The Great Lakes Journal of Undergraduate History aims to create and sustain a consistent outlet for top undergraduate history students from universities located within the Great Lakes region, which recognizes their hard work and dedication to the discipline of history by featuring their high quality research papers within the pages of a published academic journal. More generally, the Great Lakes Journal of Undergraduate History attempts to promote a new research culture among undergraduate history students in Ontario. A culture in which undergraduate research is recognized.

The release of the sixth volume of the journal is a testament to the commitment of the students and faculty in the Department of History to promote undergraduate research. Each year this journal provides meaningful opportunities for experiential learning in scholarly research and academic publishing.

Thank you to everyone who made this volume possible, especially the authors whose contributions are a powerful addition to the Great Lakes Journal of Undergraduate History.
