students. I was also informed that Dr. Haeue, the foreign student advisor, was also persuaded that the report of the Task Force on Foreign Students set up by the Planning Committee was in fact intended to this newspaper for planning the report of the Task Force on foreign student advisor, was also concerning visa students. The ads say, "In the heat of passion, two things can happen. The second is murder." What they (gracefully) do not mention is that the first is shown in graphic detail.

The Postman Always Rings Twice is about those all-American themes — sex and violence. The original, which starred John Garfield and Lana Turner, was not very explicit about either of these subjects. The remake, with Jack Nicholson and Jessica Lange, shows intimately the intertwining of lust and hate.

Frank Chambers (Nicholson) is a drifter who stops to work at a roadside gas station/even run by Nick Papadakis and his wife, Cora (Lange). Cora is about 20 years younger than her husband and resents his overbearing, "grasy Greek ways." When Cora and Frank begin their affair, she feels that perhaps she can make something without her husband, who she sees as being in her way. But she sees only one way to get him out of her way.

Violence is the key to Frank and Cora's relationship. Cora is dominant in most situations. In their first sexual encounter, when Frank attacks her on the kitchen table, the audience knows that this is exactly what she wanted. It is also Cora's idea to kill Nick, she leaves it to Frank to provide details for the action. The motivation for everything that Frank and Cora do is lust.

The movie works because it makes this horrifying pair seem sympathetic. The only really nice person in "Postman" is Nick, yet Nicholson and Lange are good enough to make Frank and Cora into a seemingly normal couple. When Cora tells of how she feels trapped in her marriage, she could be speaking for almost any woman stuck in an unhappy marriage. Nicholson's shiftless drifter who is inspired to action only by his need for Cora is really any man who rises above himself for the love of a woman. And when the first murder attempt fails, the audience is disappointed, they want Frank and Cora to succeed.

Despite the violent theme, "Postman" does not have many violent scenes — it's got nothing on a Charles Bronson movie. The sex scenes, however; are detailed; the movie probably would have received more than its present "R" rating a few years ago. Yet, these scenes are important, without the sex, why Frank and Cora want to get rid of Nick could not be understood.

There are absolutely no postmen anywhere in the movie. You can figure out the title for yourself after you see it.

Albatross: It's education that makes the difference

by Bill Buchanan

"When people hear us play," Palazzolo told The Lance, "they say that our music sounds like we're really put a lot of professional thought into the pieces. There's no secret about it -- I like to think that education makes the difference."

Palazzolo began playing the guitar after a heart operation compelled him to give up sports. Prior to his operation, Palazzolo had won the "Junior Musician of the Year Award" in his first year of high school. His instrument was the trompet.

His brother, a graduate from the University of Windsor with an Honours B.A. in music and formerly a music teacher at Kennedy, taught him the basics on guitar. Palazzolo now has a good command of the guitar, piano, bass, and trumpet. At the University, he is also studying the violin and eello.

"You've heard it said that some instruments are easier to play than others. At first, that may seem true, but practice is what produces the best results."

Theory is important

"Theory is important," Palazzolo declares. "For example, Dennis DeYoung (Styx) is listened to reach music from kindergartens to grade 8. His keyboard playing is excellent, but it wouldn't have the touch of class that it has now without his musical training.

"Theory is learning the language of music. If you know the language, you can musically place your thoughts on paper, and if you know your theory, you know exactly what your music will be like when it's produced."

"Univerrity music programs emphasize the importance of classical music in their lecture material. Palazzolo has come to realize the value of classical music."

"In high school, I wouldn't have caught dead listening to that stuff -- classical music meant nothing to me. In high school, most people considered it as garbage. Through my courses here, I've learned that classical music is the supreme form of music. Many good musicians have classical backgrounds. Alex Zonje (a jazz musician and a University of Windsor graduate), Dennis DeYoung (Styx), Freddie Mercury (Queen), Richie Blackmore (Deep Purple), Steve Howe (Yes), Keith Emerson (ELP), just to name a few." Music education can also save time when it comes to learning and writing songs. Palazzolo claims "Programmed Ear Training" -- the lab section of his second-year theory course -- has been quite important to him.

Hello, Hooray

"Last night, I learned the music for 'Hello, Hooray' (Allee Cooper) in about 10 minutes. Three years ago, it would have taken an hour. Sheet music is useless. It doesn't tell the truth, they don't always put the song in the right key, and the way the music is written out can sound very mechanical. If you know your theory, you can pick out the chords to any song."

"And the great thing about the music program is the willingness of the professors to help any student out, even on their own time. They really care for that -- they know that my band plays every night, even when I come into school dead-tired or miss classes altogether because of it, they're willing to help me catch up. It makes catching up so much easier."

However, Palazzolo finds it "disappointing" that many students in the music program feel rock and roll has no place in the music world.

"Every form of music anywhere has its own place in the world. I feel kind of sorry for the people who won't accept the fact that there are other kinds of music besides that of the classical stream. Rock and roll is an art just like any other style of music, and my band wants to make people realize that it is just that -- an art."

It's true: good things do come in small packages

by Scott McCallion

Lance Staff Reporter

Like Paul Roberts, with whom The Lance talked last week, Linda Staudt is an outstanding distance runner in her last year at the University. She holds eleven Lancerette records and was awarded most valuable female participant on the track and field team in both her first year (1977-78) and her third year. Now in her fourth year, Staudt has been awarded the Banner Shield as the University’s top female athlete, an honor she shared last year with swimmer Lori Scott.

And her talents have lifted her far beyond an intercollegiate level in her new-found race. Staudt is currently ranked third among Canadian women in the marathon and eighth in the world.

Strangely enough, she, like Roberts, was not an exceptional athlete coming out of high school. “I was good for my area,” she recalls, “but in terms of the whole province I was just your average runner. I made it to OFSAA in grade 13 in the 3,000 metres and I got that slightly blown away,” admits the foot-four footer, one hundred and five pound native of Windsor.

It wasn’t until that 3,000 that Staudt really began to train seriously. “Before that, I would start training for spring track when schools were out from March break, and when that was over, I’d stop again.” Staudt started with the 400 metres in grade nine and worked her way up to the 3,000-metre distance as they began to be introduced for girls over the next few years. “When I made it to OFSAA in grade 13, I figured, let see what I can do if I train all year round.”

That summer she joined the South Windsor Knights of Columbus Track Club, where she is still a member. Its coaches, Bob Mallinson and Emmy McBride, assisted University coach Dr. Michael Salter last fall.

Upon coming to the University, Staudt was impressed by Dr. Salter’s philosophy. “His attitude didn’t put emphasis on winning. He just wanted you to do your best as long as you gave one hundred percent,” explains Staudt.

“It’s nice not to have that kind of pressure. You don’t need it. We don’t have it, and yet we’ve done very well.”

Staudt won a bronze medal in the 3,500 metres at the OUAA finals in the fall of her first year. The time was 4:55. “The 3000 was my best event,” says Staudt, “but the field was better and I got fourth.” She captured the bronze for the 3,000 the next year, this time running 10:08.0.

She ran the same time and got the same position again the following year, also picking up a silver in the 5,000 in 16:48.

It was in that third year that things really began to click for Staudt. She ran cross-country for the first time and placed fourth at the Ontario Championships. Indoors, she broke 10 minutes for the 3,000, running 9:56. “It was one of the highlights of my career,” Staudt said.

The marathon is now Linda’s race

A half marathon (about thirteen miles) which Staudt ran that year began a chain of events that was to lead to her present status as a marathoner. “I won by about a minute, which was a real surprise,” Staudt admits. The race was part of a series sponsored by Avon, who awarded the Windsor runner a trip to Pasadena for a 30 kilometre (18.6 mile) run there.

“I started to train hard for that,” Staudt says, “hoping to just get a good time. I came in a very unexpected third.” The top five were invited to London, England to run a marathon. “My first thought when I came across the finish line was ‘oh no, now I have to train for a marathon,’” Staudt laughs. Her training resulted in a 2:37:39 time for the twenty-six mile, 385 yard distance, the seventh fastest time that any woman had run the race.

How much training does Staudt do? “Right now I’m running 75 to 80 miles a week,” Staudt says. “I run twice a day about three times a week, and for about 18 miles on Sunday.”

The marathon was her last race this year “has been by far the best. Every year I’ve managed to build a little on the year before. In fact, I never thought I would have trained as hard as I did this year.”

This year “has been by far the best. Every year I’ve managed to build a little on the year before. In fact, I never thought I would have trained as hard as I did this year.”

“Eventually I’ll get to a point where I’m not training as hard as I am now,” Staudt acknowledges. “But I think I’ll always run for my own enjoyment. Of course once you get over forty, there are all the Masters records to go after.”

One of the reasons Staudt likes running as a sport is that “it’s so easy to see your improvement. Your time improves or it doesn’t.” In some other sports it’s less concrete.” The petite Human Kinetics student finds the opportunities for travel her running has given her, “a good incentive. A trip to London helps motivate you to train. Also, going to meets like that, you know the competition will be high. You want to be really on top of it.”

Law A, Tecumseh claim intramural hockey titles

The Tortfeasors of Law A claimed supremacy in Division A men's hockey last Thursday with a thrilling 3-2 overtime victory over the Engineering Society A team.

Bobby Simpson poked a rebound past Engineering goalie Mark Eckart with just over two minutes gone in the overtime period to give Law the win.

Simpson had scored what appeared to be the winner in regulation when he beat Eckart on the short side to break a 1-1 deadlock with only 2:19 remaining in the game.

But the Engineering team pulled Eckart from the nets with 1:25 left and exactly one minute later Greg Simons took a pass from Kevin Parent and banged home the equalizer.

Parent scored the first-period Engineering goal, while Doug Walker got the opening goal for Law.

B league final

Tecumseh Chiefs took the Division B championship in men's intramural hockey with a hard-fought 2-1 win over MBA last Thursday night.

Dale Caverson started the scoring quickly for the Chiefs when he drove a slapshot from just inside the blue line past MBA goaltender Bill Boyce with just 2:25 gone in the first period.

Dan Fryia added what proved to be the winner later in the period before Tim Trotter netted the lone tally for the MBA just before the first intermission.

Law A, Tecumseh claim intramural hockey titles

The teams then played two full periods of close-checking, scoreless hockey with Tecumseh goaltender Sam Niccolata turning aside several testing drives in the latter stages of the game.

Jets win ball hockey

The Jets took the overall championship of men's intramural ball hockey with a convincing 8-3 win over the Nimrods in the final played March 19.

It was the second ball hockey championship in a row for the Jets who, with the retirement of 80 percent of their players this year, will have to rely on the recruiting abilities of Jim Weese and Rick Patterson in building another champion.

In the championship game, the Jets proved to be too much for the very tired Nimrods. Had it not been for some outstanding net work by Roland Schwalm of the Nimrods, the score could have been much higher. At the other end, Jet's goaltender Nick Pszeniczny played a steady game and kept the Nimrods at bay until the latter stages of the game.

For the Jets, it was Don Johnstone and Jimmy Weese with two goals apiece. Singles went to Tom Kirby, Rick Patterson, Mark Thorsch and Don Martin. For the Nimrods, it was Dave Sanders, Steve Pauley and Chris Mero.

The finest of the University's student-athletes and those who have made contributions to the benefit of sports at the University were rewarded for their excellence Tuesday night at the first annual Sports Awards and Recognition Banquet.

Although awards are handed out annually, it was the first time in many years that a banquet had been held for that purpose and the response showed clearly that athletics is alive and thriving at this institution.

Winners of the most prestigious awards the University offers, the President's Shield and the Banner Shield for outstanding male and female athletes of the year respectively, were Swimmer Lori Pages, the President's Shield, and Basketball Towers and Teresa McGee, who shared the Banner Shield last year with swimmer Lori Scott.

Staudt has a long list of achievements inside and outside the University, all of which can be found in the feature story on page nine of this paper. Among her laurels are 11 University of Windsor records and an eighth-place world ranking in the marathon. Her mileage around the world is not well documented outside of Windsor's sports community, being in the unusual sport of fencing, but his record indicates that he is more than deserving of the award. Three times in as many years he has won the OUAA sabre championship while leading his colleagues to the team title in that category. He also won the Wayne State Competition and Great Lakes Championship this year against world class fencers.

Korosec's accomplishments were no less prominent as he led the Lancers to their third straight OUAA western division title. The 6'7" centre was also named the OUAA west MVP and the OUAA co-MVP, both for the second straight year, and became the first Lancer ever to be named to the first all-Canadian basketball team at the national finals in March. Korosec led the nation in rebounding (14.7 per game) and field goal percentage (.666 percent) while averaging 19.9 points per game.

Other award winners and their accomplishments are listed below:

The Demarco Trophy -- awarded annually to the top male and female students who in their undergraduate years best combine athletic ability with scholastic achievements. Paul Roberts -- a fourth-year Human Kinetics student who holds 10 University of Windsor track records and currently ranked eighth among Canadian steeplechase performers while maintaining an A-average.

Jenny Pace -- a fourth-year Human Kinetics student who holds four University of Windsor field records including a fifth-place finish at the Canadian indoor championships in the shot put this year while maintaining a high academic average.

The Dave West Memorial Trophy -- presented annually to the outstanding male and female student-athletes. Cam Latava -- Lancer basketball statistician. Sue Hrycay -- Lan­cerette basketball manager.

The Most Valuable Participants Awards

Football -- Scott Exeary, a veteran of four seasons, third time a league all-star. Only Lancer to receive first-team honors this year. Led the nation twice in punting. Holds Lancer record with average of 25 yards per reception. Drafted this year by Edmonton Eskimos of CFL.

Lancer Basketball -- who else? Stan Korosec.

Lancer Hockey -- Goalstnder Don Johnson who many times held up in place of a porous defense. Finished with GAA of 4.98.

Lancer Fencing -- Peter Ott. Lancer Track and Field -- Andy Buckenham, only Lancer athlete to strike gold at the Ontario indoor final this year (in the 600 metres). Only athletes in country to qualify for three events at national indoor finals where he finished fifth in the 600 metres and sixth in the 600. Also won gold medal in 400 metres in outdoor OUAA final.

Lancerette Track and Field -- Jenny Pace, took third place in the OWIAA shot put and fifth at the national indoor meet while coaching other Lancer and Lancerette team members in the throwing events both indoor and outdoor.

Lancerette Swimming -- Gillian Stevens, gold medal winner in the 100 metre butterfly at the OWIAA meet and stalk-place finisher in that event at the CIAC.

Lancerette Basketball -- Kevin Towers and Teresa McGee, who finished one-two in the balloting for the OWIAA Tier II first all-star teams.

Lancerette Wrestling -- Den Brantagan, silver medal winner at the OUAA final and the CIAC final in only his second year of wrestling.

A Awards -- for contribution to athletics of U of Windsor: Tod Dorf, Ellie Sukunda, Mel Raskin, Nick Grabowski, Rob Bridge­man.

W Awards -- to all champions in league competition: Gillian Stevens, Rob Micheli, Coach Don Wilson (Swimming), Andy Buckenham, John Key, Paul Roberts, Coach D. M. Salter (Track and Field), Chris Heijji, Coaches Bill Miles and John Har­car (Golf), Peter Ott, Wayne Walck, Dave March, Ellie Sukunda (Fencing).

Scientific Fact: White Shirts Cause Coneheads went back to their other countrywide experiment participants and found the same type of thing was happening to a large percentage of them. Over six months of regular wearing of white shirts will cause this peculiar problem.

Experiments then removed the white shirts from the subjects and within one month the cone reverted back into the normal shape of the head. They then began giving the subjects small doses of white shirts at a time to build up an immunity and it was found to have significant effects on reversing the problem.

At the end of the six month period of testing with low level doses of white shirts the participants displayed no conehead symptoms. However, side effects were still prevalent in the form of black leather shoes and pinnockes.

The report, although it mentions no specific names, goes on to say that the participants in these experiments have since provided the basic groundwork for many of the past's best civil servants, professors, and MacDonald's employees.

The document also alluded to experiments showing how neckties caused claustrophobia in white mice and library personnel. However, it was unknown whether or not these facts could be related to the stigma of white shirt wearing.

Also in the 1950's report was the idea that tenure caused vegetation in professors over a period of ten years, but, according to the papers, that was still an idea that had to be further explored before any decisions could be made.

Politeness Helps

Tests conducted by the students of the psychology department yesterday showed that students in all departments worked better if they were exposed to at least ten minutes of kind words from their professors during each lecture. The tests further showed that 34% of the students tested would even return the compliments the professors gave them.

Universities, in the guise of attempting to find carcinogens for humans, are actually wiping out the rat population by cancer, charged a highly-placed source at the Humane Society. The Humane Society and other animal welfare organizations have been informed but refuse to take any action to protect the rats.

Reports have been issued from various researchers in the past few years on diet pop, bacon, coffee and other common household goods such as formaldehyde causing cancer in rats. The public has been led to believe that these results are applicable to humans and this application was the researchers' point.

However, no links have been found between rats and humans except for some common personality traits. The biologists have really been searching for a way to introduce cancer into the rat populations of the world. The source, who is in a top Humane Society office, wishes to remain anonymous at this time to protect her job. "My boss wouldn't like it that I've been looking through his files; he didn't hire me for my filing abilities."

She agreed to talk to us because of her concern for animals. "Rats are such cute, fuzzy little things with big, bright eyes . . . I just couldn't sit here and let them be murdered like that."

In "cancer research," many universities are common in many biological and medical journals.

The disease apparently is not as prevalent among other kinds of rats, according to researchers from our urban bureau their numbers still seem quite high.

Our source and a gentleman friend of hers who also prefers to remain anonymous at present plan to start a "Rescue the Rats" movement. "Once enough donations come in, we can really get going and save the rats from researchers."

Added her gentleman friend, "Rats are becoming a species in dangerous (sic). That can mess up the balance of nature. We want to make the world safe for rats, just like the Americans in World War I."

The organization has not been formally started due to the gentleman's legal problems and lack of community support. The founders are not discouraged, feeling that the main problem is lack of publicity. "Once people realize how the little darlings are being slaughtered, of course they'll want to help. This support is what we're counting on in our plans. We hope to take a world trip for the cause soon."

They hope to have all problems worked out in a few months, so that Rescue the Rats can get going. Meanwhile, research for cancer-causing agents continues with rats.

Look Like Orca?
Could Win A Trip

Do you or one of your friends look like The Lunch's dead pet fish, Orca? If so, you could win a whale of a prize in the ENQUIRER's Orca Look-Alike Contest.

We're searching the Detroit River region for the student who most closely resembles The Lunch's mascot. And when we find that person, we'll award him with a free trip down the Amazon River deep in the uncharted cannibal head-hunter infested rain forests of Brazil with a one week supply of oxygen, and publish their picture in a future edition of Aquariums.

To enter our Orca Look-Alike contest, just send us a photo in which you most closely resemble him.

Our editors will examine all entries and choose the person who, in their opinion, looks most like Orca. That person will be declared our winner and we'll send them their ticket and a dozen bags full of oxygen for their journey. The decision of the judges will be subject to the approval of the Ministry of Fisheries and Recreation.

Be sure to include your name, address and phone number when you mail your entry to:

Orca Look-Alike, IRATIONAL ENQUIRER, Knossos, Crete. If you wish to have your photo returned, please include a stamped, self-addressed, waterproof envelope.

Hurry - all entries must reach us no later than March 2, 1981.

Experiments undertaken by the University of Windsor through the human kinetics faculty have resulted in abnormal sexual patterns in many varsity athletes, the ENQUIRER has learned.

According to an administration source, the university tested several experimental techniques over the past academic year designed to alter the brainwaves of Lancer athletes to reduce their interest in sexual activity. The feeling was that this would in turn focus the athletes' attention on their particular sport.

"This kind of thing has been going on for years," the source stated in an exclusive interview last week. "Back in the sixties the faculty performed studies involving various hallucinogenic drugs to achieve the same effect, but they found that after frequent use the athletes became so detached they had to be sent to St. Clair College."

Although not completely successful, this year's tests have already shown results. One girlfriend of an unidentified varsity athlete claimed she noticed changes as early as September of 1980.

"Up until September our sex life was great," the girl said. "But it slowly tapered off to the point where we engaged in sex only three or four times a night. And that's certainly not enough to satisfy me."

Yet other information gathered by the ENQUIRER indicates that while some athletes slowed down, others began behaving in an unusual manner before, during and after the sexual act.

Another athlete's young mistress confided that after her boyfriend, a member of the football team, achieved orgasm, he would, "hold me above his head, dance around the room, then spike me onto the floor."

"And as if that wasn't bad enough," she continued, "he then insisted on going for the extra point."

Other incidents include one athlete who installed a red light over the bed and hired a friend to judge 'scores', and a track star who found he could prolong the sex act for no longer than 10 seconds.

"Apparently the brain becomes confused and jumbles the two activities - sex and sports," the administration source said. "After we learned what was happening, we discontinued our tests on wrestlers and fencers."

The source further stated that Lancetette athletes had not been involved in the experiments since overdosage in sexual activity had never been a problem with them. However, he did indicate that tests were being made in order to coordinate scheduled games with those 'heavy days'.

Hundreds of ownerless limbs lie in want of their owners.

Out of the hundreds of students who were killed last week in the terrible cave-in at the University Centre, only Norman Greenbaum lived to tell the grisly story.

Hundreds were trapped in the student's pub and the games room last week when a delegation of Overeaters Anonymous crowded in to the Speaker's Pit near the vending machines in the Centre's cafeteria causing the floor in that area to collapse.

Norman recalls he was in the middle of his third Bock Knees of the afternoon when he first noticed the ceiling moving towards him.

"I didn't think anything of it," remembers Norman, "it often does that to me around this time of day. The walls sort of weave and the floor gets a little shaky. It just didn't strike me as odd that the ceiling was falling on me."

University security arrived on the scene about half an hour after the cave-in but were unable to pull anyone out of the rubble. They were repulsed by the victims, both in the pub and the games' room, who refused to leave their beer and video games.

According to Security Chief Grant McEchcall, "We couldn't do a damn thing. Every time we'd drag some kid out he'd yell 'leave my beer alone you guys' and run back in. Crazy punks."

Mr. Greenbaum, who barely managed to crawl out with a broken arm and two sprained knees but carrying his drink with his good arm while he squirmed through the jagged debris toward the light, says he didn't really want to leave but if he didn't get home by supper that night, his wife said she'd kill him. "When my wife says 'be home', you get home. You've never felt a right hook from her. She would've killed me if I had stayed in the pub."

Pogy Stanton, the manager of the pub, was not in the basement at the time but arrived soon after the accident. When questioned by the ENQUIRER she could only stutter, "Get my beer out of there, please. Police had to lead her from the scene, glassy eyed and still mumbling incoherently.

Games' room manager, Brick Dodder, was killed instantly when the Close Encounters video game fell on top of him. Two students playing the game at the time refused to help because to do so would have set the game off balance and they would have lost their free game.

Miraculously, the radio station next to the pub was left unscathed. Radio manager Grant Jelly said it must have been because they had God and the CRTC on their side.

Janitors finished cleaning up the mess yesterday. Some of the extra limbs found in the debris could not be matched to any of the bodies recovered so they will be sent off to the biology department for experimental purposes.

Norman Greenbaum says he hopes to get back to the pub as soon as his wife releases him from curfew. Although confined to a wheelchair now for life he hopes to begin drinking his week's supply of free liquor, courtesy of the pub, as soon as he can, provided the glass and cement can be sifted out of it.
A man claiming to be Adolf Hitler was found in a section of the tunnels under the University Centre at about 1:00 am last Friday morning. He had apparently been living in a janitor's closet for several years, surviving by making occasional raids on the vending machines in the Centre during the small hours.

Said one surprised Canteen of Canada official, "That explains why the machines had to be restocked so often." Nutrition experts are examining the man to learn how he could possibly still be alive.

"Hitler" was discovered by University of Windsor Security Guard F. Fosdick, a former police detective. "I was supposed to meet some of the other guys over at the Donut Place on Wyandotte, but I needed some money so I was going to the security office to get one of the lost wallets," he explained.

The security office is actually located in the basement of Windsor Hall and cannot be reached from the tunnels under the Centre but Fosdick said he was unaware of this. "I'm sure they used to be connected," he told the ENQUIRER.

The security officer's wanderings were interrupted by a commotion caused by four drunken punk rockers who had wandered down into the tunnels after a concert in Ambassador Auditorium. "Hitler" saw them scrawling swastikas on the walls and chose that moment to declare himself as the Fuhrer of the Third Reich.

"I heard a commotion," Fosdick said, "and came around a corner to see these four punks beating up on a little guy with a mustache. I shot three of them and knocked the other one out with the butt of my revolver." At this point, "Hitler mistook Fosdick for a storm trooper and ordered him to "shoot the other traitor to the Fatherland."

"He seemed pretty flaky, so I gave him the butt end of my gun too," explained Fosdick.

Hitler had previously been thought to have committed suicide in the closing days of World War II with his mistress Eva Braun, but this man claims that both of them escaped through a secret passage in the Fuehrerbunker. "I've been wandering through tunnels ever since," he said. "Eva, the little pervert, left me and ran off with a gopher somewhere underneath Spain."

Asked if he had any knowledge of the fates of other high ranking Nazis, he responded, "I lived with Bormann for a time in a wine cellar in Connecticut, but he kept getting drunk on the wine and smashing things. I was afraid he'd give us away so I left." F.B.I. agents and police are now conducting a house to house search of all wine cellars in Connecticut and surrounding states.

At this very moment, doctors, dental and fingerprint experts as well as several gurus and tea leaf readers are examining "Hitler" to determine if he is indeed the man he claims to be. He is being kept in the old district court and gaol on Sandwich Street, which is being turned into a maximum security prison.

The man has already attracted a number of celebrities to Windsor, as well as several men believed to be agents of the Israeli Mossad. Noted Nazi hunters Simon Wiesenthal and Ladislav Farago are rumored to be intown and Norman Mailer was spotted chowing down on some gyros in Pita at Olympic Sub on Wyandotte. The author of biographies of Marilyn Monroe and killer Gary Gilmore apparently wants to do a book on Hitler. Mailer will be competing with representatives of Doubleday and McClelland and Stewart, both of whom are prepared to offer huge advances for Hitler to write his story himself. "He's already had one best-seller," said Jack McClelland, "Mein Kampf."

David Frost and Barbara Walters are both seeking exclusive television rights.

Once a happy-go-lucky teenager, with dreams of “making it big” some day, Arnold Kenny is now a pathetic, disgusting creature living the existence of a parasite with no meaning left in life for him.

Three years ago Arnold, a pale, sickly, diseased looking boy, but otherwise considered good-looking, was shot in the spine by police after holding up a liquor store. That shot severed his spinal cord and made him completely paralysed for the rest of his life.

But Arnold does not hold any blame against the police. It was dark and they acted on impulse, he says of the incident, understandably. I’m sure they’re very sorry for it.

Arnold spent a year and a half in a coma after that from convulsions to the head he suffered upon falling after being shot. His parents prayed daily for him by his bedside asking God to heal their little boy. Then one day, while his parents were kneeling in prayer in his room, his doctor came into the room with the news that Arnold also had cancer.

Arnold regained a few weeks later, his doctors saying they thought it was probably due to the changing body chemistry going on inside Arnold caused by the tumours eating away at his insides.

Arnold, now 27 years old, has no future to face at all. He is confined to his bed with IV tubes stuck all over his body and his parents changing his bed for him twice a day and feeding him three times a day.

Arnold is depressed. He’s only got 8 more months to live, with the doctors removing another dead part of his body almost every day. He needs someone to talk to. Wouldn’t you like to write to Arnold?

Doctors advised his parents a year ago to shoot him and put him out of his misery but his parents kept hoping for some kind of miracle. Arnold has been looked at by many different kinds of doctors—witch doctors, faith healers, quacks, and even real ones—which should in itself be interesting enough to make you want to write to him. So far, though, nothing has made any difference. His parents are placing their last hopes on the ENQUIRER’s readership to help pull Arnold through.

His parents say he just lays in bed watching television all day while the drool runs down his chin but they promise that if anyone writes to him, they’ll make sure he answers all of his letters.

Won’t you please write to Arnold Kenny, to make one of God’s more unfortunate creations a little happier? If you feel it in your heart, please write: Arnold Kenny, Box 02, Bricklin, Ontario. Please add $3.00 with it so Arnold will be able to buy stamps to reply to you.

Shocked by the news of the Reagan attempted assassination, this little lady armed herself to the teeth hoping to enlist as a secret service agent. However, upon reaching the capitol city she was informed that her height and weight would create somewhat of a problem. President's Mother’s Secret

In one of her very rare appearances before the press, University President Mervin Crankshaft's mother, Bertha, revealed in an interview with the Irrational Enquirer last Sunday, the trials and tribulations of her son, Mervin, the profound misery he has endured since the time of his near miscarriage nearly 60 years ago. Inviting our reporter into her home Mrs. Crankshaft sat in a room fondly filled with pictures of the president, ready to reveal to us, and to you, the secret past of president Crankshaft, a past which has been kept so carefully guarded for so many years.

Bertha: Nothing gets past you, sonny. Now can I start from the beginning?
Irr. Enq: I'd rather you didn't.
Bertha: Suck a pickle. Here it is, the whole awful truth. You see, my Mervin was a very good little boy even though he grew up in a bad neighborhood. Those Stephensons lived right around the corner, and by Randy Mandy and Ernie Wernst

‘If The Lunch Wants Blood, I'll Give Them Blood!’

Bertha: Well sir, it's only been very recently that Mervin permanently lost his memory forever, and so he'll never be able to tell the world all this himself, seeing that he can't remember any of it and all. And someone has to do it.

Irr. Enq: Tell us, Bertha, do you recall how the president lost his memory in the first place?
Bertha: Well, I guess I should start at the beginning...
Irr. Enq: Please don't bother.
Bertha: Oh, okay. Then we'll start from about two months ago.
Irr. Enq: Much better.
Bertha: It all started... um... I mean, two months ago, uh, when my little boy was quite depressed about some rude articles written by that darn student newspaper, The Lunch. And as if that wasn't enough, one day Dr. Polo Cassini accidentally poured coffee all over his favourite Bobo... .
Irr. Enq: His what??
Bertha: Bobo... you know... his teddy bear. Mervy was so upset that he locked himself in his office inconsolable. His secretary heard his poor little whimpers, and then suddenly he screamed, "If The Lunch wants blood, I'll give them blood!

She broke through the door and found him standing on the ledge outside his window, but when she tried to stop him... she reached out to hold him steady where he was... she accidentally by accident shoved him off. Well, my poor little darling glided around the Tower a few turns with his arms outstretched like a big bird... everyone said it was just a beautiful sight... then he sort of plummeted... ...

Irr. Enq: And then?
Bertha: Stop interrupting. I'm getting to that. Now where was I? Oh... he landed in one of the little trees near his office and just hung there for twenty minutes or so by his knees. Finally someone called the janitors, but as they were lifting him out of the tree, they dropped him... on his head - an eight foot fall. I can sympathize with them though - Lord knows how many times I dropped him on his head when he was a baby.
Irr. Enq: So that's how he got amnesia?

President's mother, Bertha, holding the President's bum. No wonder the President is so messed up. And then to make him wear a dress! How cruel.
their little girl was a holy terror — always asking Mervin for money, and if he didn't give her whatever she asked for she'd start taking his toys away from him. We always told Mervin never to hit a girl. She works for the government now, of course.

Bertha: Yes. He had a terrible time in school too. We couldn't afford his text books or even a decent set of clothes for him. He had to go to school wearing his brother's sash and diapers. As you can imagine, some of the other children made rude faces at him sometimes.

Irr. Enq: How horrendous!
Bertha: Actually, that experience molded and shaped him... it took his bare flesh and bones and twisted and forged him into what he is today.

Irr. Enq: Oh? And what's that?
Bertha: Why, only the most feared and dreaded president in the system. A president who the students whisper about in awe, a president of whom his staff speaks of, with glowing admiration... well... he was when he had Bobo by his side. That darn Cassini! Now, (sniff) he's just a mindless vegetable. Now he's really my little pumpkin... Ah, speaking of which, hello son...

Mervin: Son? Where?
Bertha: You, my little dumpling! But I've told you never to come into the room with muddy shoes! And you've gotten your good pants dirty.

Mervin: What pants?
Bertha: I didn't raise you to be a little tramp. I've struggled and slaved for you for years to get you through college just so you could have that silly president's job someday. Oh, if your poor father could see you now... I work my fingers to the bone and what do I get?

Mervin: (with a complacent, vacuous smile) Honey fingers?
Bertha: Don't you ever talk to your mother like that!

Mervin: What mother?
Bertha: Why, you little... (smaaaaaaaak!)

Mervin: (flies across the room and into the wall, struggling to his feet in a dazed condition) Mommy, where's Bobo?

Bertha: Son! You got your damn memory back! Praise the Lord!

Mervin: Where's that rotten Cassini? I'll kill 'im.

Irr. Enq: And so another one of these unbelievably stupid, insipid, and totally moronic hard luck stories ends in a sickeningly saccarine, equally unbelievable, miracle. God, I'm so happy, I could... Oh, by the way, I almost forgot...

Bertha, tell us, what were those Lunch stories about... the ones that caused Dr. Crankshaft all that pain?

Bertha: Oh those. They were just silly little stories about how Mervin had to ask the students for more money again. That Stephenson girl still won't leave him alone. I don't know why she... wait. Mervin... don't do that to the reporter... Mervin... put him down! Mervin!

Another painful event in President Crankshaft's childhood. The President was forced to go to school wearing only this outfit.
Mrs. Emma Childbeater, a fine American citizen, recently won $900,000 in a lottery. This wonderful woman is planning to start an organisation to assist homeless young men. She also has a fascinating collection of devices in her dungeon.

Old Woman
Rejoices in Youth

Mrs. Emma Childbeater, a life-long recluse, was recently besieged by screaming relatives and friends when she presented her winning lottery ticket to the bank teller this week.

Now Mrs. Childbeater is $900,000 richer but even more of a recluse than before. She wouldn't even talk to the ENQUIRER at first but finally agreed after three weeks of our harassment.

Said Mrs. Childbeater, "This money will help to add to my collection of whips, chains, and handcuffs." Mrs. Childbeater has one of the finest privately-owned groups of torture instruments in the nation.

Her collection includes some objects originally owned by her hero and inspiration, the Marquis de Sade. She also has a bed of nails for every guest room in her house, along with several Iron Ladies for her infrequent visitors to relax in.

Mrs. Childbeater took the ENQUIRER on a tour of her humble little cottage, pointing out her other collections of antiques and butterflies. Pointing to one small bronze statuette Mrs. Childbeater broke into tears and told us how much she missed the company who used to sit in her parlour Sunday mornings for tea. She says it has been many years since those days.

Breaking down completely, she recounted to the reporter how the young men used to come out of the woodwork of her cottage, just to be near her, and her iron maidens, and whips. Her hands shook as she reminisced about those times. Changing the subject quickly we asked her what she would do with her new money. Mrs. Childbeater announced that she would begin adding to her collection again. Her eyes brightened and her hands stopped trembling at the thought.

Mrs. Childbeater then led us into the cottage's cellar where a number of former young men hung by their wrists from the ceiling fastened with chains, or sat in stocks or pillories.

After we had seen the whole house, Mrs. Childbeater offered us some of her homemade cookies and tea, which she had made herself from the hemlock and nightshade which grow in the forest near her house. "The young men just loved my little nightcaps," she sobbed. "Every day at 4:00 sharp, we'd have tea."

Besides increasing her collection, Mrs. Childbeater said she hopes to establish a foundation for young men with no homes. "Since this money came from the public, I feel that it's my duty to help people with it, rather than using it just for my personal pleasure."

Mrs. Childbeater gave us some of her preserves to take with us, and a box of her home-made cheese and preserves. The trip also included a short tour of her dungeon where a number of former young men hung by their wrists from the ceiling fastened with chains, or sat in stocks or pillories.

Playing a little tennis or jogging to keep in shape? Well hold onto your runners until you hear the report of the Federal Commission on Sports and Alcoholism.

According to the 10-page report released last week, which listed statistics compiled by the commission over the past 25 years, physical activity is directly related to alcohol consumption.

The study stated that each five minutes of exercise develops the need for one beer (or equivalent liquor) in the human body. As a result, those who involve themselves in physical activity, particularly athletes, are susceptible to alcoholism.

The report further stated that 99.9 percent of all athletes polled had at one time in their lives consumed more than three alcoholic beverages at one sitting, and that these 'binges' almost always followed athletic endeavour.

A similar poll taken at the University of Windsor over the past week by the ENQUIRER confirmed many of the report's results.

Some 98 percent of varsity athletes at the University reported an uncontrollable urge to consume alcohol following games and practices. A similar number stated that many times they had partaken of the spirits to excess.

Pollsters also reported some abuse by coaches and assistants, but this was attributed to the pressures of the job since they never became involved in physical activity of any sort.

For the weekend warrior, it may mean that you're actually killing yourself with all that exercise. But all reports indicate it is a painless death.
Woman Gives Miraculous Birth

A biology student at St. Clair College will be remembered in history for bearing the most children at the same time and having them all live.

Mrs. Arlene Simcoe and her husband announced the births of their seven baby daughters late last night. All seven girls are doing well with each gaining weight at an amazing speed, sat the doctors.

Although they are still a mere 6 ounces each, their parents are waiting until they've reached a plump 5 pounds before they take them home.

The doctors did not expect the last child born to live, as there were a few complications. "The last one was breach. Plus it was a blue baby, and also after the first six made it out the mother started haemorraging. Mrs. Simcoe also had a bad reaction to the local anesthetic we gave her and suffered two massive coronaries during the birthing process. But we all made it through all right," recounted one of the doctors.

However, Mrs. Simcoe refused to see reporters directly afterwards on account of the terrible stretch marks left her by the ordeal.

Mr. Simcoe, waiting eagerly outside the door of the maternity ward, was elated with the news that he was the father of septuplets. So elated, in fact, that he hired his girlfriend, who was waiting with him, immediately as a full time nanny for the children.

Up until nine months ago the Simcoe's had given up on ever having children. Two years after their marriage Mr. Simcoe, who worked at a nuclear power plant, found out he was sterile. Mrs. Simcoe had her uterus removed a year later on the advice of a quack. They knew their chances at conception were not good.

However, it seems that Mrs. Simcoe had had some experiences with some new kinds of fertility drugs supplied by her biology professors. It seems that the mischievous men of wisdom were slipping the hormones into Mrs. Simcoe's coffee while she wasn't looking, to study the effects they would have on her.

Now the Simcoe's are wondering where they are going to put all of the new little Simcoes. "They had to put them in the janitor's closet at the hospital because they ran out of room. Now what are we going to do? We don't have a janitor or even a closet," sighed Mr. Simcoe.

The mayor of the St. Clair county has since told the couple that the county is willing to donate to them an old fire-house that is no longer in use. Besides giving the Simcoe's a place large enough for their family, the mayor also thought the kids would have fun crawling around the high places and sliding down the pole. The building still smells a little of diesel fuel but the mayor was quite confident that the Simcoe's would get used to it after a while.
Beer: Could It Be A Cure-All?

Simply incredible, were some of the words used to describe the conclusions of a fascinating new study just conducted by scientists all over the world and assisted by the bartenders from those respective countries.

What everyone is marvelling at is the fact that beer might be proven a cure-all for every disease known to man—a panacea for the evils of the world.

The hypothesis came up in a discussion of scientists in Munich, Germany at an Oktoberfest. All around them they saw only healthy people and they wondered if that had anything to do with the beer they were drinking so they began experimenting with it. After a while other countries asked to be part of the experiment too.

For two years now the scientists have been studying beer and watching its effects on the ill and the healthy.

One of the scientists, Dr. Maurice Winkle, said he hoped their findings would substantiate their theory of beer because the liquid is cheap and available to everyone, and it tasted so much better than cod liver oil.

"I've known many a brave lad," said Dr. Winkle, "who spent months at a time in a pub drinking down the malt, myself included, and I've never been sick a day in my life."

Dr. Winkle agrees with the other scientists in the idea that it is most likely the alcoholic content, if anything, in the beer which kills any germs in the human body. Another possibility is the somnambulistic tendency of hops, an ingredient of beer. The thought was that perhaps the hops slowed everything in the body down to a speed so slow that disease couldn't disturb anything so laid back as a drunken human.

However, the tests are by no means completed yet. The scientists say it will take a few more years of testing beer and watching each other for the effects. But you know that when we get the final conclusions to this question, you'll be the first to know.

People smile and tell you you're the lucky one,
But we've just begun
I think I'm gonna buy a gun
And even though I ain't got money
I can still get my face on national television

Professors Buying Essays

A source with a source inside Windsor Hall Tower revealed to the ENQUIRER late last week that a number of professors have been put on probation by the city's police department for involvement in a massive essay smuggling ring.

Told the informer, the professors would purchase essays from mail-order supply outlets and substitute them for the students' papers when they were handed in. The informer related many instances when the paper he received back from his professor was of much lower quality than the one he had handed in. Subsequently the informer would find a mark to match this lower form of literary laureate.

The informer also said many of his friends had noticed the same things happening to them—the papers they were getting back from the professors were quite awful and not the ones they were handing in.

These students are now forming an organisation to help other students who find themselves in the same position. Their only worry is that the stigma of these bad marks will not prevent anyone from coming forward.

This is Edward Paul Chant, editor of that wild newspaper, The Lunch. EP, as they fondly call him, is one of the many literary bodies wandering around the campus. EP hopes this soon to be released fully coloured poster will be a boost to his career. Many copies have been ordered already.
Foreign Diet Plan Eats The Fat Away in Minutes

Pills Pare Away Plumpness

Artist's conception
by Laurie Berga in "I lost 100 pounds in a month!"

Yes this amazing quote is definitely true. Mrs. Marilyn Le Livre was introduced to a miraculous new protein diet only one month ago and she has had some obvious results.

"I've tried everything to slim down. Starvation diets, liquid diets, sugarless diets, you name it. But I've never been able to stick to one long enough to lose those few extra pounds."

This remarkable new diet consists of only one regulation: You must eat six square meals per day.

Now we know all you girls (and guys) are looking at yourself and saying "How can anyone lose these extra inches by eating six meals per day?"

Well, all you have to do is take one little pill and 'presto'. No, it isn't a diet pill, at least not in the conventional form. No drugs.

A scientist in India has come up with a way to get a single tapeworm larva into a capsule. You simply swallow the capsule after each meal and let the worm do its thing. It consumes all of the food intake and 'away go your rolls.'

We talked to Dr. Hezend, chief of medical research at India general hospital, to get first hand information on this incredible pill. No one could understand Hezend, so we had to wait for a diplomat from the Canadian embassy to translate for us.

"You only need one. Two and they would fight over the food. No don't take two."

When asked if it was safe for a human being to actually swallow a capsule containing a larva of one of the most feared pestilences of mankind, he replied, "Sure it is safe, and they are easily removed. The only draw back is that you must come to our clinic here in India.

So all of you who feel you could "lose a few", contact Dr. Hezend, who will set the cost, depending on how much weight you want to lose and what kind of parasite would do the best job.

We all wish Mrs. Le Livre luck on her trip to India next week.

Do you ever get the feeling you get more attention than the rest of the students in the class? Is your Prof. attentive to more than your academic needs? To find out how you score, answer yes or no to the following questions:

1. Do you get the distinct feeling, that the little voice whispering answers in your ear during exams isn't your guardian angel?

2. Are you a deaf and dumb student, and if so, has your Prof. ever asked you to his/her office for an oral exam?

3. Has the prof. ever given you a rose, box of candy or small foreign car for no apparent reason?

4. Did the Prof. ever tell you his/her office hours were from 10 p.m. to 8 a.m.?

5. Does the Prof. close the office door and bolt it with a safety chain during your interviews?

6. Does he/she have a mirror on the ceiling over their desk?

7. Did you get an A+ on that essay you never handed in?

8. Were you an F average student before your zits started clearing up, or you started filling out your designer jeans?

9. Does your Prof. stumble over words or drool at all when he/she looks at you?

10. Has a Prof. ever asked you to accompany him/her to an overnight speaking engagement in another city "because he/she needs someone to turn the pages"?

11. If your Prof. is in Comm. Studies, has he/she ever asked you to star in a private production?

12. Has a Prof. of yours ever thrown darts at a picture of their spouse in your presence?

13. Does your Prof. ever sit on your lap when he/she lectures?

14. Has he/she suddenly moved next door?

15. Has your Prof. ever driven up to the bus stop where you were waiting and asked "want some candy little darling?" (in a husky voice).

If you answered yes to 8 or less, be careful. If you answered yes to all of them, get out of town. If you didn't answer yes to any of them, forget it — Henry the 8th wouldn't date you.

What Do The Stars Hold in the Future For You?

General

Your most famous comrade-in-arms is, of course, Adolph Hitler who stated many times throughout his life that, indeed, the Aryan people were his favourite kind of folks. Birds of a feather, as they say...

Because of their fiery natures, Ariens were the originators of the term "burn-outs" which referred to their heated nature which is also used sometimes to describe dogs and cats “in season”. You will often be observed bursting out in song in the most unusual places with Foreigner’s “Hot Blooded”. Places such as public swimming pools, dressing rooms, and the school cafeteria.

You have a personality which will get you a good number of spectators in your life time. No one provides as entertaining an evening as you, although your dates may not appreciate the energy with which you throw yourself into those late-night street fights. Just as well — you’re better off without those deadbeats anyway.

Business

The job world looks very active for you this month. The stock yards are the place for you and you could wear off that extra energy by punching out a side of beef while you’re there.

However, if dead, filthy, bloody, corrupting, putrid food turns you off you might try fire-fighting. Either that or arson. No one loves a good marshmallow roast like you do. Many an enterprising Aries has made his fortune through fires. One wonders if Nero and Charles II of England weren’t perhaps born under the Ram.

Doors of opportunity will open before you, especially around the middle of the month. You may consider this as an invitation to become a milkman or a postman, but if you do, watch out for indiscreet propositions from the opposite sex. Spring is in the air and reputations could be thrown to the wind, or out for the count.

Write a novel, right a wrong, pet a cat, pet a friend, befriend a cat. You might think about investing in a liquor store, seeing as how the one down the block from you relies mainly on your money already to keep it running.

Money

Money will only be as far for you as the next street corner this month. You will find many people eager to give you generous financial assistance when you’re barely left with the shirt on your back.

However, beware of triple Cancers for they will only tend to eat into your resources, your refrigerator, your beer supply, your sanity.

Watch out for unwise investments within the next three weeks. The Moon is conjunct Uranus in the eighth house which may do wonders for your love life but you won’t get lucky on the stock market at all.

Canadian Tire money will be at a premium soon and you know it, which explains why you have been stuffing it all under your mattress for the last two years. The trick now is to find the right bank to invest it in...

Land is a good investment at this time and Florida is such a wonderful place right now. How about that little dream cottage right on the edge of a nice big swamp, eh?

Romance

Fur will fly this month and you’ll be standing there with whip and chains in hand making sure it does. But words don’t come easily to you — probably because no one wants to speak to you — and you know intuitively that actions speak louder than words anyway. In fact, they usually end up screaming.

Let your lover do “interesting” things to your bald spot, take up a musical instrument, get a ouija board, are you bored? Do you sit on a board? Do you like sleeping on boards? With nails in it?

These urges may be alleviated by concentrating more on those essays that were due last week, Lawrence Welk music, antibiotics, moving back in with mom and dad, taking a rest from that burlap underwear...

If there is no special love interest in your life right now forget it because no one at all finds you interesting. Try taking root with a Taurus or vegging out in a dark corner by yourself. You’ll respect yourself more for it in the long run.

Watch our for passing fads this month. You may feel the sudden urge for orange velour sports’ coats, frisbees, old Bubble Puppy albums, peppermint schnapps and Old Bushmills, midgets... These are unnatural attractions merely brought on by your passing Moon in the first house. You just better hope no one saw you do that.

'I Could See My Body Sitting At The Desk'

by
Lori Stumpwater

Out of body experiences can be fascinating. Observe this woman above with the split personality. Life is amazing.

"It's like entering another dimension — a world without space or time, a place of light and sound. Follow the guidepost around the next corner to...

...It's really weird," says University of Windsor bio-chemistry student I. M. Spaced, describing his out-of-body experiences.

The experiences can occur any time or place; there seems to be nothing special triggering them. "I can be sitting in my class one minute and the next thing I know is I'm going down a tunnel. I'm trying to get to the end of the tunnel; there's a light down there. Then a voice says 'No, it's not his time yet,' and -- zap -- I'm back in class."

Spaced is a graduate student, doing his major research on the effects for rabbits of various plants they normally shun. "The plants are generally mild hallucinogens giving pretty interesting results," he explains. "None of them are toxic. I'm not the type to ever kill a rabbit."

Recalled the delicate-looking, meticulously dressed student, "The incidents started after a rather disappointing experiment. I fed the rabbits a little bit of something a friend sent me from India. He said the heads of the latest sect there — the Lucinsksydiamondskevala — use it all the time, and it clears and purifies them.

"It didn't have much effect on the bunnies. They just kept on hopping."

Spaced's first "trip" took place the same day as his disappointing rabbit experience. "I was trying to analyze what was left of the stuff while I was having my veggies for lunch, but I couldn't find it anywhere. Then, all of a sudden, I was floating in the air in the lab. I could see my body sitting at the desk, but I wasn't in it."

"I went floating off through the Windsor Hall basement and got lost. Just when I was beginning to panic — would I ever get out of there, I felt like a rat in a maze — I was back in my body in the lab."

The experiences since then have been much less frightening. "It's really peaceful, like mellow. If the first time was like Purgatory, since then it's been like Paradise."

Spaced's studies have been affected by his experience, but he seems unworried. "I'm thinking of switching my major to American literature of the late '60s and early '70s. Timothy Leary has a lot to say to me. (Leary is best remembered as the "acid priest" to the Vietnam generation.)"

"Religion has become more important to me too. It's as if I've been touched by Zeus."

Spaced is part of a small University of Windsor group of practicing Greek god worshipers. They have a 3-day feast once a month dedicated to Zeus, Bacchus, and Eros.

"My experiences are just like those of the Greek epic heroes. It might be frightening at first but I feel society would be better if everyone had these trips."

"I think everyone should have this chance that I've had. The chance to seek out new worlds, to explore strange new lands, to boldly go where no man has gone before..."

Your IQ Too High?

Want a lower IQ? Scientists say that excessive amounts of hours spent listening to power rock music will do that.

Scientists cited bands such as Van Halen, Captain and Tennille, Jermaine Jackson, and Rush have been scientifically proven to cause lower IQ's in rats. However, the positive side of this is that scientists have also shown people with high IQ's to live shorter lives than average people because of the stress involved with being a genius.

Financial misunderstanding causes overcharging

by Laurel Brandt

Does your tuition bill seem a little too high, even in these days of inflation? The Cashier's Office, due to computer problems, has sent out a number of incorrect bills, mainly to students in the Faculty of Education or those with a program requiring the Faculty of Education or the Faculty of Arts. This caused overcharging, some students have reported an overload schedule. Students were then required to see an Education administrator for a letter explaining the situation and take that and the bill to the Cashier's where corrections were made.

Difficulties also occurred with students whose program required them to take an extra course for one year. For example, some third year Social Work students, who took six courses to fulfill their program requirements were charged for an extra course. According to Schiller, these bills are not really mistakes on the part of the Cashier's Office. He is also concerned with a misunderstanding over credits and changes between the Education administration and the Cashier's Office, many students were overcharged.

Statistics Canada wants all of you this summer.

What will you be doing this summer? Whether you’ll be working, taking courses or travelling, Statistics Canada will be making a special effort to count you in the June 3 Census. It is estimated that 119,000 Canadians between the ages of 20 and 24 were not counted in the 1976 Census; many of these were university students.

Two per cent of the overall Canadian population was not counted in 1976. A post-census study showed that persons between the ages of 10 and 24 were the ones most often missed.

The transience of many university students during summer months is a major reason for the large undercount. Statistics Canada, the federal government department in charge of conducting the June 3 Census, plans to reduce the number of missed university students this year with a variety of contingency enumeration methods.

Lloyd Nieman, Senior Project Officer for Regional Operations, says: “Students living with their parents or those with their own place of residence do not pose an enumeration problem. But students who alienate themselves for the summer often assume that they will be included on the questionnaire at their usual place of residence by their parents or room-mate. Although they should be included on that particular questionnaire, they often are not. So we will make special efforts to ensure that no one is missed.”

Questionnaires will be delivered to work camps in remote areas, summer camps and resorts where students work. To count persons travelling, we will visit campsites in provincial and national parks, tourist homes, hotels, motels and motels on Census Day, June 3. University residents will be enumerated and students overseas can be enumerated on the questionnaire available in Canadian embassies and consulates.

Persons in these situations will complete a special census questionnaire. Checking of these questionnaires following the Census ensures that persons temporarily absent are included at their usual place of residence.

An accurate census count is important not only to planners and policy-makers but to university students as well. Federal and provincial government financing of educational institutions and employment initiatives is frequently done on a per capita basis. Programs designed for this age group are often under-funded because of the undercount.

During the 1980 Census, 1,400 university students made more than 16 per cent of the 23,000 requests for information at Statistics Canada’s nine regional reference centres.

At the University of Alberta, the population research lab uses census data for such student projects as assessing a community health unit or studying household and income data in major cities.

David Brown, assistant professor at McGill University in Montreal, says the School of Urban Planning has used census information to work out a block-by-block study of traffic volume flow and its effect on various city neighbourhoods. Special tabulations of 1971 and 1976 Census information such as age, education, automobiles, age of housing and income were put together by Statistics Canada. Brown says: “I think it was very good service and I was pleased that it could be done at a reasonable cost.”

A task force has been formed to help show university students how to use census data. Two brochures on how to use the microfiche files and computer storage files (CANSIM) are currently available and more brochures are planned, according to Statistics Canada.

More new directors

On March 24, 1981, Social Science students elected a new president and vice-president for their society.

Taking over the presidency on April 7 will be Joe Pavelich. Pavelich is a third year Geography student. He was involved in the society this year as Social-Internal Director.

The new vice-president is Tom Waud, a third year Public Administration student. Waud was also involved in this year’s society as the promotion coordinator.

Both are very enthusiastic about their new positions and are looking forward to the coming year.

Equal opportunities, a myth for women Profes

by Kishor Oza and CUP

You say it's law - Men and women must land equal opportunities. However, the actual situation is quite different than what you may think or believe.

As Dr. Kishor Oza, the former University of Lethbridge Molliecut news editor in Hong Kong,

The government of Hong Kong has indicated that it will establish a new committee to look at cases of Hong Kong students in Britain who are seriously affected by inconsistencies in foreign financial aid.

Hong Kong financial secretaries have recently called for a stricter examination of the current annual budget speech that a fund would be set up to offer financial help to Hong Kong students who cannot afford the soaring costs.

A spokesman for the federal Ministry of External Affairs said this week in a phone interview that he had heard nothing about the matter and did not know if Hong Kong government was considering extending aid to students in Canada or not. The sub-advisor of Student Aid and Development, who is in charge of the number of single female parents has increased.

The government's proposal is "I think women should be more aggressive and assert themselves when negotiating a salary."

Dr. Crocker continues to say, "Money is not everything - I am not here to complain, but to teach, and I love teaching!" Besides, she adds, "there is not much you can do for yourself, if you can't bring your head against the wall and get nowhere or pursue your profession and enjoy it!"

However, she feels that many dean's said, "It is a vicious paradox: You're never as good as a job as most men."

"Traditionally women have been hired at lower ranks and lower salaries. And because salaries are raised on a percentage basis, those who start off low will never be able to catch up," she said. "joined by a friend the..."

It is a fact that few women at the graduate level is not the only problem. The problem is that any real problem exists. Many simply will not allow themselves to be appointed on a percentage basis, those who start off low will never be able to catch up,"

"My God, there are so many factors mitigating against women than prejudice. "In Russia, higher education was made up of women. In Saskatchewan, with the largest in the country.

The salary breakdown was as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Category</th>
<th>Male</th>
<th>Female</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Master's</td>
<td>$25,825</td>
<td>$23,165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assistant professor</td>
<td>$13,322</td>
<td>$14,700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salary</td>
<td>$15,030</td>
<td>$14,887</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

He is quick to point out that several reasons could account for the rate of increase, since the highest degree was completed, number of years of research, the discipline they are in (eg. 10 percent in business and 7 percent in sciences), the discipline area which showed second highest average salaries. Second, there is the number of years of experience.

Therefore, though a significant proportion of average salary differentials between men and women can be accounted for there, is, however, a residual difference that still remains.

"Canadian universities reflect and reinforce the general societal patterns which limit the participation of women in the professional and public life of our society," says Vickers and Adams.

British universities want to increase foreign fees

by Carmel Tan

Ministry of External Affairs and this week in a phone interview that he had heard nothing about the matter and did not know if Hong Kong government was considering extending aid to students in Canada or not. The sub-advisor of Student Aid and Development, who is in charge of the number of single female parents has increased.

British universities and institutions have recently proposed to increase foreign student fees by 20 to 25 per cent. The proposal, if approved, will be the second increase for foreign students in two years, after the increased foreign student fees were increased by more than 100 per cent last year when British authorities introduced a new two-tier system.

The latest proposal, likely to be implemented by the fall of this year, would boost the annual tuition fee for students from EEC countries to £3,500 pounds (Canadian $8,000), in science to $4,500 pounds ($9,000), and for non-EEC students to $5,500 pounds ($10,000). Students would begin to pay foreign student differential fees in 1979.

Hong Kong students, who are mainly British passport holders, are also required to pay the two-tier fee. However, students from the European Economic Community (EEC), who are considered foreign in Britain, are treated as if they were home students and pay the same fees as Canadian students.

EEC students are also allowed to work in Britain but foreign students are not. This, he says, may explain why women do not hold as good a job as men most.

The salary a woman should be given at least a year for maternity leave, and men should be given equal responsibility around the house to give women a chance to get the higher degrees needed for better positions and promotions."

As we enter the final days of the semester, when exams and term papers are uppermost in our minds, I think it important to discuss next year, particularly the need for a "slack week" and also the need for a "reading week".

This is a long (timewise) story of a trek for information about this campus. Be forewarned that there is virtually no intrigue in it; it is simply a tale of how to get things from a store.

Dear Editor:

It's official, he is coming.

The Refugee Student Committee has agreed to sponsor Tlhopheho Rodgers for the academic year of 1981-82. Tlhopheho is a 23 year old student currently living in Lesotho, a small enclave within the boundaries of Southern Africa. His studies have been suspended since 1977, when he fled to Lesotho and came under the protective arm of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

In a bold government of South Africa passed a law requiring Afrikaners to be the language of instruction in all secondary schools. Traditionally, the official languages of South Africa have been English and Afrikaans. English is the predominant language of the black population.

But surprisingly, these severe problems were created for more than 75 percent of the black students enroled. Students would be further discriminated against, if they graduated under this added burden, as they would be barred from most of the country's universities because of their color.

What is Tlhopheho's crime? He participated in a country-wide demonstration against the government's enforcement of this legislation. The students had intended to demonstrate to be a peaceful one; however the police turned it into a scene of violence and bloodshed.

In the scenario that followed, Tlhopheho was arrested and held for 14 days at the Pretoria Police Station in Sophiatown. Upon release, he was ordered to report back to the police station every three days. The resulting pressure from these experiences at the police station forced him to flee the country to Lesotho in 1977. He has remained there ever since.

He is still hoping to resume his studies in Mechanical Engineering. His hopes will be realized this September, with the help of both the students and faculty of this country. The Refugee Student Committee and George McMahon, Assistant Vice-President-Student Services, have already taken several steps to insert Tlhopheho this opportunity.

To date, Employment and Immigration Canada has judged that Tlhopheho qualifies for sponsorship and can attend the university. The Registrar's Office and the Engineering Faculty have agreed to admit him, providing he passes the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). Tlhopheho is being tested in Lesotho, but this seems a formality considering his transcripts indicate that he is fluent in English.

The university has agreed to waive his tuition, however they have yet: to do so with some residence fees. This still leaves a substantial amount of money to be raised. Items such as food, clothing and books will be needed.

The faculty is now being canvassed for its support and we would hope that you, the students, will help to sustain us in our efforts, as this program continues.

You can set your watch by the mass exoduses to the library each year. It's like the swallow flying back to Capistrano, or the annual Greenpeace melee on the Newfoundland ice floes, or the inevitable pre-Christmas Cana-

But you'd think after three or four years of this we'd learn - we'd learn to start essays ahead of time to avoid the last minute rush which includes running over seven different floors of the library looking for books that mysteriously disap peared last week leaving no trace, people standing in the aisle (where the books you desperately need is ), slowly leafing through each index of every book there; and rude, cranky, bespectacled professors who haven't given up for weeks, who chain smoke and ask in little raspy voices, "What are you, Comus Students or suphinx?"

And then there are your fellow-scholars, who can be either truly disgusting and have their papers done ahead of time (not only that but they always get good marks), or can be greatly oppugnating, like when they ask, "Is this sentence good?" and then spit off into a long rhetorical recital of scintillating syntax and garbled grammar. Then you get five people standing around giving the writer five different ver

Another fun part about essays - the best, in my opinion, is usually hearing them in

What technique will we use this year? Skip it anonymously into the processor's mailbox during lunch, nonchalantly nudging it under their door (knock first to make sure there's no one in the office or skip out during slams to deliver it), get a good friend (who's expendable in this ruthless game) to hand it in for you, or, if the essay is less than one week late, you can even hand it to the professor in per son. If you're looking for brownie points, you might even try asking for an extension if it's not overdue by more than a week.

Each of these tasks takes a great deal of accumulated skill, You can tell always a third year student by the way they hand in essays. The first year is so often naive and straight forward - it will never go so far as "innocents". Second year is picking up the tricks, third year can range be-between cunning to diabolical and I'll tell you next year how you do it.

For now I'm just trying to handle this year stuff. Is that the author or intro-vestibulum theory? Somebody hand me a dictionary - this phrase just don't sound right. I've tried to make it good . . . Last semester, when I reviewed a number of salad bars in Windsor restaurants, I promised a review of buffet lunchrooms and dinners and one of brunches. The brunches will have to wait for next year, but here at last are the buffet lunchrooms and dinners (a.k.a. smorgasbords).

Hours shown indicate when the buffet is served, not necessarily when the restaurant is open. For convenience sake, unless otherwise stated, salad dressings available are the big three - French, Thousand Island and Oil and Vinegar.

Rating System: * poor  fair  good * excellent.

I phoned this place and was told the smorgasbord was available Thursday through Sunday nights. I went on Friday of the following week only to find it had been on all week except for that night. I was able to check out the rather limited salad bar.

In addition to a bowl of tossed salad of lettuce and tomato (the slices of which are a nice bite-size, I must admit), there are chicke peas, pickles and carrots, beets in a thick sauce, cucumbers (no bacon bits), and some fresh broc and bacon. That's it.

The night I went, the waitress told me that next week the smorgasbord would have real parmigiani and rib-eye. I observed the two trays where these items would go, but didn't see them on the line. They call this a smorgasbord?

I had the real stuff that night for dinner and found it was indistinguishable from the other salad bars I have composed. Since the items featured were rosi or perhaps the sculptures which accompanied it might somewhat be part of the "smorg". News of that occurrence would not exactly fill me with a desire to rush out for dinner.

Two kinds of fruit pie, reminiscent of Vanier, were the offerings when I was there. At least they weren't extra. My two companions had steak that looked more tender. Mixed vegetables are available too. Two kinds of soup are up there with the rest of the stuff, but they aren't included in the smorgasbord.

The thick cucumber slices aren't peeled and the beets were not nearly as good in my opinion. The lettuce is in awfully big hunks here, but it's sweeter and more tender than usual. The hot items vary, but the meat just falls off the barbecued ribs, but the potatoes are not really hot as the other three items are.

The rice with mushrooms and peas is quite good and one of raisins, apples, and pineapples in a white sauce is terrific. The sweet pickles are nice, but the beans, although still in their Westland bakery bags, are fresh.

Also available are Three Bean salad, some coloured maraschinos, a slightly too thick cottage cheese, green onions, long pickles, red, green and yellow jelled salads, and some tuna in shell macaroni. No ecrouts or bacon bits.

The best of the hot items are the carrots which are in rippled plates. The mushrooms in gravy aren't bad either. This gravy is much more than the thin, pale stuff for the mashed potatoes. The rice with mushrooms and green pepper is a little lacking in flavour, too.

The meat just falls off the barbecued ribs, but the only problem is there's more rib than meat. It's not the only problem, the sauce is a little mild, too, at least for my taste.

I'm still trying to figure out what part of the chicken the fried chicken pieces are from. It's a very boney part, anyway. The fried potatoes aren't as warm as the calipers for picking them up.

There's soup available, too, but the night I was there it was so greasy looking that I didn't try it, though I saw the owner pouring himself a bowl. If you sit close enough to the bar you might hear him basting with some of the tough-edged regulars.

Dine's Pizza, 2135 Tecumseh West, 252-4456.

The lettuce is in stupidly big bunches here, but it's crisp and fresh. The same can be said of the tomatoes (except the crisp part, of course). The thick peach and kidney beans both have a reesy oil and vinegar type house dressing on them (if you don't like that sort of dressing, though, you might have to go to see why they have to here a miss). The thick cucumber slices aren't peeled and the beans come in assorted shapes and sizes. No name brand or what? Olives, long pickles, hot peppers, and parmesan cheese are available too. There's both garlic bread (which is perhaps a little too crunchy, but nice) and large, round, fresh beans. There's one other salad too, consisting of carrots, pickles, cauliflower and mild red peppers.

The hot pasta dish varies daily. When I attended, it was ravioli. It was pretty good, with thick ravioli noodles. A pizza is brought out too, and sits on one of those little round warming trays. It's either very nice or very dry out, depending on how long it sat there. The soup is usually a good French onion, but varies occasionally.

Dine's Pizza, 2135 Tecumseh West, 252-4456.

The baked chicken is in sweet and sour pork is the ho
The beef stroganoff has no noodles, but an over-abundance of fat. The cabbage rolls haven't enough sauce on them. The gravy for the mashed potatoes is rather thin, and the vegetables (corn when I attended) in it were almost inedible. What's billed as scalloped potatoes is actually peameal, but it's not bad. I was told that the peameal was easier to dish up and didn't dry out as the spaghetti had. A very watery sauerkraut was on hand the night I attended, I Monday through Friday, there's a soup of the day and Fridays the smorgasbord includes meat loaf or cod, and Sundays, turkey with dressing. No buns are offered, white and brown sandwich breadare instead.

Dessert is available here, too, and there's more variety. The rice pudding is superior to Geno's and contains raisins and whipped cream. Jello is available here too, as well as fruit salad, moist sponge cake, caramel and custard puddings. Fresh fruit and three different kinds of cheese are on the dessert table too.

The tossed salad has good bite-size tomato slices (if you can only find them). Coleslaw, beets, cold cuts, a delicious salmon salad with raisins, macaroni and potato salad (with slightly too large potato chunks), and dark-yolked devilled eggs are available too. The three bean salad of mostly green beans is a surprising standout out!

Carrots can be found in curls, shavings and sticks, and in a salad with raisins and apples, the latter turning brown almost all the salads are garnished with fruit, which is attractive, but, in the case of apples, somewhat disconcerting because of their tendency to rapidly turn brown.

Olives, green peppers in rings (making it awkward to eat), radishes, long pickles, but peppers, some stringy celery, and chick peas all rest in a relish tray. Can you believe you're actually expected to pick up the chick peas with celery? Come on now.

Hot items! The soup will appeal, but the beef noodle I tasted was delicious. The meat in the fried chicken is a little pink for my liking, but the ribs have a nice flavor, although they also have a bit too much gristle. The roast beef and mashed potatoes are good and the gravy superb. Peas, corn and green beans were the veggies when I dined here. You can get fish and chips too, and curry sauce in little packets. The fish has that fresh from a frozen dinner look, but isn't bad. The fries are dry and crispy, but have a nice flavor. There are buns on hand too.

Walker 917, 917 Walker Road, 258-3917.

The tossed salad contains carrots and cucumber slices, while radishes are in a separate bowl and round pepper slices. The potatoes are in a separate bowl, I wish there were some bite sized chunks somewhere. A nice macaroni salad with cheese and green peppers and an excellent marshmallow salad with fruit are on hand too, as well as a cottage cheese of oh, just the right consistency -- not too runny, not too thick. Broad salad, olives, sweet pickles and pickled cauliflower, watermelon slices and more dark-yolked devilled eggs round out the bill at the salad bar. There's no real buns forie oil and vinegar dressing, but a thick and zesty Italian dressing really makes up for it in my opinion (or mouth). There's a constancy of blue cheese dressing as well.

The tasty cabbage rolls have plenty of meat. The lasagna is good too, and the fried, breaded, fish nicely crisp. The ribs are hirazier looking and a bit gristly, but among the best tasting in town. The barbeque sauce that sits in a bowl atop the buffet is perfect. It was a long wait before both the ribs and the chicken with rice were brought out the night I attended, but it was worth the wait. My friend and I passed the time eating some of the other smoked meats; ham, smoked beef, and round fries. Even later, some liver wrapped in bacon was brought out. The vegetables that night were sliced carrots that sat in a huge basket of dark and light buns, crackers and melba toast.

You can help yourself to coffee, but I'm not really sure if it's included or not. My friend and I had already had a cup each and were ready to leave, but decided on a second cup after I stood by the cash register for about five minutes waving my bill in the air to no avail. When the waitress finally did come by, we were drinking the coffees, and she tackled them on to the bill. I didn't think she had seen us drink the first cup, but maybe she had. Are you allowed one cup, but not two? No more tips? Check beforehand.

Holiday Inn, 480 Riverside, 253-4411.

Easclassic in the town. The first thing you come to is a huge basket of dark and light buns, crackers and melba toast. This is followed by clam chowder soup in a large tureen, round roast slices, and a tossed salad of more than just lettuce and one other item. Tomatoes, radishes, red cabbage, carrot, etc. It's too good to be true. Even the coleslaw has tomatoes in it. There's no oil and vinegar dressing, but, of course, the other two of the three are present, as well as Roquefort and a tasty green colored house dressing.

The cottage cheese has peach and pineapple in it, but is a little runny. The devilled eggs are garnished with a black olive or a sprig of parsley. The potato salad is refreshing different and the macaroni salad is of currant noodles. Pickles and a salad of tomatoes and green peppers are on hand too, as well as cold cuts attractively garnished with carrot shavings, parsley, etc. (no brown apples here).

The hot items vary, but I can vouch for the turkey and dressing, the baked ham, home fries, ribs and chop suey.

The desserts included here make those at any other buffet seem like stale tea biscuits in comparison. There are chocolate and vanilla puddings with whipped cream and strawberries, a heavenly ambrosia with fruit and nuts all over it, trifle, a succulent fruit salad, and a jellied salad with green jello in the centre and red around the outside.

Monday - Saturday: noon - 2:30, $6.95; Sundays: 4:00 - 9:30 (Chicken Buffet - less extensive), $4.95.

Aldo's, 157 Wyandotte, 252-2756.

The salad bar here was reviewed last semester and received three and a half stars. It lacks some of the customary items, but also has some that are refreshingly different. It's a good salad bar for just a salad bar, but, as the cold section of a buffet, it's really only fair I think.

The hot items vary, but I dined on roast beef with rich brown gravy, smelts, average macaroni and cheese, corn that tastes like it just came off the cob, boiled cabbage and some polenta I washed down with coffee. An excellent tartar sauce is available for the smelts and horse radish for the roast beef. Most other places with roast beef have worse horse radish too, but I've never touched the stuff since I once mistook for sauerkraut and stuffed a large forkful into my mouth, so I tend to ignore its presence. Buns and butter are brought in the table.

Madwoman rules the cafes of Paris

by Peter Heuston

Classical comedy consists of (i) a perfect world infected by disease and decay, (ii) a madcap plan to redeem the world from its infected state and (iii) a restoration of order coupled with a hopeful prognosis for a healthy and happy future. Jean Giraudoux’s The Madwoman of Chaillot possesses these characteristic features. But as a play, it sorely lacks the credibility which would label it a “comedy for all seasons”.

As a consequence, the University Players’ production of Giraudoux’s play is somewhat of a disappointment for it is not spared the concomitant absence of spirit that is the maligning weakness of the original play. Not that there weren’t any outstanding individual performances, rules carried out with such delightful novelty that it is impressive they be singled out and praised for their charm and excellence. As a whole, the production is just a bit off-color, paling in comparison with the most recent productions of this aspiring theatre company.

Giraudoux’s play is impressive at work. Picture a charming young woman in a Paris whose time is defined by the turn-of-this-century dress of its inhabitants, the cafe cheerfulness and springtime splendour of its world. Here in her neighbours, she realizes that something must be done to restore the world to its natural state of innocence and exhilaration. So, this Pandora un-reverse, this madwoman with a knack for sane reasoning, concocts a scheme to rid the world of all the denizens of evil, the greed-governed captivates of industry, the avuncular speculators, the bombastic journalists and the smugly social elite. And when these wondrous sorts are finally purged, the world is once again a place of immaculate perfection where all are restored to a life of love, peace and harmony with a song on their lips and celebration in their hearts. Not bad for a night’s work.

But in the process, the Players seem to crack of the same discordance that permeates the world they inhabit for a brief few hours. The surreal fantasy of the play, the make-believe chemistry of a thin and fragile plot line, drags itself like a weary horse. If it weren’t for terribly distracting and acted to undermine her solid performance. Lance, K. Mckehran as the philosophical regulus was sharp and persuasive in his exhalation to return to a world that is not too “pimped” to persevere.

Marlene Charny, Ellen-Ray McMeekin and Kerry Lee Hamilton offered the most delightful performances of the evening as three wise (some) “madwomen”, content to prowl about themselves with invisible pets, imperceptible people and obscure views about the cloud-chattered world which they inhabit.

Gay Smylie and Andrew Wil-mer turn out commendable performances as two lovers whose fledging romance never quite gets off the ground, a defect attributed to the original script. William Kraft as the Deaf Mutu and Peter Marison as the Sewer Man are brilliant for sparking their small parts with super talent.

Alan Dykens (the Prospector), Lionel Walsh (the President) and Otho DelMarco (the Bacon) are excellent as they are uncanny in their burrowing plot to reap gross financial gains from an innocent world just ripe for the taking.

In the end, good triumphs over evil. Art, as we know, happy endings are hard to come by in those troubled times. The Showcase production continues tonight, Saturday and Sunday. It’s your last chance to bid the graduating BFA (Drama) class a fond adieu and much success in the future.

Heat Wave makes art show worth it

by Catherine M. Wilson

Sunday evening, James Tamburini once again displayed his musical genius and ability to bring out the finest in full band, small ensemble and soloists. The University Concert Band presented a most interesting and enjoyable evening for an audience of about one hundred people.

Otto Nicoll's "Overture to Merry Wives of Windsor" opened the program with a soft, "moonrise" theme and soon began to move more quickly, showing the band's ability to contrast moods and dynamics. The highlight of the opening half was "Hopak Rakshashki" (a Dance for Old Believers) by David K. Hosinger. Full of exotic rhythms and ostinato, this contemporary piece builds sound and volume by gradually increasing instrumentation. The frequent change of meter was quite effective and the excellent coordination and articulation of the ensemble was clearly evident.

The J.E. Barth's "Andante and Allegro" presented Harry Bauer's "Bit o' Rhythm", a light, fun piece with interesting rhythms and instrumentation. The next concert in the "Concert Series" will be this Sunday, April 13, at 4:00 p.m. in Assumption Church by the University Singers and Wind-Drummer Chorale.

The observant viewer will notice a underlying characterisitic of this year's show, each artist by now explores certain, personalized direction that is, finally, unique and original. Those viewers keeping score will see that each student works with a specific set of rules, and that their works are built on each other. The approach taken may be based on surface texture, colour, a technique or even a common theme. While this is all good and fine in theory, the show reveals a problem of repeti- tion and limitations sometimes carried with following only one direction. Specifically, how can four pieces, if all based on one word or lazy idea, each be strong and worthwhile?

Still, there are many fine works to be seen here. Bob Fish, who designed everything from the show's poster to this year's Visual Arts T-Shirts, presents two striking portraits with his familiar slashes and splashes. Fans of last year's wild and crazy sculpture will find its tradition carried on quite nicely with Paul Wimmer's "Incendio No. One & Two" and "Not New Darling, it's Ragtime."

Martin McCarty's surrealistic "Checkmate" has been par- ticularly praised for its delicate detail, while realism lovers will appreciate Robert Murphy's works, including a beautiful "Picture" in bronze.

King David becomes our local Masada

by Robert Brown

With "Masada" and similar productions on T.V., we've seen a lot of ancient Israel lately. Those who've developed a taste for Biblical costume dramas will have another chance to indulge Sunday afternoon, when the Music School presents its pro- duction of "King David". The symphonic poem in three acts will be performed in Assump- tion Church at 4 p.m., with Richard Householder conducting the University Singers and Wind-Drummer Chorale.

The work by composer Arthur Honigerg (with libretto by Swiss dramatist Rene Monza) has been established in the musical repertoire since its Paris premiere in 1921, and Prof. Householder has pulled the stops for this performance. There will be 95 people in the chorus and a 16 piece orchestra. The three soloists — Eleanor Feuer, Roma Riddell, and Charles Fantazzi — are well known for Windsor and Detroit performances. George Neibolt of Dramatic Arts will be David. There is even a set of Bathsheba Barnett stars as — get this — the Witch of Endor. Tamburini revised it for concert performance two years after the premi- ere, but the original orches- tration is used for the April 12 presentation.

Those wishing to commemo- rate their Palm Sunday with suitable atmospheres can buy tickets at the door $4.00, $3.00 for students and seniors) or at the School of Music. Another perfor- mance will take place April 22 at 8:15 p.m. in Guelph's Old St. Mary's, Detroit.

Jo Anne Ralph's personalized, tom-tennigraph-like designs are shown in a variety of form- ers, and Pauline Dupris' paint- ings involve a quality that's both hauntingly eerie and beau- tyful. Judge for yourself, the show runs until April 16.
Downchild Blues Band bails out student council

by Wendy Coomber

For a pretty poorly publicized concert, the Students' Administrative Council, its sponsor, managed to pull it off again. Last Friday night the Downchild Blues Band played to a comfortably crowded Ambassador Auditorium.

As well. Jim Shaban, SAC vice-president, estimated over 350 people attended the night's performance. "The concert was very successful. Waiving ticket fees was a move to show our appreciation to the students who did come."

As reported in last week's Lance, as of last Wednesday, SAC had only sold nineteen tickets for the affair. On Thursday morning, the SAC's Special Events Commissioner was pleased that the concert did turn out to be successful. "There were about 350 people - 150 of them came to the door expecting to pay!" Lacasse had been criticized for lack of effective publicity. However, enough people came to the concert to make it one of the best attended SAC events this year.

SAC vice-president Jim Shaban agreed the concert was a success. "You have to measure success in terms of participation and enjoyment of the event. I would hate to say our concert was very successful. Waiving ticket fees was a move to show our appreciation to those who did come."

It is debatable whether the lowered prices brought the unexpected crowd to Ambassador Auditorium. Whatever the case, the evening provided a lift for those not able to afford inflated ticket prices.

Attendance worries led to free admission

by Peter Haggert

What was $4.50 yesterday may just be free tomorrow.

With one bang of his presidential gavel, SAC mentor David Simmons declared last Friday's Downchild Blues concert free to students. "It was obvious we were going to lose money, so I figured we'd might as well open the concert up to everyone!" remarked Simmons. "It would have been nice to make money, but at least the people came to enjoy it!"

As reported in last week's Lance, as of last Wednesday, SAC had only sold nineteen tickets for the affair. On Thursday morning, the day before the concert, Simmons made his decision to waive student ticket fees and reduce guest tickets from $5.50 to $1.00.

If you go west, here is what to expect

by Stuart Clark

So you think there is no musical atmosphere in Alberta, eh?

Many people from Southern Ontario have headed west for jobs and opportunities. Even more seem to be considering such a move for summer employment. Students for whom contemporary music is very important should be curious as to what they will find when they look to Alberta for a home and a career. There are some similarities and differences between the musical scenes of Ontario and Alberta.

The most obvious similarity is seen in the radio charts. The groups at the top are generally the same big names from the United States and overseas. Groups such as Blondie, Superstomp and the Police, and performers such as Bruce Springsteen, Billy Joel and the late John Lennon are among those currently doing well in record sales.

Country sound

One difference Ontarians might find, particularly if they should stay in Calgary is the influence of country and western music. Willie Nelson was popular out west long before he began his acting career. His occasional partner, Waylon Jennings also rates western superstar status. It is rare for a bar band to get through an entire evening without playing songs like “Lucille,” “Kentucky Woman,” and “Good Hearted Woman.”

If you hit certain rowdy bars, or any bar in town during Stampede Week, you are likely to become aware of the works of Jerry Jeff Walker. You might remember him for “Mr. Bojangles,” but his true classic tune is “Up Against The Wall, Redneck,” known affectionately as “Redneck Mother.”

On the country side, Freddy Fender, Johnny Paycheck and Loretta Lynn are available on stations which cater to a rural crowd. Country rockers like the Charlie Daniels Band, the Canadian Good Brothers, are receiving airplay on most stations. The urban cowboy is definitely alive and kicking!

One influence which listeners of Detroit might miss is the black sound. Only the top few groups, such as Earth Wind and Fire receive airplay and can better show their record sales.

As for Canadian stars, radio stations in the west are of course subject to the same C.R.T.C. content regulations, guaranteeing plenty of time to a privileged few performers. Gordon Lightfoot, Ann Murray, Gino Vanelli and April Wine receive at least their fair share. Local and regional performers also get much attention. Jensen Interceptor and Loverboy are two Alberta groups currently doing well.

People who like to combine good music with a night on the town may be in for a shock.

Hotel or no beer

Neighbourhood pubs are not allowed. Every drinking establishment in Alberta must be connected with a hotel or some form of dining area. As a result, locals often visit up to three different drinking rooms with different types of entertainment. A common format would be to have a cabaret with a band playing rock and roll, a tavern featuring a solo act or duet (usually leaning towards country folk), and a disco with taped music. Disco, however, no longer seem restricted to playing disco music.

For the Beacon or Ranchel’s Steak House, Jazz fans are most likely to hear their band performed in dining lounges – Pardon My Garden being the most popular. At these establishments the patrons are required to buy full meals, making it an expensive evening for the jazz devotee. These lounges provide high quality jazz.

Just as eastern Canada looks to Toronto or Montreal as being the center of the Canadian music industry, the west looks to its big city – Vancouver. This metropolis, which has much more in common with Los Angeles than it does with any Canadian city, is becoming a recording Mecca much in the same mold of its American counterpart (although it is still much less influential).

Over the last few years, the most successful recording artists have been rockers and pop-rockers, notably B.T.O., Trooper and Prism. Just recently, groups have found success in music counterpoints. The Lance, Vol. LIII, No. 26, April 10, 1981, Page Thirteen Athlete says ‘thanks’

As a two-time member of the Lancer swim team and having exhausted my five years of inter-collegiate eligibility, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few thank-you’s.

First, I wish to thank all those involved in the planning and execution of the First Annual Sports Awards Banquet. It was first rate.

Thanks, too, must be directed to those within the administration who were supportive beyond benign neglect and for whom the promotion of excellence was conceived as a thing to be fostered, not feared. Such people have been all too few and hence, all the more appreciated.

Lastly, a most special thank-you to the one individual who has made the last two years of my competitive experience the finest. In a sport which can in many ways be a lonely one, it means much to say that he was always there. To my coach, Mr. Don Wilson, goes my deepest gratitude and respect, I was never alone. Even that said, I feel somewhat inexpert, for quite simply, there are no words.

Thanks, Don, for it all.

DO YOU REMEMBER YOUR FIRST DAY ON CAMPUS?

Wouldn’t it have been great to have someone show you around, talk with you about your courses, and introduce you to people on campus who could make your university life less confusing and a lot more interesting?

There is a group of concerned and enthusiastic people who do all of those things throughout the year for our freshmen ... and they do much more. They return to their own high schools and speak to students, parents, and counsellors. They write articles and provide information about our university through the liaison office. They work closely with fellow students at events such as orientation and open house.

Not only do they have the opportunity to gain some experience in meeting and talking with all types of people, they’re able to become familiar with all aspects of their own university. And, although the salary is by no means tremendous, it provides for a little extra spending money.

Football

This year's football season featured as much action off the field as on. The Lancers struggled through the first four games of the season with only one win while awaiting the return of last year's No. 1 player in the nation, Scott Mallender, who was fighting an OUAA order that stated he had used up his five years of eligibility.

Up until that point, Windsor had been ably led by Bob Dalley, a freshman pivot, but his inexperience combined with a poor rushing game and some bumbling on the special teams resulted in the last-place showing for the Lancers.

Football result in the last-place showing for the Lancers.

Like every other year, 1980-81 had its ups and downs for Lancers and Lancerette teams.

The Lancer football team had the raw talent but they bumbled their way to one of the worst finishes ever. Coach Gino Fracas (left) had little occasion to smile.

Meanwhile, the Lancerette basketball team looked for big things in '80-81 with freshman centre Theresa McGee (right), but found that a 9-3 record was not good enough. Maybe next year.

Volleyball

The Lancerettes finished third in their western division with a record of 11-7 before being knocked out at the pre-final tournament at Laurier University with losses to Queen's, McMaster and Western.

No championships, but coach Jean Brien points out that this is a learning year and looks to improvement next year when all 12 team members return.

Basketball

Next week: Men's basketball, track and field and more.

ATTENTION: DRUG PLAN

1. THOSE STUDENTS WISHING THEIR DRUG CHEQUES MAILED TO THEIR PERMANENT ADDRESS ARE TO LEAVE A SELF-ADDRESSED STAMPED ENVELOPE AT THE SAC OFFICE.

ENVELOPES WITHOUT STAMPS WILL NOT BE MADE.

DO YOU DRIVE TO SCHOOL?

Dear fellow students: the present Transit Strike in Windsor is making it extremely difficult for many students to come to school on time.

If you drive a car we are asking for your cooperation in establishing a car pool. Students who drive to school could leave their name in the SAC office and we will match you up with students in your area who need a ride to school.

Please act now and help other students overcome a common transit problem.

Simmons questions replacement students' council

by E.P. Chant

The old guard was piped out and the new in last week, but not without some sour notes along the way.

Last Thursday's annual meeting of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) saw the resignation of the 1980-81 council and the institution of the 1981-82 one.

The latter, to be headed by President-elect Jim Shaban (subject to council ratification), has been questioned severely by some SAC members.

This happened after Simmons had bid farewell by Shaban, who cited Simmons' "great dedication to" and "caring for" the students he represented.

When the new council members had taken their seats and introduced themselves, Simmons, speaking as a student observer now, proceeded to question Shaban and the council on its ratification of Shaban's cabinet and the SAC summer operating budget.

Simmons questioned Shaban's failure to advertise available cabinet positions and his lack of consultation with Vice-President John Mill on the appointees.

Shaban responded saying he was not required to advertise the positions, he had had his appointees in mind throughout his election campaign, and that Mill was fully consulted and approved of his cabinet choices.

Although a motion was made to table the ratification until the positions were advertised, it eventually failed as several members cited Shaban's right to work with the people with whom he was the most comfortable.

Engineering representative John Ripsnool and people might be interested enough to come up to apply after seeing such an advertisement, but that the people nominated for cabinet posts by Shaban had already proven their interest and ability.

Mill added that one of the problems with Simmons' cabinet last year was that there was no indication that that would not be a problem this year since he and Shaban had already begun working with the appointees.

Specifically, Simmons mentioned the choice of Brad Mitchell for the post of Vice-President-Finance (Treasurer). He asked Mitchell if he still felt he was not responsible for the pattern of SAC's actions (paraphrasing Mitchell's statement made during the first term's executive term).

Mitchell replied that he still felt he was not responsible to one individual and one individual only—that he was, instead, responsible to the president, but he was also responsible to the council as a whole and to the students.

Mitchell was finally ratified, with several members complimenting him for his work on the 1980-81 council, with member Tish Costea saying he had always done his job "no matter what he was reporting to."

During the ratification discussion, Nursing representative Kathleen Morland said Simmons she was "irritated by the fact that you are bringing up sour grapes from last year and holding up our new council."

Simmons replied that it was his right as a student to question any council's actions.

The other cabinet members were ratified with no trouble.

Mitchell then explained how the SAC Board of Directors, the 1980-81 council, and the 1981-82 one.

The proposed budget for summer 1980 was approximately $25,000, while this year it is $32,000. Of last year's $23,000 proposed, only $16,679.37 was actually spent, and several members expressed confidence in Mitchell and the SAC Board of Directors that the 1981 proposal would not be entirely spent unless it was necessary.

The budget was finally passed, with council instructing the Board of Directors to keep a particularly close eye on the cash outlay.

Will "slack week" be reinstated or will we have to continue to suffer though the second semester without any kind of a break?

The university Senate was to have discussed this matter at its meeting last Thursday, but last week after two hours of basically fruitless debate on other matters.

The "gives-a-break in February" motion which was to have been discussed was moved by Dr. Rachele E. McClure and seconded by Dr. John C. Hafft.

Since the University of Windsor is now the only university in Ontario without a break of any sort during the second semester, and since the current term's experience has demonstrated that this has caused a considerable toll on students, faculty and staff, despite the long vacation in December and January.

Let's hope that beginning in the winter 1982 semester, the Wednesday of the term be designated as a university holiday.

During the discussion on this motion, it is probable that the new student senators would have made reference to a petition which has been going around campus for the past several weeks containing 600 signatures representing the return of a whole week of time-off for studying and socializing.

All of this will have to wait, however, until the next Senate meeting.

Some members of the council that were discussed at the Thursday meeting were done so inconclusively. There was a final vote on only one topic—one which will require professors to submit their students' grades to the faculty dean.

"No later than seven calendar days after the close of the last date of the exam period."

Two other matters were simply referred back to the committee from whence they came after some time-consuming, fruitless discussion. One of these reports was that of the Nominating Committee which was asked to sign nominations to an ad hoc committee "to study methods of maintaining and improving academic excellence in both teaching and research."

Some of the members of the Nomination Committee said they had not received their notices of meeting and, so, had not had any say in the nominations for the ad hoc committee.

Since the ad hoc committee is supposed to file its initial report by May of this year, this delay may cause that date to be pushed back.

The other referred-back-to-committee report which was discussed at length was one on exam and essay procedures (a committee headed by George McMullen).

The Senate agreed to the committee's first two recommendations: that the posting of exam, essay, and grade results (using student numbers) outside a professor's door is not an invasion of a student's privacy, except in the case of a small class where results should be kept private (the students receiving their grades from the professor in confidence), and that exams and essays should not be distributed from a public place (citing on a chair outside a professor's office) as they would be subject to theft.

It was on the third recommendation that the harangue started. The committee advised that all exam answer-papers be kept on file for six months in the professor's or his department's office, not being returned to the students since the department must have the exam for evidence if the student moves to appeal the grade.

Aside from the paper burden this would add, someone suggested (notably Dr. Walter Romanowski and Dr. Robert Krause) noted that there are those students who want to, should have the right to see, and have their exams.

Krause said, "We're putting the minor subject of appeals ahead of the major subject of accessibility (too nice) as an important part of the learning experience."

Dr. Howard McCandless finally suggested that all exams be kept on file for six months, unless the student agrees not to appeal the mark, in which case the paper could be given back.

At Dean Conrad Gavranec's suggestion, however, the whole matter was simply sent back to committee for further examination.
Slack Week

Let my people go -- to study in Florida

by Wendy Coomber

Although "reading week" is gone, its memory still haunts the campus and administration. "Reading week," which students from previous years remember as the break in the middle of February, is facing the "Lazarus syndrome" -- rising from the dead. "It's not difficult to change things," said new student senator Bill Kosyk.

Kosyk is currently circulating a petition around the campus to have the old "slack week" reinstated. Nearly 2,000 signatures have been gathered since last Tuesday and, although a signed petition is not necessary to bring this motion before the Senate, Kosyk feels that showing support for the cause will increase its credibility with that administrative body.

A motion by faculty was to have been brought before the Senate earlier this month asking that a one day holiday be created for students on the seventh Friday of the winter semester. Kosyk does not feel that is enough.

Besides, he said, many students do not even have classes on Friday of the winter semester. Kosyk is currently circulating a petition around the campus to have the old "slack week" reinstated. Kosyk disagreed, saying the administration had any plans to bring back the week-long holiday two Senate meetings ago. From that came the above-mentioned motion of the one-day holiday.

When questioned recently if this was enough of a holiday, Dr. Robert Pinto of Philosophy, a question was raised by Dr. Dr. Hoffman said the university discovered a lot of new students coming in at the end of the present Christmas break from the area high schools (over 500 students, according to Dr. Kathleen McCrone, head of the History department).

The administration did not want to discourage these students from attending the university by removing a week at Christmas and recreating "slack week". Feeling the university must have had a good reason for discontinuing it. He also thought its dismissal should be given a couple of years and then see how the students feel about it. Kosyk disagreed, saying the universities across Ontario must have had a good reason to insti...
New and old managers await CJAM's FM licence

by Wendy Cowenber

"This year looks very, very good," exclaimed Walter Manzig, Manager-elect of CJAM, speaking of the station's much-anticipated FM licence.

In the radio station's election to new management, current Manager and Assistant Manager, Morris and Dale Molnar emerged as Manager and Assistant Manager, respectively, at a crucial time in CJAM's history, a time when the FM licence looks like it is almost within reach.

Manzig, a student of business, had found the biggest problem at the moment, is financing. Yet, he said, the station is hoping for a loan from the university's Board of Governors.

The problem here, however, is the Board of Governors will not give the station the loan until it has the FM licence, and the CRITTC will not give it the licence until the regulatory body it has the financial support provided by the Board of Governors.

Grant Gelinas, the present CJAM manager, said they are trying to balance the budget and are working out some kind of guarantee to present to the CRITTC that they will provide the loan once the licence is presented.

Formost in the new manager's mind is to have CJAM broadcasting over FM band by this next year. Meanwhile, he will be to draft the radio station's constitution over the summer. Since the station will not be able to accept students once the licence is granted, it will be looking for community support to continue.

Walter Manzig

This summer, said Manzig, it looks like CJAM will be getting a summer loan from the city - the City of Windsor Community Enrichment Program. This program will bring underserved children, and nine to 10 years old, into the radio station and show them how radio functions, so they might show an interest in radio at a later date.

Manzig said the station will be keeping many of the old programs next year, schools will be in a position to hire, bodies that are providing radio classes that are in demand, and there is a need for parking space to come and do the research if they are present for the next year.

"This year looks very, very good," said Manzig, "and the community could benefit greatly if we were brought to them through a radio station. However, said Manzig, the station should not become so independent from the university that it loses touch with the people to whom it is broadcasting.

He wants the radio station thought of as an organization run from a business perspective, but still in touch with students. Once Dale Molnar and the Assistant Manager-elect, wants to see the special programming moved to daytime from nighttime. He would also like to change the station's format somewhat from that of an alternative station - "stuff you don't hear on normal radio".

Molnar, a third year Communication Studies major, said he and Dale Molnar developed an image of its own in the community. His main concern now is to delegate work to his staff efficiently, to make sure the station members work as a team (which will be essential if they finally get their licence). His goal is a more tightly run station, with staff members cooperating to promote the station's philosophy.

Grant Gelinas, the present CJAM manager, wants to see renovations start this summer at the station in preparation for the licence next year. Renovations include more office space and updated equipment. Gelinas, who wants to establish credibility with the community "from day one". If people do not like what they hear when they tune the radio on, said Gelinas, they are going to turn you off again.

Grant's main concern right now is where the money is coming from for the renovations. They may cost over $100,000 and the Board of Governors will help with the initial cost.

SAC treasurer terminated

Mitchell admitted that he had made a procedural error. Simmons gave Mitchell and Jim Shaban, now President-elect, the authority to negotiate with the employees, but no contract was to be finalized without their approval.

When Simmons talked at the time of the student contract arrangements, Mitchell apparently pushed them through anyway.

The new contracts are to take effect on July 1, although before Simmons' official term as President ends. His council, Board of Directors, and cabinet, have already resigned and are now involved in a transition of power to next year's SAC officials.

"Gray areas" are plentiful in the transition. Mitchell, though officially accepting his diminution, said the fact that the contracts do not take effect until after Simmons' term is over may cause some concern for President-elect Shaban.

If he had appealed, it would have been interesting to see if the appeal would have gone back, by some means, to last year's council (now, as mentioned, out of province, disbanded) or to next year's (which he was not working for, actually). That is all shooting, however, without the appeal.

New SAC Vice-President John Milne was appointed this year's council (see story on page 1). This has yet to be firmly determined.

Mitchell said Simmons will allow Mitchell to continue to use his personal office in the SAC office until the end of the month.

Part-time students can make a bundle of money

There are certain financial aid programs designed specifically for part-time students. The Ontario Student Assistance Program (O.S.A.P.) can provide a total maximum of $1200 per academic year to eligible post-secondary students who qualify. It helps to defray the education costs of needy part-time students who have a family income under a specified level.

This aid can cover the cost of tuition, books, equipment, transportation, and even a supplement to baby-sitting costs. To be eligible, an applicant must meet certain requirements, be on social assistance, or have a secondary institution.

The Industrial Management Clubs of Canada grant plan, or the Canada or Ontario Student Assistance Program next year, although there are certain financial aid programs designed specifically for part-time students who have a need for parking space that certain access to a parking spot. Since part-time students have a need for parking space that certain proceeds in a limited capacity, the Industrial Management Clubs of Canada has been intere, ts in the parking problem.

If you are ineligible for the bursary plan, there are other possible sources of assistance under O.S.A.P., including the Ontario Study Grant Plan, or the Canada or Ontario Student Assistance Program next year, although there are certain financial aid programs designed specifically for part-time students who have a need for parking space that certain proceeds in a limited capacity.

There are federal money programs available for applications (April 1st). This year, it's not too early to plan for next year. Further information about the O.S.A.P. programs and the Industrial Management Clubs of Canada award may be obtained by contacting the Awards office (Ext. 447, 802, 803) located in Windsor Hall North adjacent to the Registrar's office.

Many thanks to Mrs. Aase Andersen-Buthbert for her assistance, and to Mrs. Marie Renaud for updating our information.

A stormy year in the SAC chambers

The whole year in the Students’ Administrative Council (SAC) office has been filed as a bad production of Herman Wouk’s greatest work.

Like the Captain, Wouk’s office was almost sunk in a typhoon of petty executive squabbling. The mutiny never did come, as a result of which, several of the officers were sent off to the end of the gangplank. It also saw the dismissal of External Affairs Commissioner John Rizopoulos by SAC President David Simmons for reasons which were never made entirely clear - basically it’s “a you’re a fine person but I just can’t work with you” dismissal.

When I became Editor-elect last year, I told my good friend Mark D. Greene (then the Managing Editor) that I was going to love the job. Now, all the excitement and decision-making provided by the position would never be tiresome.

He looked up wisely from his Scotch at that time and said, “If you can say that when you’re done next April, I’ll kiss your ass.”

Well, my term as Editor is up, “next” April has arrived. Mark, don’t bother puckering your lips - I’m all yours.

The excitement and decision-making were certainly there and there’s no denying that heading The Lance (or working for it in any capacity) is an excellent experience for anyone who is planning to go into a journalistic-related field in the real world.

Yes, it’s a rotten, dirty, crummy, disgustingly under-paid job, but somebody’s got to do it.

The following people, however, certainly made it a lot less rotten, dirty, and crummy (they couldn’t do the same for my pay cheque): Ed McMahon, office-mate- and parking-lot-gate-partner; the irreplaceable and cliche-ridden Steve Rice; the Europe-bound and purple Heidi Pammer; the web-shooting go into a journalism-related field in “the real world”. Yes, I kept telling myself that it was an excellent experience, especially when I was tossing invoices in and trying to get over story angles in my tiny cranium or trying to figure out whether we could justifiably dump on “So-and-So” in an editorial.

So what else is there? Writing this column reminds me of writing an essay. Read one page of reference and you know that there was an experiment in which two psychiatrists were brought into separate rooms and told they had to interview a crazy patient who thought he was a psychiatrist. The Catch-22 was that they had to say you are repressing your feelings, yell and scream and they other thought he was. The point is, once you are bona fide psychiatrist, the saner each acted the crazier they don’t realize is that humans have no choice in the matter, actually it is the oil using us to transform itself into a higher stage of evolution. Picture this: a pool of oil could aid in their pursuit of happiness. Of course, they don’t realize is that humans have no choice in the matter, actually it is the oil using us to transform itself into a higher stage of evolution. Picture this: a pool of oil

Marg Deutsch and Tim Shortt, without a doubt, gave this newspaper the best cartoons of any student newspaper in this country; Peter Happers (good luck, String-bean); the Europe-bound and purple Heidi Pammer; the web-shooting

Other six years will kill them. Parking is still a problem, but you can say that when you’re done next April, I’ll kiss your ass.”

The first term saw a combination breakdown in the executive which, according to a SAC committee examining the problem, did not seriously affect SAC services to students but did prevent the executive from doing more for its 6,000 constituents.

It also saw the dismissal of External Affairs Commissioner John Rizopoulos by SAC President David Simmons for reasons which were never made entirely clear - basically it’s “a you’re a fine person but I just can’t work with you” dismissal.

When the aforementioned SAC committee examining the situation filed its report in December, it appeared the sea-storm was over and the executive was back on an even-keeled teamwork-working keel.

Old SAC president speaks on new SAC summer budget

The 1980 figures were incidentally, not included on the proposed budget, but after some hasty research, I obtained those figures and gave it to them to compare with the actuals. Some Council members hastily interrogated that the actual expenditure figure of 1980 was so high which a comparison should be made, since it was a proposed budget and should only be compared with the proposed budget as opposed to the actual budget of 1980.

Again, the logic of such an argument baffled me. What is value when a budget only has actual expenditure figures to work with. The actual expenditure is the only true indicator of what was spent and the best guide to what the budget for the coming year should look like.

Because of its vagueness and questionable expenditure figures, the proposed 1981 budget has created much cause for concern and all students who are interested in how a handful of students dispenses with their money should be concerned.

One item which did not appear in last year's budget was Casual Help. What is Casual Help? Despite some perfunctory questioning from a satisfaction answer has yet to be given. The Vice-President-finance, Bradford Mitchell, answered that they hire some students for the summer.

The last four-line items presents similar lack of clarity and also a significant doubling of money to be spent in these areas.

It is proposed that $400.00 will be spent on meetings. Meetings are nothing more than banquets and other entertainments expenses which, though they may be a necessary expenditure sometimes, does not warrant the proposed cut from $400.00 to $300.00, to take the whole cabinet on a weekend trip.

The same can be said for the steep increase in the travel and accommodation budget. Over an eight month period, September to April last year, the travel budget was $2,500. This year, over a four month period, the proposed expenditure is up to $3,000. So far, I have not heard of any dramatic increase in Air Canada or Greyhound fares.

Another $3,000 is slated to go towards Building Maintenance and again, a satisfactory answer was not provided. If any major renovation is to take place, then $3,000 would be insufficient. On the other hand, it is to go towards office refurbishing, then students should question the viability of such an expenditure.

Those questions raised here should have been properly answered at the last Council meeting but because of timidity and an unwillingness to shake the new Executive, the budget was approved.

Students have always criticized the University Administration for its seemingly wasteful expenditures and have continually demanded that the Board of Governors be more discriminative in their spending. It is imperative that S.A.C. do likewise.

It may be that Council must be more careful to spend this year but is that a legitimate excuse to inflate the budget by more than double of last year's budget? A budget is an important ingredient for the successful organization of an operation. In the past, Council members have needed to accept them as presented, without much explanation or changes.

We have to develop a certain degree of trust for the students who handle the financial operation of S.A.C. but we also have to be firmly convinced that the monies which will be spent are on visible undertakings which will further to the Council's ability to serve the students.

No doubt, many who have read this would like to question my intention behind the above, so let me emphasize again, that in the past, I have always allowed my good intentions and concerns for students' welfare to be ignored. I only ask that what I have said should be viewed solely as policy disapprovals and not be attributed to a personal vendetta.

David A. Simmons
President

Dear Editor,

At this time of year, it is usually appropriate for the management of a particular organization to give thanks and sing the praises of the members of the staff.

Malwareware, I find myself at a loss for words, while I am sure comes as a surprise to you.

Your flowery accolades to those moronic books who have served under you for the duration of this historic year is enough to turn the stomach of anyone who has any idea of modern concepts of newspaper ethics.

During the course of the year I have had the dubious honour of having to listen to you complain and otherwise rant and rave about those in your employ, with the understanding that the information passed on in the course of our office would go no further.

Well, there's nothing you can do to me now, so all the gossip can come out. For the first time I have heard that Steve Rice did something to sports what Godzilla did for the skyscrapers.

Do you also remember the time that you said that Peter Hugger's layout skills had the aesthetics of Holiday Beach after a particularly vile run of mis-guided perch?

Remember the big debate about the moronic form of art - photography or poetry?

Well, dear sir, I certainly do, and it is about time that the members of the staff found out about those memorable evenings spent breaking parking gates just to see how many eggs it took.

Anyways, I would like to end this on a happy note, but it appears as though there are nothing but sour notes left in my repertoire.

Managing Editor Ed McMahon

New S.S.S. president very optimistic

Dear Editor,

First and foremost, I would personally like to extend my gratitude on behalf of those students who supported my efforts for presidency.

I am looking forward to the upcoming year with a great deal of optimism. Certainly, the optimism emanates from the success of the current Social Science Society. In a short time, the society exhibited a style and flavour which I can only hope to continue. The success of Social Science is exhibited in the rings concerts, the semi-formal and the arrival of guest speakers (Robert Wilson, Paul Martin). Unquestionably, the original members have a special foundation for the upcoming society.

The upcoming society will work closely with the past S.S.S. and SAC so as to present conflict of events as has happened in past years. I hope the society can continue its high level of interest. The time has come to root out these birds nest in trees and replace with clever devices.

I only ask that what I have said should be viewed solely as policy disapprovals and not be attributed to a personal vendetta.

The time has come to root out these birds nest in trees and replace with clever devices.

Dear Editor,

We would like to thank you for your assistence in getting the potholes in Parking Lot B filled in. My parents and I are very grateful. We would also like to request another, more serious, problem. Bird droppings. In Parking Lot B, which is located under the bridge, this problem has become critical. My partner has been forced to wash his Datsun regularly and I am sure this is true for other car owners.

We were inspired to write by the story which appeared in the Windsor Star several days ago. They suggested loud noises to scare the birds away; I prefer a more drastic and brutal method. This has come to roots out these bird nests, the sidewalk is repel with their droppings. Let these slabs, so in trees and stumus, the way they are supposed to. Thank you again.

One storm at metru

The record starts.
Worn melody blares, spooning on the floor.

How they dance on and on in their fox tail and waltz.
They marvel and muscle and talk of old times — when they are old then.

The University Players gave SAC's biggest achievement. It is sell the plays with their reduced ticket sales (or should I say lack of ticket sales) raised the question whether or not anyone would show up. More than 350 people did.

As usual SAC's pub was a popular place to go. Manager Jody Stanton can be credited with giving the students an enjoyable place to go on their off hours.

Cliff Erickson, Bookler, Slam, and many college crowd pleasers visited the pub this year. And don't forget the feature events such as Herman's Hermits and Doug and the Shugs!

As usual, the School of Music took care of the classical end of things. Their concert series consistently broadened the musical spectrum of interested students.

The University Players gave many outstanding performances this year, most notably He To Hecate. Along with these plays and musicals, the School of Drama presented smaller workshop productions in their studio theatre.

Even the societies got into the act. The newly formed Social Science Society jumped on the idea of sponsoring a University Players' performance was not entirely successful, a glimpse of the potential of subsidizing a concert instead of going out to make money, brought in The Kings.

Next year, Jim Shahan has proposed an Orientation Committee to be formed to replace the present Commissioner's post. This will supposedly relinquish the burden from one man, and make many responsible for orientation's ultimate failure.

Bobby Graymet and the Fantastics were in the pub for the beginning of this week. The pub consistently provided good entertainment for students.

Opportunities? Did I say failure? Well, you can be sure there will be a smaller Orientation next year—hopefully it will be of better quality.

SAC has already booked the new gym for a one-night major concert. Talks are under way to contract a big (and I mean big!) female artist for this September's festival.

David Laird takes over the job of Events Commissioner. Laird was responsible for the successful SAC ski trips this year and is hoping to have continued success when 6,000 students want action next year.

Who knows? We may even have a real Homecoming!

Now is the time for all good editors to evaluate the entertainment of their campus. And how about ... The newborn Special Science Society jumped over the lazy Special Events Commissioner. Well ... for one thing, this year's Events Commissioner wasn't lazy. And unlike his predecessor, he even lasted until the end of his term. Mark Lucas did get off to a slow start, but by term two, he could be seen preparing and promoting a variety of SAC events.

Although SAC events were not entirely successful, a glimmer of hope shone from the SAC office. In my opinion, the idea of sponsoring a University Players' performance was SAC's biggest achievement. It is too bad few people took advantage of SAC's generous offer. The eight or so Players' performances were always sold out. Why could SAC not sell the plays with their reduced prices?

Special Events also lined up appearances by The Mime Company Unlimited and the Downchild Blues Band. The latter became a free concert when ticket sales (or should I say lack of ticket sales) raised the question whether or not anyone would show up. More than 350 people did.

As usual SAC's pub was a popular place to go. Manager Jody Stanton can be credited with giving the students an enjoyable place to go on their off hours.

Cliff Erickson, Bookler, Slam, and many college crowd pleasers visited the pub this year. And don't forget the feature events such as Herman's Hermits and Doug and the Shugs!

As usual, the School of Music took care of the classical end of things. Their concert series consistently broadened the musical spectrum of interested students.

The University Players gave many outstanding performances this year, most notably He To Hecate. Along with these plays and musicals, the School of Drama presented smaller workshop productions in their studio theatre.

Even the societies got into the act. The newly formed Social Science Society, taking the view of subsidizing a concert instead of going out to make money, brought in The Kings.

Next year, Jim Shahan has proposed an Orientation Committee to be formed to replace the present Commissioner's post. This will supposedly relinquish the burden from one man, and make many responsible for orientation's ultimate failure.

Oppotunities? Did I say failure? Well, you can be sure there will be a smaller Orientation next year—hopefully it will be of better quality.

SAC has already booked the new gym for a one-night major concert. Talks are under way to contract a big (and I mean big!) female artist for this September's festival.

David Laird takes over the job of Events Commissioner. Laird was responsible for the successful SAC ski trips this year and is hoping to have continued success when 6,000 students want action next year.

Who knows? We may even have a real Homecoming!

THE CINEMA CRITIC

TESS

by Robert Brown

"Tess" has been toured as the "quality" film of the year. Surprisingly, it is, although not a masterpiece as its proponents seem to think.

Even more surprising is its presence in Windsor, illustrating the vagaries of the movie industry. Filmed in Europe back in 1979, "Tess" probably wouldn't have appeared in North America except for the Oscars. It was given a showing in New York in order to qualify for the awards, with critical acclaim and director Roman Polanski's notoriety, the movie caught on. The publicity of six Oscar nominations resulted in national distribution throughout the U.S. and Canada.

Based on the Thomas Hardy novel "Tess of the D'Urbervilles", the plot has all the simplicity of a soap opera. In the late nineteenth-century a poor English farming family finds it is the last remnant of a line of aristocrats. They decide to advance the family fortunes by sending beautiful daughter tess to a rich "relative", who takes advantage of her. She bears a child who dies soon after, then marries and marries the appropriately named "Angel". But when she confesses her past crimes on their wedding night, he refuses to accept her for what she is until too late, and tragedy results.

The story's plausibility depends on the portrayal of Tess, and actress Nastassia Kinski is up to the task. She's the right kind of gorgeous — I hate to say "hauntingly beautiful" but the term is appropriate — and can even act. One can understand why weird things happen when Tess is around. The two male roles (Peter Finch as the squire Alex, and Leigh Lawson as Angel) are well cast.

Director Polanski shows a flair in his depiction of the historic English countryside which one would not expect from his other works. (No ghosts or goblins. What would Polanski have done to "Wuthering Heights"?) The photography is not innovative but is well done. If you like rural scenes and steady homes, Tess is your kind of film.

Unfortunately, when Polanski stresses the visual aspects of history he neglects certain nuances of Victorian morality essential for understanding the plot. In the Thomas Hardy novel, Tess and her parents unwittingly author their own misfortunes when they attempt to cross the rigid British class system. When Tess reaches above her "place in life" as a farm girl, she is raped and degraded for her efforts. Sandey other misfortunes come due to her "snobish pride". But this doesn't come across in the movie, where we keep wondering why all these bad things keep happening to the poor girl.

Similarly, we can't really understand why Angel leaves Tess after finding out about her seduction and pregnancy. The extraordinary reversal the Victorian middle class felt towards pre-marital sex (taken for granted by readers when the novel first came out) is hard to grasp today, and Polanski should have made more of an effort to explain it.

But then nothing is perfect, and "Tess" is far better than anything else around. You probably won't get another chance, because by the time the Gemplex gets built, "Tess" will be long gone, and the Ontario Film Theatre is probably closing. Better see it soon.
Comedy is pretty at Komedy Korner

by Loreen Baj

His lowbrow approach suddenly turned thunderous. I smile in anticipation as comedian Leo Osborn dons a cheap black and blue-green suit, a dollar-bargained "guitar", an impossible drawl, and, in one moment of comic blasphemy becomes the Reverend "Dollar Profit".

A mighty swoop of the hand tells all barriers of religious reticence, "I give God the profiteer and ask him to move."

Comedy has replaced the "Poets at Large" group and 23-year-old MC Leo is emphatic about saying the new location is "an permanent home." More pertinent than Gallivers, was the present locale solves in point was the night I visited. During that particular evening things were made interesting by Rosemary, a quietly white-haired figure who took it upon herself to voice some raucous humor of her own and to provide, gratis, a few unobtrusively quiet the entertainment of the comedians themselves. No two-bit comic he, Leo set

I am in debt to these people

by Peter Haggett

Lance Entertainment Editor

No this isn't a list of all the people I owe money to - that list is a lot longer.

No, this is a tribute to all the people who helped me put together this better student newspaper this year. Without the efforts of manuscript writers, I never would have known. There were some who went the extra step, like Vicki Masaro who did all that I couldn't forget. It would have been curtains without the help of E.P. Chant (who has always been Catholic) telling me which direction to take all the time. I can't forget the kid of the team, Vicki Masaro who did all that work for me. I just hope some of you are around to do my work for me next year when I move into the big office.

West championship is an accomplishment. For Windsor’s men’s basketball team, the gem of the University’s sports crown, it has come to be expected.

With that firmly in mind, rookie coach Nick Gromkowski set out to have a “successful” season in 1980-81. He and his team managed a third straight OUAA West title that culminated with one of the most thrilling finishes in the league’s history.

Jim Molyneux was named the winner of the President’s Shield as the University’s top female athlete, an honour she shared last year with swimmer Lori Scott.

Hockey

What can be said about the Lancer hockey team? They finished eighth in the OUAA league with an 8-13-1 record, one of the best showings for a University of Windsor team in many years.

But the finish was not so important. Not the fact that they were in the playoff race right till the final week of the season, that they defeated every team in the league except Western and Laurier.

This was a team that demonstrated in their play all that is.

Track and Field

This year’s track and field season was one of the most successful in recent memory. Records were toppled with the passing of each meet, many more than can be mentioned here.

Most notable among the men was Andy Buckstein, a first-year low student who Coach Dr. Michael Salter referred to as “possibly one of the most talented athletes this University has seen.” Buckstein took the gold medal in the 300 metres at the OUAA outdoor final as well as a gold in the 600 metres indoors in the all-Ontario final.

The Toronto native also took bronze medals in the 100 metres hurdles and the 300 metres indoors. He finished fifth in the 400 metres indoors at the OUAA indoor final. She had a similar finish at the OUAA indoor event in the 3,000 and a fifth in the 1,500 and although she qualified for the Canadian national final, she elected to travel to Pasadena for a half marathon, where she placed second.

Linda’s forte in this marathon, an event not run in intercollegiate competition, but one which was recently introduced to the Olympics for women. We may see a University of Windsor alumna representing Canada at the 1984 Games in Los Angeles.

For her many accomplishments in an impressive five-year career at this school, Staudt was named the winner of the Banner Shield as the University’s top female athlete, an honour she shared last year with swimmer Lori Scott.

Another notable female track and field athlete was Jenny Fret, who took third place in the shot put at the OUAA indoor meet.
The only problem with the 1980-81 Lancer hockey team was that this didn’t happen often enough.

Meanwhile, Petro Uhlig, one of only two divers at the University, fought her way to the nationals where she had one of her best performances in her five-year career at Windsor.

Fencing

Another of the little-recon­ Oted, but highly talented groups on campus is the fencing team. Through many long winter months, these men train in the cold and dark underbelly of St. Denis Hall only to change and quietly win title after title. This year, coach El Sukunda and the team’s third-place showing at the GUA final. But for the third consecutive year Peter Ot, named co-winner of the President’s Shield as the school’s top male athlete, won the individual

There are many other teams on campus who play a smaller but no less significant role in the sports scene at the University. The synchedronised swimming team had a very successful sea­son as did the Lancers and Lacrosse cutters (although little was heard from them over the season). As well, the Crussader basketball team worked diligently all year in preparing the Lancers for future oppo­

Riccia first

Kathy Riccia of the Univers­ ty track team placed first in a half marathon race in Bloomfield, Mich. last Sunday.

Over 6,000 women struggled over the hilly course in a chil­ ing rain, but Riccia’s time of 1:21:22 (about 6:15 per mile) for the 13.1 mile distance was three minutes faster than that of her closest rival.

A special thank you

At the risk of sounding like an Academy Awards acceptance speech, I’d like to thank certain people who made this year all the easier for me.

To my writers - few, but talented - thank you thanks for helping me out of num­ crous jams and good luck next year.

To F.P. Chant and Ed
McMahon who were always ready with a cynical remark - you gave me my start and I’m grateful.

And to Heidi Partner, photo extraordinaire - thanks for putting up with an overdemand­ing and sometimes obnoxious sports editor. The photography in this section was nearly among the best in the country.

And finally, to my loving wife, Barbara-Ann, and my beautiful daughter, Big Hel - all my love for seeing me through.
