What the Critics say: "Perhaps, what I shall call here the poetry of radical artifice will just disappear. Perhaps, but in the meantime, it keeps turning up like a virus: in Canada, where the Concrete poetry movement of the fifties and sixties and the emergence of sound-text poetry and performance work have generated, often without direct connection to its U.S. counterparts, [there is] the very rich and vital experimentalism in evidence in such journals as Rampike..." -- Marjorie Perloff (Stanford U).

Nerve Language
Brian Henderson

"Nerve Language is an extraordinary and courageous book. Every poem in it sparkles like snow, like diamonds, like black coal about to be lit: it is that cold, that shining, that fiery with inspiration and madness, the desperation of our age transmuted alchemically into a kind of holiness, an opening into the possibility of the miraculous. It should be required reading for every modern citizen; it might save us from ruin."
— De Brandt

Daniel Paul Schreber was a high-ranking judge in Leipzig in 1894 before he plunged into an alarming and excruciating mental disruption during which God spoke to him directly by way of a nerve language. He thought that a terrible disaster had befallen the universe, and that he was the last person left alive. Schreber believed it was incumbent upon him to restore the cosmos, and in order to do so he had to enter the world of female voluptuousness, of the feminine.

In this exquisite new work based in part on the memoirs of Schreber, poet Brian Henderson gives voice to a radical human interiority, to what is wild and charming and craning, the imagined Schreber's ragged desires revealing to us much about our own.
