Paper, Scissors, Stone (Original writing).

Robin Margot. Todd

University of Windsor

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholar.uwindsor.ca/etd

Recommended Citation
https://scholar.uwindsor.ca/etd/2987

This online database contains the full-text of PhD dissertations and Masters' theses of University of Windsor students from 1954 forward. These documents are made available for personal study and research purposes only, in accordance with the Canadian Copyright Act and the Creative Commons license—CC BY-NC-ND (Attribution, Non-Commercial, No Derivative Works). Under this license, works must always be attributed to the copyright holder (original author), cannot be used for any commercial purposes, and may not be altered. Any other use would require the permission of the copyright holder. Students may inquire about withdrawing their dissertation and/or thesis from this database. For additional inquiries, please contact the repository administrator via email (scholarship@uwindsor.ca) or by telephone at 519-253-3000 ext. 3208.
INFORMATION TO USERS

This manuscript has been reproduced from the microfilm master. UMI films the text directly from the original or copy submitted. Thus, some thesis and dissertation copies are in typewriter face, while others may be from any type of computer printer.

The quality of this reproduction is dependent upon the quality of the copy submitted. Broken or indistinct print, colored or poor quality illustrations and photographs, print bleedthrough, substandard margins, and improper alignment can adversely affect reproduction.

In the unlikely event that the author did not send UMI a complete manuscript and there are missing pages, these will be noted. Also, if unauthorized copyright material had to be removed, a note will indicate the deletion.

Oversize materials (e.g., maps, drawings, charts) are reproduced by sectioning the original, beginning at the upper left-hand corner and continuing from left to right in equal sections with small overlaps. Each original is also photographed in one exposure and is included in reduced form at the back of the book.

Photographs included in the original manuscript have been reproduced xerographically in this copy. Higher quality 6” x 9” black and white photographic prints are available for any photographs or illustrations appearing in this copy for an additional charge. Contact UMI directly to order.

UMI
A Bell & Howell Information Company 300 North Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor MI 48106-1346 USA 313/761-4700  800/521-0600 Paper, Scissors, Stone

by Robin Todd

A Creative Writing Project Submitted to the Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research through the Department of English in Partial Fulfillment of the Requirements for the Degree of Master of Arts at the University of Windsor

Windsor, Ontario, Canada 1996
The author has granted a non-exclusive licence allowing the National Library of Canada to reproduce, loan, distribute or sell copies of this thesis in microform, paper or electronic formats.

The author retains ownership of the copyright in this thesis. Neither the thesis nor substantial extracts from it may be printed or otherwise reproduced without the author's permission.

L’auteur a accordé une licence non exclusive permettant à la Bibliothèque nationale du Canada de reproduire, prêter, distribuer ou vendre des copies de cette thèse sous la forme de microfiche/film, de reproduction sur papier ou sur format électronique.

L’auteur conserve la propriété du droit d’auteur qui protège cette thèse. Ni la thèse ni des extraits substantiels de celle-ci ne doivent être imprimés ou autrement reproduits sans son autorisation.

0-612-31008-6
Table of Contents

Acknowledgements iv

I. Paper

Connections 1
What I Do 3
Refuge 4
Words Which Conjure 5
Threads 6
Shape of a Poem 8
Cyclist as Poem 10
Poolside 11
All You 12
Sitting Still 13
Catch 14
After We have Argued 15
A Photograph Called You 16
A Poem You'll Never See 17

II. Scissors

How Is It 19
Wild Places 20
Lament 21
Dissolve 22
Eclipse 23
Bound 25
Transition 26
Anchored 28
Time to Come In 29
If Change 30
Longing 31
Reflection 32

III. Stone

Pilgrimage to the Niagara Falls Museum 34
Spring 37
Bird Bath 38
Summer Arrives Suddenly 39
Close 41
October Morning 42
Snow Fell 43
Awry 44
April Brings Snow 45
Sweet Spot 46
Cycling at Dawn 48
Place 49
This I See 50
Feline 51
At Two 52
Something In You 53
Wed 54
Moment 55
North 56
The Garden 57
Gram 59
Childhood Stories 61
An Apology 62
Ties 63
Small Details 65
Regarding My Father 68
Acknowledgments

I wish to thank my thesis advisor, Professor MacLeod, for his encouragement throughout the year and for leading me in the direction of poetry. In addition, I want to thank my second reader, Professor Campbell, for her generous support throughout the summer months and for her guidance in the final stages of this project. I would also like to thank Professor Van Den Hoven for acting as an outside reader. Finally, I would like to express my appreciation to Lakefield College School for granting me a year's leave in which to complete this project.
Paper, Scissors, Stone

Stone breaks scissors (Stone wins) Scissors cut paper (Scissors win) Paper covers stone (Paper wins)

- Best Games

"if I think hard enough it will appear I've drawn something out of the air, my mind pulling invisible particles together, forming a mass, making."

-Alden Nowlan
Selected Poems
This collection is dedicated to Gram Goudie, who found beauty in that first startling baby picture and in those early poems, and to my parents, who taught me to seek the truth in the smallest gesture.
I

Paper

"Surfacing from a faded language, the word comes when needed"

-Moya Cannon

Oar
Connections

for W.C.

late in the evening
atop a swell of Billy Holiday I asked how you begin

in words so clear I can hear them now you told of seeing whole poems in a single metaphor

I imagined them emerging from small, perfect seeds marveling to think of your gifts as a gardener

II

that night you appeared surreal in my dream
off in the distance
doing tricks on a skateboard how familiar were your movements reminding me of my own

years ago

yet you were doing stunts I could not master-- spinning with feet firmly planted, flipping the board beneath you as you flew from the curb

III

what follows is more puzzling than your performance in my dream yet I offer it as truth just the same
cycling today
along the length of the river I found myself thinking in pure metaphors

suddenly I saw the connections of which you spoke-- in billowing sails
I saw the mind unfurling, in the lushness of lilacs summer's sure arrival

IV

as I struggle now
to place these words
on the page
one final metaphor
comes slowly into focus-- this poem is a gift of words freshly gathered offered to you

the gardener
who planted those first seeds
What I Do

wouldn't part waters
    split an atom
    split an apple

wouldn't alter the turning of the tides shift the currents of the wind adjust the temperature even one degree wouldn't save someone from dying mend a broken limb cure a common cold

wouldn't make me a millionaire not even a thousandaire (an amount so small the word has slipped out of sight)

would not even buy
    bee or flowers
    as Al Purdy learned At the Quinte Hotel

yet I rise each day and begin again as if my life depended on writing a poem
Refuge

the desire to construct out of the vagueness of despair

a shape
as clear as a poem

is what prompts me
to place these words
on the page
just so as if a poem might serve as refuge-- a sunlit room to linger in when darkness comes calling

Words Which Conjure

for Michael Ondaatje

She is a woman I don't know well enough to hold in my wing, if writers have wings, to harbour for the rest of my life

I pause to tell my students of my longing to shape words which conjure a pilot who falls burning from the sky the Bedouin whose hands gently heal the shifting sands of the boundless Sahara a villa in ruins among the hills of Florence they smile in pity, suggesting they're only words and for one tired moment I contemplate defeat yet still I hold out my final offering-- poems laced with the faint scent of cinnamon the students bend slowly toward the words like flowers stretching to meet the sun toward the young boy remembering the first girl who put a warm hand into his trousers toward the poet mourning the loss of b.p. Nichol with the final words, I tie you to me

I will not ruin this by asking too much by suggesting we too are bound after class one student waits until the room has emptied and finally it is safe to speak the word awesome Threads

by chance I meet a friend recovering from cancer-- she takes me around her garden explaining how fast it has grown like her own hair which last time we met was tucked beneath a stylish wig she shows me a catalogue of Chicago's Dinner Party-- explaining the intricacies of this work of art,

how it celebrates the power of the female artist

we revel in the list
of 999 women whose contributions went unnoticed by a world covering its face with huge, trembling hands as English teachers

we turn our talk
to what is taught
and not taught-- she tells of a former student who recalled studying exactly one female writer correlating nicely with her memory of precisely one female hero later in the day while visiting another friend I am surprised by her eight year-old daughter who wishes to know why heroes are always men-- she laughs as I tell her of the many female heroes kept hidden by those who fear them how silly, she says,

to be frightened by a hero leaving me at a loss to explain such fear or how St. Joan (the only female hero she knows) witnessed the awful flames of people's terror

late that night
as I read your poem Women Fly my thoughts gather round your words like chimney swifts flocking to the stack at dusk

I draw together the threads of my day slowly creating a tapestry of women-- gardeners artists warriors
winged creatures--

rich and weighty with gold brocade, it celebrates those heroes so carefully tucked away Shape of a Poem

a flapper--
narrow and willowy
waist dropped low,
a slip of a thing
with a sleek little bob--

could you say is the shape of my poetry

earning you a scowl as I leaf through my poems finding neat little columns and vast white space

as I see how I've fallen in love with a shape how I've come
to believe in its figure alone

convinced as I was,
I missed the jarring
stops and starts
reading like someone
just learning
to drive

but like a horse set loose in wide-open pastures you have freed me to explore the page's frontiers

to gallop
along its narrow margins
to pause in the shadows of its dusky forests with words unfettered, flung clear across the page I return the power to the short line once more distinct upon the page

finally I too can write long sprawling matron lines I can stretch the poem wide beyond the cherished familiar and the eye which once shut as if against a foreign object gazes now in wonder at such ample creations-- full skirts and pleats fanning out across the page Cyclist as Poem

this evening on my bike I felt like a poem-- racing headlong down steep dirt roads I was pure space
as world blurred

and like green-sprouting fields I pedalled by I too was a metaphor for renewal even as I hammered against gusting winds

crossing a bridge reduced to its barren frame
there was a certain poetry even then as I balanced bike on shoulder

stepping carefully
across rusty beams
as steel flakes fell
    soundless
into the water below and as I rode home chilled and trembling, the poetic lay still in the final strands of light drawn faint across the sky Poolside

I gaze at the glistening water while the clouds wait patiently in the corners of the sky granting me this small respite of sun-drenched silence as the clammer within (what words to choose, how to say what matters)
gradually subsides

I tremble somewhat fearing the stillness will not last that just as the wind begins to rise so too will the chatter (possible titles for the collection splashing about in my head) as my thoughts begin to race far beyond the moment I yearn for those summers of drowsy afternoons reading long, sprawling novels I did not have to name

All You

for Donna

I try to write a poem that is all you--
the you whose voice
quiets my fears,
whose laughter holds me steady in its embrace

but in speaking of you, friend, I must include me too for though I know you exist in a world all your own-- with countries and continents unknowable to me-- it's as you move through my world that you seem most real, crossing my oceans
leaving footprints on every shore

so forgive my intrusion into this--your own poem-- and know that I'm guided by the stars of your own constellation Sitting Still

You said no poems, don’t write any poems, as if putting it into words made it far too real. No poems, then, at least not for you, though already the words are clammering inside me, words from last night left behind. You said, this is the last time, we can’t meet like this again, and just like that you punched a hole clear through me. Don’t sit around obsessing, you advised as you left, so I’m not (sitting still), I’m driving instead--flying at 140--but I still can’t seem to lose you. For God’s sake no poems, you repeated, sighing, as if my words were leaden weights you were made to carry. I was ready with my retort though--yeah, you’d be lucky to get a poem, I said, even as the pain shot through every limb. You told me you were worried about my feeling too much, and I hate this, hate that you’re worried about my heart, hate that you’re worried about me writing a God damn poem. But what I hate most is me sitting here, trying so hard to hold this poem inside me. This poem which is spilling out all over the page. This poem which is bigger than the space we took up last night, bigger than the space we’ll ever be allowed to fill. And maybe this isn’t a poem at all (this creation which has shaped itself around me); maybe it’s just a space I’m sitting in--big enough to hold my own heart beating.
Catch

the words passed between us are frail offerings-- delicate wildflowers plucked from Alpine meadows you hold these words as if they carried within them fire enough to warm the world as if they were precious gems brought forth from the deepest mines of Africa your words of affection arrive in a whisper barely a murmuring against my ear

I place them carefully in a red satin pouch tying it gently around my neck for tomorrow you will rise all bluster and distance your words flung fast from across the room and I will crouch with catcher's mitt extended before me dreaming of those other words pressed close against my chest After We Have Argued

I wanted to write a poem for you with words smooth and round as stones lying at the water's edge words to hold in your hands feeling their warmth from the afternoon sun

but those words lie beyond my reach while within lie words so cold they'd burn your fingertips at the slightest touch so sharp they'd slice through your skin with barely a whisper leaving the faintest scar to mark the occasion

A Photograph Called You

here is a picture of us with bright smiling faces arms wrapped round each other in a way that speaks of loving but what of the tempers flaring moments before, the doubt that lingers

even in your arms?

this text remains hidden behind careful expressions, and I wonder of your own text

concealed from my view-- your silence full of sorrow
you will not say

I can read nothing in this photograph I hold here where the play of light and shadow allows you to slip away so I return to the text you have presented writing beneath the picture your name next to mine

A Poem You’ll Never See

this a poem
written far from your eyes-- and how strange it is to write love
poems in isolation
to shield them from the beloved as if love were a private act as if a space exists which love simply cannot fill

we are together, you say, but I begin to drift towards a place
you do not know
to confront demons
you cannot name

I will go with you,
you tell me softly,
and I smile at you
and your bright belief though I know now
of a distance
too great for love to travel
II

Scissors

"In us grows the strange and the wild barely covered by skin"

-Susan Musgrave
Forcing the Narcissus
How Is It

can travel so far into yourself the gentlest touch won't draw you back can leave me scrambling for two words to put together yet all the while you're sitting no farther than an arm's length away Wild Places

distance makes the heart grow crazy-- nights filled with dreams from which I awaken
with a faint impression of you leaning on me

imagine you speaking in soft woeful tones
with big pleading eyes
and gosh-darn hands

imagine me deceived-- waking with you
feeling warmer
than afternoon sun,
sweeter than berries
in the evening rain

then you call from so far away
and the distance in your voice is farther than you'll ever travel, the coldness greater than the winter will ever be in that moment you tumble earthward

like Icarus descending, leaving me wishing I'd never woken
from my own wild places Lament

close
away
back

I give you a piece of me then my skin begins to crawl as I watch you, the archeologist, turning a fragment of bone over and over
in your hands

I want to scream
to turn and run I want it back and I want you to know nothing

in anger I retreat to a place where I cannot hear you and though your face crumples as I make my escape I can offer no consolation for I am lost to you until the fury dissolves in the spaces that surround me later you approach cautiously asking, is that really you has the dark storm finally passed? yes, I'm back, I say knowing I cannot tell you how different this time will be Dissolve

while westward bound on the 401
there is a moment

when self dissolves
into the flatness
of the land

when I am more and less than I

until stopping merely to fill up the tank

and the particles
of self
gather once more

like grains of iron pulled fast
toward the magnet Eclipse

"Nobody can keep himself from himself that completely"
-Gail Godwin

there were moments when I dreamt of eluding the self

of slipping
like a thief
through a window eased open

of disappearing
into otherness
with barely a ripple

not content with dreaming I took steps towards escape

journeying alone
to the other side of the globe

believing that disguised as a traveller I might vanish from sight for a time I saw the world with eyes clear and bright

looking neither forward nor back
I was observer only

then suddenly
all my old fears
arrived

like part of my luggage
lost along the way
its sides scuffed
and worn baggage tickets gone

then, like the eye
which has stared at the eclipse

I saw
in everything
the faint outline of self Bound

details smaller than the lines of my hand,
worries too slight
to ever be spoken

will I wear make-up or buy a new skirt?
should I tuck in my shirt grow my hair long?

tethered fast
to thoughts so idle I watch my world
shrink slowly
out of sight Transition
draw close and I will tell you how each day
starts like the last seemingly familiar with a mug of coffee weighty in my hands,
writing in the stillness of uncluttered morning

how I move into the world
and the rupture begins—the patterns disappear and all seems strange as the earth slips
out from under me
leaving me suspended

my grasp tightens
round the details of my day but like words repeated
again and again
they are emptied of meaning and offer no respite

I have ventured into Dali’s landscape and can find no footing as the ground tilts
beneath me
and time folds
over on itself

then comes the sadness I cannot name
and how to explain that while laughing
with friends
I want only to weep
how to tell you
of the terror
fluttering inside
as I imagine this world without end Anchored

that first memorable summer in Lake Louise, when staff accommodation consisted of a tin-can trailer, it was my brightly patched quilt that defined my space dividing it from the rooms with beer bottles for ashtrays graffiti splashed artlessly on the walls cutting in New Zealand my tent became my place of retreat so when the centre pole shattered and the tent collapsed inward I propped it up with branches from an old apple tree yet still the tent rested so close above me each morning I woke with dew lying faint upon my brow months later in Australia I walked by houses with well-kept gardens aching for the familiar-- the warm air of spring through windows just opened pancakes and CBC each Sunday morning-- having carried around a pack with my life stuffed in it I wanted only to set it down to empty it forever

cutting here in my sister's house all these years later I am struck by the fact that I am still in motion housesitting and visiting my way through the summer-- once more my life is packed up tightly and my watch on the nightstand now defines each makeshift home
Time to Come In

you ask what it is like returning to work after a year away-- think back to when you were little, I say, out playing ball after dinner the air is warm and light the sky is turning a soft orange-red you are in the far end of the yard happily catching fly balls and chasing down grounders a moment later your mother calls out telling you it's time to come in you want to argue that everyone else gets to stay out longer but you know such protests to be in vain with glove dangling at your side you trudge slowly toward the door--

at this you smile remembering the moment perfectly
If Change

meant only spinning a cocoon round oneself emerging after as other

if it required
simply a long sleep dreaming in darkness of wings unfurling

if it did not involve the shedding of skin
in which self is wrapped so surely

nor demand
the sacrifice of the familiar-- long slow journeys
on rutted trails
of bark,
eary morning wanderings through dew-laden
grasses

if it meant only flight without the terror of falling then
I would speak
with ease
of transformation Longing

finally I understand Rossetti's wish to balance between this world and the next her contemplation of Sleep that no pain shall wake Night that no morn shall break

I understand too Webb's desire to sit perfectly still and only remotely human

I try to envision moving outside myself-- I'd peel off my old skin leaving it shriveled and fading while warming my new self in the bright morning light

I'd make a grand escape-- slipping through ties that bind leaving only ropes
whose knots hold nothing

a patient near death, I'd float above myself
watching with vague interest the figure lying below--

though I imagine these metaphors in the greatest detail still they collapse beneath the weight of fears and petty concerns more than ever, I understand the painful longing to be less than nothing in this sorrowful world Reflection

how impressive I was in my understanding of the struggles young women face; how eloquently I spoke of their disordered worlds-- these girls so thin they barely cast a shadow yet who witness in the mirror their own bodies swelling level-headed as I was how I worried for these girls who cared too much for the opinions of others shaping themselves towards some vision of perfection; how I hid behind carefully chosen words while slowly I split in two-- heart and head dividing nicely so that I might carry on speech-making while turning my own body into a battlefield and when asked what do you feel

I could not answer but to say I think could not remember what it was like to feel at all without stuffing food down as fast as I might to muffle the ache I could not bear how long it has taken to mend heart and head

pulling them back together stitch by stitch and how I struggle even now to harmonize their voices saying yes
III

Stone

"Try to find me mud and stones now mother give me somewhere to start"

-Moya Cannon

Oar
Pilgrimage to the Niagara Falls Museum

_for Susan_

prepared for the noise and glitter of the strip I would have viewed the museum in the same light would have dismissed its musty contents as random and meaningless if not for you

who guide me through placing in my hands
small fragments of knowledge-- established in 1827, Canada's oldest museum

has shifted back and forth across the American border no less than three times its present site a warehouse where corsets once were fashioned wandering from floor to floor I move through layers of sound from the distant past-- the steam-driven sewing machines which echo the thundering falls the chatter of the workers whose hands flutter like sparrows over metal eyelets and small bits of lace; later, the whispers of the very first visitors peering in wonder at the cluttered collections-- musical instruments beside ancient weaponry Egyptian coins next to Eskimo artifacts-- as I search in vain for logical connections you see the importance of the thing itself lending dignity to the weariest exhibit to the display of those who first challenged the falls battling nature in their awkward contraptions-- the woman nestled in a barrel with her dog for company spinning in a whirlpool six long hours before being pulled out already too late except for the dog who survived the swirling darkness having gulped down the air intended for his owner to the animals displayed in troubling narratives-- bison being ambushed by a raging pack of wolves a snake coiled tightly round a terrified baboon even the freaks of nature gain a certain nobility-- creatures with limbs too great or too few the lamb whose head twists forever heavenward the two-headed calf divided in its view as you peer into these cases your mind roams beyond the relics creating lives for the collectors who gathered such treasures-- the museum owner's son who travelled twice to Egypt returning triumphantly with bits of stone from the pyramids and mummies unravelling with Medusa-like locks

a collector named McNabb who, we are told,
purchased the moccasins from Sitting Bull's feet taking also the slippers of his favourite squaw though one of the slippers (another note tells us) was lost inexplicably in the depths of Rainy Lake our final steps upward bring us to the tower and a view of the falls shrouded in mist;

as we gaze at the water

you speak of the mismatched items from each display
threading them like beads into exquisite patterns which tell of the Victorians and their yearning for narrative

the value they placed on pure acquisition

driving homeward
I am haunted by images
from this strange museum-- the remains of two Indians found huddled in a cave birds positioned in patterns of flight the colour long drained from their exotic wings the humpbacked whale whose sun-bleached skeleton bears the carved initials of visitors long past-- how different are these crude marks from those you've made on me-- small, delicate imprints yet still so close to the bone

Spring

coxes your mind open widening its corridors, allowing thoughts long frozen to awaken with new vigour

you shed the layers of a dark, icy winter with the joy of one constricted too long

around you now
the world begins to thaw you watch as life returns to the silent streets

through lingering slush and snow children pedal furiously-- bright and glittering on Christmas present bikes skipping ropes are turned phosphorescent colours rising through the air with sing-song voices

you want to tell someone that spring is about reclaiming the world
taken from your very hands but now such loss is behind you for you are here

your world is opening and you run towards it laughing
Bird Bath

six degrees Celsius seems a little cool
for swimming yet there they are in spring's brown-green garden three starlings huddled together in the murky water plunging and shaking furiously looking at each other as if on a dare to see who can best endure

as each meets his limits he wheels off toward the flat grey sky leaving the waters still once more

until the cardinal arrives to gaze at his reflection and shudders at the thought of his own red elegance bathed by such waters choosing instead the soft mist of rain which has just begun
Summer Arrives Suddenly

a hot blast of southern air to clear away
  the lingering chill of spring riding this first steamy day memories shimmer like heat swaying above the highway

I remember long afternoons cycling passes in the Rockies-- Kicking Horse, Crow's Nest, and Sunwapta-- all winding their way through rock unyielding

I recall too
  the dry, choking heat of Saskatchewan prairies leaving me gasping
  at the side of the road

sweeping past groves of purple lilacs
  I think of those that soften the sharp rocks of the Kawarthas my mind drifts

  to the bays of Nova Scotia-- Chester, Mahone and Lunenburg-- with houses of bright blue and yellow tucked in tight against the shore but how to explain this final memory

  of a rambling farmhouse with a porch clear round where I sit in the shade a glass of lemonade to my lips

a tire swing dangles from the willow in the yard and I can feel the roughness of the rope in my hands, the ache of my legs
  as I move myself skyward yet this is a place I have never been a place that exists in a summer only dreamt of,
and sitting content
beneath the tree
is the I who I wish to be Close

summer presses down on us with the weightiness of wool blankets until finally it is too much even to wave good-bye

we move slowly through the hours the heat stealing our breath anger licking at the edges of nerves stretched thin downtown the pavement simmers horns are blown at the slightest infraction sunburnt faces stare toward a sky refusing to open its moist, green arms as the day wraps me in its smothering embrace I seek relief in words spoken-- frosted, chilled, icy, frozen flurries, blizzard, blinding snowstorm words to treasure like small bits of ice sliding them mercifully down my red-hot throat as the world waits for a cool glass of rain October Morning

fall-tipped leaves fast orange and red sun seeping through making green seem golden

in the quiet dawn beneath the stillness of sky world is early-apple crisp sharp in the mouth

morning, now, cut out of night-time coolness clearer, more certain than notes first forming what holds me here (staring long through the window) is the promise of absence-- fall's single embrace

Snow Fell

the day I left
and the temperature too forcing me to wear
layer upon layer while trying to believe that somewhere it was warmer landing in Honolulu at three in the morning how absurd I felt assembling my bike while other passengers departed into a dreamscape

of ghostly orange streetlights and shadowy palm trees

the world seemed even less real the next morning as I cycled out of the city’s bright chaos and began to climb
through black volcanic hills, tracing the paths of ancient eruptions reaching Hawaii’s northern tip I placed my tent beside the blue-green edge of ocean and watched as the sun dropped fire from the sky in the morning I rode across pineapple plantations where the thick sweet air left me drowsy and dreaming of snow falling half a world away Awry

warm rain in winter  melts white into grey-- the world's tipped on its side and with it I slide
into a place so unfamiliar suddenly, these are not my hands this is not my voice-- even the simplest gesture seems foreign in a world gone

  awry
April Brings Snow

I once despaired over rainfall in winter how it tilted my world making everything foreign

now April brings snow and despair grows greener-- winding round my limbs stopping up my mouth

suddenly this whiteness has always been and (doubtful of reports)
will always be

II

where to place the truth of a rainbow in winter? snow storms in springtime muffling the earth?

meaning's stance seems slight shifting always to fit experience-- first this is spring, then this then this and this and this still, I go on naming, writing the world

again and again
in small, black script
Sweet Spot

I try to explain how it feels to hit the ball just so-- low to high with perfect topspin making contact in the racquet's very centre you deliver a look of incomprehension so I describe the sensation of the basketball rolling perfectly off my fingertips, the clean swoosh of the ball dropping silently through the net

I tell of carving my skis through fresh fallen snow while weaving a trail down the side of the mountain of rollerblading along smooth dark pavement, sweeping back and forth as the wheels heat up beneath me finally I speak of that moment on the bike when stretched out over the bars my legs spinning with fury suddenly I am pure motion glancing at your face I see my language is foreign and even my hand gestures do little to convince you not wishing to admit defeat, I switch gears before making a final attempt-- think of the moment, I tell you, when after hours of struggling to complete a poem you have left it unfinished and are busy with something else-- washing the dishes, tucking your children into bed-- and suddenly the right word slips into place pulling the rest of the poem snuggly around itself I watch as a smile

spreads slowly across your face like arms at the finish line spreading wide in celebration Cycling at Dawn

through the finest mist I saw sheep weaving trails of silver across a hillside glimmering with dew

returning later to a trampled field I found sheep standing idle beneath a glaring sun
Place

I sit writing in the coolness of my room
the evening light filtered through broad leaves of maple, air heavy with the scent
of lilacs

a vase of tulips stands before me-- a whisper of purple, a red-orange burst
of flame

here in the silence I have answered
your question regarding my vision
of a perfect place
This I See

"Man is a genius when he is dreaming"

-Akira Kurosawa

she seems to glide
past my window, a young Oriental woman
cycling with her daughter behind her

the sky is the dark green of afternoon thunderstorms though the rain has eased to a gentle drizzle through which wonderously
the sun is shining

the little girl releases a flower from her hand then reaches back laughing as pink petals float toward the ground

this I see
in a single frame and would believe it
a moment in Kurosawa's Dreams but for the petals
lying still on darkened pavement Feline

you request and accept love shamelessly and for that I much admire you

your lack of discernment allows you to go limp in the arms of complete strangers

after all your demands are few-- warm hands, a soft voice and a comfortable lap
to sleep in watching you sprawling contentedly in the lap of another I see how little my absence

might mean

and though I appreciate your gift for finding love at every turn I yearn just a little for loyalty
At Two

years of age
your world circles about you immense and I watch as you maneuver your way through with careful steps

at the park
the fountain requires steady balance
and still there are tears as dark drops of water dampen your favourite sweater sitting high on my shoulders as we explore the trails you are so quiet

I worry
until your sister tells me (with the assurance of one as old as four) that you’re fine, you’re smiling

later, a treat of hot chocolate and cookies demands your full attention as you raise your drink slowly toward you (your whole face disappearing into your mug)

across the table
your sister masters the art of talking over tea and you stare with blue-eyed wonder at her magic act of balance while I sit mesmerized by your delicate gestures almost aching at the sight of such small hands Something in You

that invites the unhinging of the heart
the opening—however trembling—into that fragile, sheltered place you reach in gently though with a firmness of will knowing the heart must bear examination

to the mind tightly bound you offer release
dissolving its ties with slowly chanted spells in the absence of wands I believe no less in your magic,

in the transformation that occurs as you conjure a sudden, new world the sorcery, granted, is my perception only still, it may charm you to know

in the world of another you have been cast
in the role of magician
Wed

for Maria and Stu

your wedding day brings rain-- summer green and warm falling from grey sky

ladies in blue
we stand round you-- Maid Marion in white with dark hair flowing

you have dreamt of this moment since your father first spoke of castles and kingdoms in faraway places

now he hovers about hands in his pockets as if considering what remains once he gives you away

at the Chateau Laurier people pause to watch
talking quietly
of la belle mariee

I lift my dress as I sweep past for I too am drawn into your tale--
a lady in waiting speaking demurely and how startled I am by my own heart swooning at sad strains of violin and vows softly spoken Moment

sitting beside you
this afternoon
how I wanted to lean towards and kiss you—
even to brush my fingertips lightly across your wrist

I am glad now that I did not that instead
the moment remains suspended in my mind unencumbered by the real North

you are on my mind again
funny thing is I can't quite remember when you weren't or what the world was like before your name held meaning when it was merely sound vibrating in the ear simply letters
clustered on the page

like a compass
I am drawn towards your north
and you linger
in my thoughts
like final notes sounding yet I cannot place you into words-- but for your name
which leaves me
trembling
The Garden

_for Gram_

because you cannot visit the garden I wish to bring it to you though I must tell you the sun has been absent and the garden I give is full of the dark rains of spring--

the foggy mornings and grey afternoons
when day fades into night with little distinction but for all that there is beauty

in the redness
of the Japanese maple,
in the purple crocus blossoming amongst the silver-green tapestry of vine

beauty too
in the graceful stems of Spanish bluebells,
and in the first bold daffodils trumpeting their own return sitting at the window I watch an elderly neighbour consider the garden

then raise her head
and gesture to me--
these are beautiful, she mouths, pointing to the violets I nod and smile
for her hands clasped in joy
remind me so much of you and just for a moment you are here
gazing at this mist-filled garden Gram

born in Wapella, Saskatchewan in 1905
my grandmother tells of living through terrible droughts and long winters
when the greatest treat was the sweetness
of an apple

she tells too
of leaving school at thirteen to become mother to four when their own mother died

but what she learned
she never let go
and eighty years later
she can still recite
poems memorized
in a one-room schoolhouse-- The day is done, and the darkness Falls from the wings of Night long after my gram

moved eastward
in a nurse’s uniform, I visited Wapella somehow hoping to see her galloping past
on her father’s horse

instead I found only tired storefronts
bleached and peeling
in the August heat and empty buildings with shattered windows where luck ran out long ago
having promised to send a postcard I sat staring at the picture of a brightly painted barn wondering how much to tell her

I considered the grain elevators lording over the town and the beautiful creek running just behind main street then realizing the postmark would conjure a place undisturbed by a changing world I spoke only of the hot prairie sun

and of the endless land that left my eyes aching

for it was this sun and land that marked her beginning that lay deep in memory like the touch of her mother's hand
Childhood Stories

I laugh as I tell these stories for perhaps the hundredth time then suddenly
there I am staring at myself as a child

I want to weep for this girl who tumbles gracelessly from the monkey bars
who plays the pugilist
and will not follow the rules

I want to lift her up
in my arms
and twirl her into a bright blur
    of laughter

and I want more than anything
to have her carry this laughter-- a talisman clutched tightly in her own small fist
An Apology

_for Brian_

I'm sorry I couldn't see that taking your money meant something other than buying candy at the store that you were left feeling betrayed
again and again
by a sister you barely knew it was only ever currency for what I desired-- the fiery spice of cinnamon hearts burning the edges of my tongue the pale pink candy bracelets cutting deep into my wrist and whether it helps at all to hear this truth (that there was no malice you were absent from the act) I cannot say but will tell you instead of the moment

some years later when mother told me how hurt you'd been
by me and I felt for the first time the hot flush of shame
the sharpness of sorrow for losses I could not repay Tied

_for Sarah_

after sharing a room with you for years, singing you to sleep
with ragged bits of song

all the sorry schemes I dragged you into,
dividing the blame whenever we were caught

endless hours of play in makeshift tents-- our own secret world beneath the darkness of blankets the summer trips to Nova Scotia in the back of the Volvo, watching lines and poles go looping past

        how far apart we grew-- the ties between us stretched so thin they vanished
in the clutter of our lives only now do we move in a similar orbit

circling, once more,
the same bright sun

        again I am drawn by the sound of your voice, feeling the pull
through the length of the wire

63
as our words weave together like the tight braids of rug we once wrapped round us forming small, blue cocoons Small Details

having written the word mother
I falter
since who you are
is woven so intricately

into my own tapestry
it seems impossible
to examine you without unraveling
the threads of myself

like a painting viewed closely you become all colour
and small details

bright orange duck boots covered in dirt from hours spent
perfecting your garden

Marks and Spencers
corduroys
in an array of earthy tones sturdy and comfortable for your hikes with the ladies

your flesh-coloured knee brace
a reminder of the car accident long before I was born

which left
a scar
so close to your temple you will never forget how death brushed past
there are details too which speak of other worlds ventured-- the elegant jewelry
of your travels

the silver rings from the Blue men of Mauritania
the delicate gold earrings transported from Crete

as a traveler
you carry one small bag and a knowledge of the country gathered from books during the long, cold winters

your travel journals are concise,
information-bound
like the postcards written in your small, neat script from Spain you send a picture of a tall, majestic woman draped in black and gold, her arms arching gracefully as she plays the castanets

I read your message
searching for you just as I gaze at the photographs of you as a child

wondering about the little girl whose hair is tightly woven in beautiful French braids I recall, finally,
a memory of long ago
one hot afternoon at the cottage
when you disappeared

and we searched everywhere finding you reading in the back of the car-- I realized then you existed

apart from us with your own world to contemplate
to nurture and explore
Regarding My Father

he is taking a trip (six weeks in Greece)
and will be on foot
as much as possible

the hills of Guelph
have become his training ground, striding towards the church perched high above the city he climbs dreaming of weightlessness

but for the necessities filling his pack--

a Goretex rainsuit (on average rain falls from the skies seven to nine days in the cruelest month)

a flashlight (top of the line Mountain Equipment
which will illuminate

entire monastic frescoes yet weighs less than the rain that will sit upon his brow)

extra layers to shield against the cold as Athens' sun drops out of the sky--

the pack has been trimmed down
to nineteen pounds
my father reports victoriously lifting it with ease from the bathroom scales, he too has become a project for reduction

with his hair shaved
to military length
leaving him, at turns,
boyish and severe

before he leaves
he shows me
his black book containing not names of women

he has known and loved but the Greece
he has read
and recorded note by note he guides me through the world he is about to explore and turning to the final page

reveals in triumph
his lengthy index-- itsel a poem of carefully measured lines in his first call home, with words that hesitate in the spaces of the wire, he tells us he has fallen while hiking to a ruin-- Icarus brought earthward the swelling of his knee revealing his weightiness yet he has remained on schedule

hiking the whole day
on fragile limb

denying the ground beneath his feet
the ache of his pack between the sharpened blades of shoulder-- a wingless figure carved away to self

guided by hieroglyphics of his own design Vita Auctoris

Robin Todd was born in Kitchener, Ontario in 1964. She obtained her Honours B.A. in English from the University of Western Ontario in 1988, followed by her M.A. in Literature from Dalhousie University in 1989, and her B.Ed. from the University of Ottawa in 1991. After teaching English at Lakefield College School for four years, she took a year's leave to complete her M.A. in Creative Writing at the University of Windsor. She has returned to Lakefield's English Department where she has added Creative Writing to her teaching duties.